CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

CONTAINING

THE PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES

OF THE

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

VOLUME XX.

WASHINGTON:
GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.
1889.

AUTHENTICATED
U.S. GOVERNMENT
INFORMATION
GPO

VOLUME XX, PART I.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

FIFTIETH CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 3, 1888.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the second session of the Fiftieth Congress convened this day.

The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber in the Capitol at Washington City.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas) took the chair, and called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Our Father, in this quiet moment we lift our hearts to Thee in thankfulness for the kind providence that has kept us and that brings us again together in health and in strength. Breathe into our hearts the spirit of devotion, that we may come humbly and obediently and trustingly before Thee as Thy servants, seeking Thy guidance and Thy help as we enter upon the new and responsible duties before us.

For Thy continued goodness to us in our persons and in our families, we bless Thee. For the rich blessings of Thy providence in our abundant harvests and for Thy continued goodness upon all the varied and growing industries of this land, we render thanks to Thee.

We would not be unmindful, O God, of Thy mercies toward us as a people, in filling our hearts with faith in Thee, and making us a law-abiding and a God-fearing people. Continue Thy presence with us.

Bless the President of the United States and those associated with him in authority. Teach our Senators wisdom. Upon the House of Representatives pour out Thy spirit. May our judges decree righteous judgments. And grant that all the people of this land, O God, may walk in Thy fear and in Thy love, that our nation may be a righteous nation and that this may be Emmanuel's land.

Remember, we pray Thee, Thy servant the President-elect. Have him in Thy holy keeping. Endue him with wisdom, and prepare him for the responsible duties about devolving upon him. And so order all things, O God, for this nation, which Thou hast so abundantly blessed during all these years, that we may be a united and a God-fearing people.

Guide these, Thy servants, to-day. Have them in Thy holy keeping. Help us so to keep consciences void of offense toward God and toward men that the peace of God which passeth all understanding may keep our hearts and minds. We ask it in the name of Him who hath taught us to pray: Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done upon earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our sins as we forgive those who sin against us. Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first Monday in December being the day appointed by the Constitution for the annual assembling of Congress, the Senate is now in session and will come to order.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The following Senators were present: From the State of—Alabama—James L. Pugh.
Arkansas—James H. Berry and James K. Jones.
Colorado—Henry M. Teller.
Connecticut—Joseph R. Hawley and Orville H. Platt.
Delaware—George Gray and Eli Saulsbury.
Florida—Wilkinson Call and Samuel Pasco.
Illinois—Shelby M. Cullom.
Indiana—David Turpie.
Iowa—William B. Allison.
Kansas—John J. Ingalls and Preston B. Plumb.
Kentucky—Joseph C. S. Blackburn.
Louisiana—James B. Eustis and Randall L. Gibson.
Maine—William P. Frye and Eugene Hale.
Maryland—Arthur P. Gorman.
Massachusetts—Henry L. Dawes and George F. Hoar.
Michigan—Thomas W. Palmer and Francis B. Stockbridge.
Mississippi—Edward C. Walthall.
Missouri—Francis M. Cockrell and George G. Vest.
Nebraska—Charles F. Manderson and Algernon S. Paddock.
Nevada—William M. Stewart.
New Hampshire—Henry W. Blair and William E. Chandler.
New Jersey—Rufus Blodgett and John R. McPherson.
North Carolina—Matt W. Ransom and Zebulon B. Vance.
Ohio—Henry B. Payne and John Sherman.
Oregon—Joseph N. Dolph and John H. Mitchell.
Pennsylvania—James Donald Cameron.
Rhode Island—Nelson W. Aldrich.
South Carolina—Matthew C. Butler.
Tennessee—William B. Bate and Isham G. Harris.
Texas—Richard Coke.
Vermont—George F. Edmunds and Justin S. Morrill.
West Virginia—Charles J. Faulkner.
Wisconsin—Philetus Sawyer and John C. Spooner.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MORRILL and Mr. SAULSBURY were appointed.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock, meridian, until otherwise ordered.

RECESSES.

Mr. SHERMAN (at 12 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate take a recess for half an hour. I understand the committees appointed on the part of the two Houses to wait upon the President have gone to discharge that duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered; and the Senate takes a recess for thirty minutes.

At the expiration of the recess (at 1 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate take a further recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. JOHN B. CLARK, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared, and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

I am further directed to inform the Senate that the House has passed a resolution that a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

I am also directed to announce that the House has appointed Mr. HOLMAN of Indiana, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania the committee on the part of the House.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MORRILL and Mr. SAULSBURY, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. MORRILL said: Mr. President, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses of Congress had assembled and were ready to receive any communication he had to make have performed that service and have been informed by the President that he will communicate in writing immediately.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

At 1 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m., Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate (Mr. ANSON G. MCCOOK) read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

As you assemble for the discharge of the duties you have assumed as the representatives of a free and generous people, your meeting is marked by an interesting and impressive incident. With the expiration of the present session of the Congress the first century of our constitutional existence as a nation will be completed.

Our survival for one hundred years is not sufficient to assure us that we no longer have dangers to fear in the maintenance, with all its promised blessings, of a government founded upon the freedom of the people. The time rather admonishes us to soberly inquire whether in the past we have always closely kept in the course of safety, and whether we have before us a way plain and clear which leads to happiness and perpetuity.

When the experiment of our Government was undertaken, the chart adopted for our guidance was the Constitution. Departure from the lines there laid down is failure. It is only by a strict adherence to the direction they indicate and by restraint within the limitations they fix that we can furnish proof to the world of the fitness of the American people for self-government.

The equal and exact justice of which we boast as the underlying principle of our institutions should not be confined to the relations of our citizens to each other. The Government itself is under bond to the American people, that in the exercise of its functions and powers it will deal with the body of our citizens in a manner scrupulously honest and fair and absolutely just. It has agreed that American citizenship shall be the only credential necessary to justify the claim of equality before the law, and that no condition in life shall give rise to discrimination in the treatment of the people by their Government.

The citizen of our Republic in its early days rigidly insisted upon full compliance with the letter of this bond, and saw stretching out before him a clear field for individual endeavor. His tribute to the support of his Government was measured by the cost of its economical maintenance, and he was secure in the enjoyment of the remaining recompense of his steady and contented toil. In those days the frugality of the people was stamped upon their Government, and was enforced by the free, thoughtful, and intelligent suffrage of the citizen. Combinations, monopolies, and aggregations of capital were either avoided or sternly regulated and restrained. The pomp and glitter of governments less free offered no temptation and presented no delusion to the plain people who, side by side, in friendly competition wrought for the ennoblement and dignity of man, for the solution of the problem of free government, and for the achievement of the grand destiny awaiting the land which God had given them.

A century has passed. Our cities are the abiding places of wealth and luxury; our manufactories yield fortunes never dreamed of by the fathers of the Republic; our business men are madly striving in the race for riches, and immense aggregations of capital outrun the imagination in the magnitude of their undertakings.

We view with pride and satisfaction this bright picture of our country's growth and prosperity, while only a closer scrutiny develops a somber shading. Upon more careful inspection we find the wealth and luxury of our cities mingled with poverty and wretchedness and unremunerative toil. A crowded and constantly increasing urban population suggests the impoverishment of rural sections, and discontent with agricultural pursuits. The farmer's son, not satisfied with his father's simple and laborious life, joins the eager chase for easily acquired wealth.

We discover that the fortunes realized by our manufacturers are no longer solely the reward of sturdy industry and enlightened foresight, but that they result from the discriminating favor of the Government, and are largely built upon undue exactions from the masses of our people. The gulf between employers and the employed is constantly widening and classes are rapidly forming, one comprising the very rich and powerful, while in another are found the toiling poor.

As we view the achievements of aggregated capital, we discover the existence of trusts, combinations, and monopolies, while the citizen is struggling far in the rear or is trampled to death beneath an iron heel. Corporations, which should be the carefully restrained creatures of the law and the servants of the people, are fast becoming the people's masters.

Still congratulating ourselves upon the wealth and prosperity of our country, and complacently contemplating every incident of change inseparable from these conditions, it is our duty as patriotic citizens to inquire, at the present stage of our progress, how the bond of the Government made with the people has been kept and performed.

Instead of limiting the tribute drawn from our citizens to the necessities of its economical administration, the Government persists in exacting, from the substance of the people, millions which unapplied and useless lie dormant in its Treasury. This flagrant injustice and this breach of faith and obligation add to extortion the danger attending the diversion of the currency of the country from the legitimate channels of business.

Under the same laws by which these results are produced, the Government permits many millions more to be added to the cost of the living of our people and to be taken from our consumers, which unreasonably swell the profits of a small but powerful minority.

The people must still be taxed for the support of the Government under the operation of tariff laws. But to the extent that the mass of our citizens are inordinately burdened beyond any useful public purpose, and for the benefit of a favored few, the Government, under pretext of an exercise of its taxing power, enters gratuitously into partnership with these favorites, to their advantage and to the injury of a vast majority of our people.

This is not equality before the law.

The existing situation is injurious to the health of our entire body-politic. It stifles, in those for whose benefit it is permitted, all patriotic love of country, and substitutes in its place selfish greed and grasping avarice. Devotion to American citizenship for its own sake and for what it should accomplish as a motive to our nation's advancement and the happiness of all our people, is displaced by the assumption that the Government, instead of being the embodiment of equality, is but an instrumentality through which especial and individual advantages are to be gained.

The arrogance of this assumption is unconcealed. It appears in the sordid disregard of all but personal interests, in the refusal to abate for the benefit of others one iota of selfish advantage, and in combinations to perpetuate such advantages through efforts to control legislation and improperly influence the suffrages of the people.

The grievances of those not included within the circle of these beneficiaries, when fully realized, will surely arouse irritation and discontent. Our farmers, long-suffering and patient, struggling in the race of life with the hardest and most unremitting toil, will not fail to see, in spite of misrepresentations and misleading fallacies, that they are obliged to accept such prices for their products as are fixed in foreign markets where they compete with the farmers of the world; that their lands are declining in value while their debts increase; and that without compensating favor they are forced by the action of the Government to pay, for the benefit of others, such enhanced prices for the things they need, that the scanty returns of their labor fail to furnish their support or leave no margin for accumulation.

Our workingmen, enfranchised from all delusions and no longer frightened by the cry that their wages are endangered by a just revision of our tariff laws, will reasonably demand through such revision steadier employment, cheaper means of living in their homes, freedom for themselves and their children from the doom of perpetual servitude, and an open door to their advancement beyond the limits of a laboring class. Others of our citizens whose comforts and expenditures are measured by moderate salaries and fixed incomes, will insist upon the fairness and justice of cheapening the cost of necessaries for themselves and their families.

When to the selfishness of the beneficiaries of unjust discrimination under our laws there shall be added the discontent of those who suffer from such discrimination, we will realize the fact that the beneficent purposes of our Government, dependent upon the patriotism and contentment of our people, are endangered.

Communism is a hateful thing, and a menace to peace and organized government. But the communism of combined wealth and capital, the outgrowth of overweening cupidity and selfishness, which insidiously undermines the justice and integrity of free institutions, is not less dangerous than the communism of oppressed poverty and toil which, exasperated by injustice and discontent, attacks with wild disorder the citadel of rule.

He mocks the people who proposes that the Government shall protect the rich and that they in turn will care for the laboring poor. Any intermediary between the people and their Government, or the least delegation of the care and protection the Government owes to the humblest citizen in the land, makes the boast of free institutions a glittering delusion and the pretended boon of American citizenship a shameless imposition.

A just and sensible revision of our tariff laws should be made for the relief of those of our countrymen who suffer under present conditions. Such a revision should receive the support of all who love that justice and equality due to American citizenship, of all who realize that in this justice and equality our Government finds its strength and its power to protect the citizen and his property, of all who believe that the contented competence and comfort of many accord better with the spirit of our institutions than colossal fortunes unfairly gathered in the hands of a few, of all who appreciate that the forbearance and fraternity among our people, which recognize the value of every American interest, are the surest guaranty of our national progress, and of all who desire to see the products of American skill and ingenuity in every market of the world with a resulting restoration of American commerce.

The necessity of the reduction of our revenue is so apparent as to be generally conceded. But the means by which this end shall be accomplished and the sum of direct benefit which shall result to our citizens present a controversy of the utmost importance. There should be no scheme accepted as satisfactory by which the burdens of the people are only apparently removed. Extravagant appropriations of public money, with all their demoralizing consequences, should not be tolerated, either as a means of relieving the Treasury of its present surplus or as furnishing pretext for resisting a proper reduction in tariff rates. Existing evils and injustice should be honestly recognized, boldly met, and effectively remedied. There should be no cessation of the struggle until a plan is perfected, fair and conservative toward existing industries, but which will reduce the cost to consumers of the necessaries of life, while it provides for our manufacturers the advantage of freer raw materials and permits no injury to the interests of American labor.

The cause for which the battle is waged is comprised within lines clearly and distinctly defined. It should never be compromised. It is the people's cause.

It can not be denied that the selfish and private interests which are so persistently heard, when efforts are made to deal in a just and comprehensive manner with our tariff laws, are related to, if they are not responsible for, the sentiment largely prevailing among the people that the General Government is the fountain of individual and private aid; that it may be expected to relieve with paternal care the distress of citizens and communities, and that from the fullness of its Treasury it should, upon the slightest possible pretext of promoting the general good, apply public funds to the benefit of localities and individuals. Nor can it be denied that there is a growing assumption that, as against the Government and in favor of private claims and interests, the usual rules and limitations of business principles and just dealing should be waived.

These ideas have been unhappily much encouraged by legislative acquiescence. Relief from contracts made with the Government is too easily accorded in favor of the citizen; the failure to support claims against the Government by proof is often supplied by no better consideration than the wealth of the Government and the poverty of the claimant; gratuities in the form of pensions are granted upon no other real ground than the needy condition of the applicant, or for reasons less valid; and large sums are expended for public buildings and other improvements upon representations scarcely claimed to be related to public needs and necessities.

The extent to which the consideration of such matters subordinates and postpones action upon subjects of great public importance, but involving no special, private, or partisan interest, should arrest attention and lead to reformation.

A few of the numerous illustrations of this condition may be stated.

The crowded condition of the calendar of the Supreme Court, and the delay to suitors and denial of justice resulting therefrom, have been strongly urged upon the attention of the Congress, with a plan for the relief of the situation approved by those well able to judge of its merits. While this subject remains without effective consideration many laws have been passed providing for the holding of terms of inferior courts at places to suit the convenience of localities or to lay the foundation of an application for the erection of a new public building.

Repeated recommendations have been submitted for the amendment and change of the laws relating to our public lands so that their spoliation and diversion to other uses than as homes for honest settlers might be prevented. While a measure to meet this conceded necessity of reform remains awaiting the action of the Congress many claims to the public lands and applications for their donation in favor of States and individuals have been allowed.

A plan in aid of Indian management, recommended by those well informed, as containing valuable features in furtherance of the solution of the Indian problem, has thus far failed of legislative sanction, while grants of doubtful expediency to railroad corporations, permitting them to pass through Indian reservations, have greatly multiplied.

The propriety and necessity of the erection of one or more prisons for the confinement of United States convicts, and a post-office building in the national capital, are not disputed. But these needs yet remain unanswered, while scores of public buildings have been erected where their necessity for public purposes is not apparent.

A revision of our pension laws could easily be made, which would rest upon just principles and provide for every worthy applicant. But while our general pension laws remain confused and imperfect, hundreds of private pension laws are annually passed, which are the sources of unjust discrimination and popular demoralization.

Appropriation bills for the support of the Government are defaced by items and provisions to meet private ends, and it is freely asserted by responsible and experienced parties that a bill appropriating money for public internal improvement would fail to meet with favor, unless it contained items more for local and private advantage than for public benefit.

These statements can be much emphasized by an ascertainment of the proportion of Federal legislation, which either bears upon its face its private character, or which, upon examination, develops such a motive power.

And yet the people wait and expect from their chosen representatives such patriotic action as will advance the welfare of the entire country; and this expectation can only be answered by the performance of public duty with unselfish purpose. Our mission among the nations of the earth, and our success in accomplishing the work God has given the American people to do, require of those intrusted with the making and execution of our laws perfect devotion, above all other things, to the public good.

This devotion will lead us to strongly resist all impatience of constitutional limitations of Federal power, and to persistently check the increasing tendency to extend the scope of Federal legislation into the domain of State and local jurisdiction, upon the plea of subserving the public welfare. The preservation of the partitions between proper subjects of Federal and local care and regulation is of such importance under the Constitution, which is the law of our very existence, that no consideration of expediency or sentiment should tempt us to enter upon doubtful ground. We have undertaken to discover and proclaim the richest blessings of a free Government, with the Constitution as our guide. Let us follow the way it points out. It will not mislead us. And surely no one who has taken upon himself the solemn obligation to support and preserve the Constitution can find justification or solace for disloyalty in the excuse that he wandered and disobeyed in search of a better way to reach the public welfare than the Constitution offers.

What has been said is deemed not inappropriate at a time when, from a century's height, we view the way already trod by the American people, and attempt to discover their future path.

The seventh President of the United States—the soldier and statesman, and at all times the firm and brave friend of the people—in vindication of his course as the protector of popular rights and the champion of true American citizenship, declared:

The ambition which leads me on is an anxious desire and a fixed determination to restore to the people, unimpaired, the sacred trust they have confided to my charge; to heal the wounds of the Constitution and to preserve it from further violation; to persuade my countrymen, so far as I may, that it is not in a splendid government supported by powerful monopolies and aristocratical establishments that they will find happiness, or their liberties protection, but in a plain system, void of pomp—protecting all and granting favors to none—dispensing its blessings like the dews of heaven, unseen and unfelt save in the freshness and beauty they contribute to produce. It is such a government that the genius of our people requires—such an one only under which our States may remain, for ages to come, united, prosperous, and free.

In pursuance of a constitutional provision requiring the President, from time to time, to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, I have the satisfaction to announce that the close of the year finds the United States in the enjoyment of domestic tranquillity and at peace with all the nations.

Since my last annual message our foreign relations have been strengthened and improved by performance of international good offices and by new and renewed treaties of amity, commerce, and reciprocal extradition of criminals.

Those international questions which still await settlement are all reasonably within the domain of amicable negotiation, and there is no existing subject of dispute between the United States and any foreign power that is not susceptible of satisfactory adjustment by frank diplomatic treatment.

The questions between Great Britain and the United States relating to the rights of American fishermen, under treaty and international comity, in the territorial waters of Canada and Newfoundland, I regret to say are not yet satisfactorily adjusted.

These matters were fully treated in my message to the Senate of February 20, 1888, together with which a convention, concluded under my authority with Her Majesty's Government on the 15th of February last, for the removal of all causes of misunderstanding, was submitted by me for the approval of the Senate.

This treaty having been rejected by the Senate, I transmitted a message to the Congress, on the 23d of August last, reviewing the transactions and submitting for consideration certain recommendations for legislation concerning the important questions involved.

Afterwards, on the 12th of September, in response to a resolution of the Senate, I again communicated fully all the information in my possession as to the action of the Government of Canada affecting the commercial relations between the Dominion and the United States, including the treatment of American fishing vessels in the ports and waters of British North America.

These communications have all been published, and therefore opened to the knowledge of both Houses of Congress, although two were addressed to the Senate alone.

Comment upon or repetition of their contents would be superfluous, and I am not aware that anything has since occurred which should be added to the facts therein stated. Therefore, I merely repeat, as applicable to the present time, the statement which will be found in my message to the Senate of September 12th last:

That since March 3, 1887, no case has been reported to the Department of State wherein complaint has been made of unfriendly or unlawful treatment of American fishing vessels on the part of the Canadian authorities in which reparation was not promptly and satisfactorily obtained by the United States consul-general at Halifax.

Having essayed, in the discharge of my duty, to procure by negotiation the settlement of a long-standing cause of dispute, and to remove a constant menace to the good relations of the two countries, and continuing to be of opinion that the treaty of February last, which failed to receive the approval of the Senate, did supply "a satisfactory, practical, and final adjustment upon a basis honorable and just to both parties of the difficult and vexed question to which it related," and having subsequently and unavailingly recommended other legislation to Congress which I hoped would suffice to meet the exigency created by the rejection of the treaty, I now again invoke the earnest and immediate attention of the Congress to the condition of this important question, as it now stands before them and the country, and for the settlement of which I am deeply solicitous.

Near the close of the month of October last, occurrences of a deeply regrettable nature were brought to my knowledge, which made it my painful but imperative duty to obtain, with as little delay as possible, a new personal channel of diplomatic intercourse in this country with the Government of Great Britain.

The correspondence in relation to this incident will in due course be laid before you, and will disclose the unpardonable conduct of the official referred to in his interference by advice and counsel with the suffrages of American citizens in the very crisis of the Presidential election then near at hand, and also in his subsequent public declarations to justify his action, superadding impugnment of the Executive and Senate of the United States, in connection with important questions now pending in controversy between the two Governments.

The offense thus committed was most grave, involving disastrous possibilities to the good relations of the United States and Great Britain, constituting a gross breach of diplomatic privilege and an invasion of the purely domestic affairs and essential sovereignty of the Government to which the envoy was accredited.

Having first fulfilled the just demands of international comity by affording full opportunity for Her Majesty's Government to act in relief of the situation, I considered prolongation of discussion to be unwarranted and thereupon declined to further recognize the diplomatic character of the person, whose continuance in such function would destroy that mutual confidence which is essential to the good understanding of the two Governments, and was inconsistent with the welfare and self-respect of the Government of the United States.

The usual interchange of communication has since continued through Her Majesty's legation in this city.

My endeavors to establish by international co-operation measures for the prevention of the extermination of fur-seals in Bering Sea have not been relaxed, and I have hopes of being enabled shortly to submit an effective and satisfactory conventional projet with the maritime powers for the approval of the Senate.

The coastal boundary between our Alaskan possessions and British Columbia, I regret to say, has not received the attention demanded by its importance, and which on several occasions heretofore I have had the honor to recommend to the Congress.

The admitted impracticability, if not impossibility, of making an accurate and precise survey and demarkation of the boundary line, as it is recited in the treaty with Russia under which Alaska was ceded to the United States, renders it absolutely requisite, for the prevention of international jurisdictional complications, that adequate appropriation for a reconnaissance and survey to obtain proper knowledge of the locality and the geographical features of the boundary should be authorized by Congress with as little delay as possible.

Knowledge to be only thus obtained is an essential prerequisite for negotiation for ascertaining a common boundary, or as preliminary to any other mode of settlement.

It is much to be desired that some agreement should be reached with Her Majesty's Government by which the damages to life and property on the Great Lakes may be alleviated by removing or humanely regulating the obstacles to reciprocal assistance to wrecked or stranded vessels.

The act of June 19, 1878, which offers to Canadian vessels free access to our inland waters in aid of wrecked or disabled vessels, has not yet become effective through concurrent action by Canada.

The due protection of our citizens of French origin or descent, from claim of military service in the event of their returning to or visiting France, has called forth correspondence which was laid before you at the last session.

In the absence of conventional agreement as to naturalization, which is greatly to be desired, this Government sees no occasion to recede from the sound position it has maintained not only with regard to France but as to all countries with which the United States have not concluded special treaties.

Twice within the last year has the imperial household of Germany been visited by death; and I have hastened to express the sorrow of this people, and their appreciation of the lofty character of the late aged Emperor William, and their sympathy with the heroism under suffering of his son, the late Emperor Frederick.

I renew my recommendation of two years ago for the passage of a bill for the refunding to certain German steam-ship lines of the interest upon tonnage dues illegally exacted.

On the 12th of April last I laid before the House of Representatives full information respecting our interests in Samoa; and in the subsequent correspondence on the same subject, which will be laid before you in due course, the history of events in those islands will be found.

In a message accompanying my approval, on the 1st day of October last, of a bill for the exclusion of Chinese laborers, I laid before Congress full information and all correspondence touching the negotiation of the treaty with China, concluded at this capital on the 12th day of March, 1888, and which, having been confirmed by the Senate with certain amendments, was rejected by the Chinese Government. This message contained a recommendation that a sum of money be appropriated as compensation to Chinese subjects who had suffered injuries at the hands of lawless men within our jurisdiction. Such appropriation having been duly made, the fund awaits reception by the Chinese Government.

It is sincerely hoped that by the cessation of the influx of this class of Chinese subjects, in accordance with the expressed wish of both Governments, a cause of unkind feeling has been permanently removed.

On the 9th of August, 1887, notification was given by the Japanese minister at this capital of the adjournment of the conference for the revision of the treaties of Japan with foreign powers, owing to the objection of his Government to the provision in the draft jurisdictional convention which required the submission of the criminal code of the Empire to the powers in advance of its becoming operative. This notification was, however, accompanied with an assurance of Japan's intention to continue the work of revision.

Notwithstanding this temporary interruption of negotiations it is hoped that improvements may soon be secured in the jurisdictional system as respects foreigners in Japan, and relief afforded to that country from the present undue and oppressive foreign control in matters of commerce.

I earnestly recommend that relief be provided for the injuries accidentally caused to Japanese subjects in the Island Ikisima by the target practice of one of our vessels.

A diplomatic mission from Corea has been received, and the formal intercourse between the two countries contemplated by the treaty of 1882 is now established.

Legislative provision is hereby recommended to organize and equip consular courts in Corea.

Persia has established diplomatic representation at this capital and has evinced very great interest in the enterprise and achievements of our citizens. I am, therefore, hopeful that beneficial commercial relations between the two countries may be brought about.

I announce with sincere regret that Hayti has again become the theater of insurrection, disorder, and bloodshed. The titular government of President Saloman has been forcibly overthrown and he driven out of the country to France, where he has since died.

The tenure of power has been so unstable amid the war of factions that has ensued since the expulsion of President Saloman that no government constituted by the will of the Haytian people has been recognized as administering responsibly the affairs of that country. Our representative has been instructed to abstain from interference between the warring factions, and a vessel of our Navy has been sent to Haytian waters to sustain our minister and for the protection of the persons and property of American citizens.

Due precautions have been taken to enforce our neutrality laws and prevent our territory from becoming the base of military supplies for either of the warring factions.

Under color of a blockade, of which no reasonable notice had been given, and which does not appear to have been efficiently maintained, a seizure of vessels under the American flag has been reported, and, in consequence, measures to prevent and redress any molestation of our innocent merchantmen have been adopted.

Proclamation was duly made on the 9th day of November, 1887, of the conventional extensions of the treaty of June 3, 1875, with Hawaii, under which relations of such special and beneficent intercourse have been created.

In the vast field of Oriental commerce now unfolded from our Pacific borders, no feature presents stronger recommendations for Congressional action than the establishment of communication by submarine telegraph with Honolulu.

The geographical position of the Hawaiian group, in relation to our Pacific States, creates a natural interdependency and mutuality of interest which our present treaties were intended to foster, and which make close communication a logical and commercial necessity.

The wisdom of concluding a treaty of commercial reciprocity with Mexico has been heretofore stated in my messages to Congress, and the lapse of time and growth of commerce with that close neighbor and sister republic confirm the judgment so expressed.

The precise relocation of our boundary line is needful, and adequate appropriation is now recommended.

It is with sincere satisfaction that I am enabled to advert to the spirit of good neighborhood and friendly co-operation and conciliation that has marked the correspondence and action of the Mexican authorities in their share of the task of maintaining law and order about the line of our common boundary.

The long-pending boundary dispute between Costa Rica and Nicaragua was referred to my arbitration; and by an award made on the 22d of March last, the question has been finally settled to the expressed satisfaction of both of the parties in interest.

The Empire of Brazil, in abolishing the last vestige of slavery among Christian nations, called forth the earnest congratulations of this Government in expression of the cordial sympathies of our people.

The claims of nearly all other countries against Chili, growing out of her late war with Bolivia and Peru, have been disposed of either by arbitration or by a lump settlement. Similar claims of our citizens will continue to be urged upon the Chilian Government, and it is hoped will not be subject to further delays.

A comprehensive treaty of amity and commerce with Peru was proclaimed on November 7th, last; and it is expected that under its operation mutual prosperity and good understanding will be promoted.

In pursuance of the policy of arbitration, a treaty to settle the claim of Santos, an American citizen, against Ecuador has been concluded under my authority, and will be duly submitted for the approval of the Senate.

Like disposition of the claim of Carlos Butterfield against Denmark, and of Van Bokelen against Hayti, will probably be made, and I trust the principle of such settlements may be extended in practice under the approval of the Senate.

Through unforeseen causes, foreign to the will of both Governments, the ratification of the convention of December 5, 1885, with Venezuela, for the rehearing of claims of citizens of the United States under the treaty of 1866, failed of exchange within the term provided, and a supplementary convention, further extending the time for exchange of ratifications and explanatory of an ambiguous provision of the prior convention, now awaits the advice and consent of the Senate.

Although this matter, in the stage referred to, concerns only the concurrent treaty-making power of one branch of Congress, I advert to it in view of the interest repeatedly and conspicuously shown by you, in your legislative capacity, in favor of a speedy and equitable adjustment of the questions growing out of the discredited judgments of the previous mixed commission of Caracas. With every desire to do justice to the representations of Venezuela in this regard, the time seems to have come to end this matter, and I trust the prompt confirmation by both parties of the supplementary action referred to, will avert the need of legislative or other action to prevent the longer withholding of such rights of actual claimants as may be shown to exist.

As authorized by the Congress, preliminary steps have been taken for the assemblage at this capital, during the coming year, of the representatives of South and Central American states, together with those of Mexico, Hayti, and San Domingo, to discuss sundry important monetary and commercial topics.

Excepting in those cases where, from reasons of contiguity of territory and the existence of a common border line incapable of being guarded, reciprocal commercial treaties may be found expedient, it is believed that commercial policies inducing freer mutual exchange of products can be most advantageously arranged by independent but cooperative legislation.

In the mode last mentioned the control of our taxation for revenue will be always retained in our own hands unrestricted by conventional agreements with other governments.

In conformity also with Congressional authority the maritime powers have been invited to confer, in Washington, in April next, upon the practicability of devising uniform rules and measures for the greater security of life and property at sea. A disposition to accept on the part of a number of the powers has already been manifested, and if the cooperation of the nations chiefly interested shall be secured important results may be confidently anticipated.

The act of June 26, 1884, and the acts amendatory thereof, in relation to tonnage duties, have given rise to extended correspondence with foreign nations with whom we have existing treaties of navigation and commerce, and have caused wide and regrettable divergence of opinion in relation to the imposition of the duties referred to. These questions are important, and I shall make them the subject of a special and more detailed communication at the present session.

With the rapid increase of immigration to our shores and the facilities of modern travel, abuses of the generous privileges afforded by our naturalization laws call for their careful revision.

The easy and unguarded manner in which certificates of American citizenship can now be obtained has induced a class, unfortunately large, to avail themselves of the opportunity to become absolved from allegiance to their native land and yet by a foreign residence to escape any just duty and contribution of service to the country of their proposed adoption. Thus while evading the duties of citizenship to the United States they may make prompt claim for its national protection and demand its intervention in their behalf. International complications of a serious nature arise, and the correspondence of the State Department discloses the great number and complexity of the questions which have been raised.

Our laws regulating the issue of passports should be carefully revised, and the institution of a central bureau of registration at the capital is again strongly recommended. By this means full particulars of each case of naturalization in the United States would be secured and properly indexed and recorded, and thus many cases of spurious citizenship would be detected and unjust responsibilities would be avoided.

The reorganization of the consular service is a matter of serious importance to our national interests. The number of existing principal consular offices is believed to be greater than is at all necessary for the conduct of the public business. It need not be our policy to maintain more than a moderate number of principal offices, each supported by a salary sufficient to enable the incumbent to live in comfort, and so distributed as to secure the convenient supervision, through subordinate agencies, of affairs over a considerable district.

I repeat the recommendations heretofore made by me that the appropriations for the maintenance of our diplomatic and consular service should be recast; that the so-called notarial or unofficial fees which our representatives abroad are now permitted to treat as personal perquisites should be forbidden; that a system of consular inspection should be instituted, and that a limited number of secretaries of legation at large should be authorized.

Preparations for the centennial celebration, on April 30, 1889, of the inauguration of George Washington as President of the United States, at the city of New York, have been made by a voluntary organization of the citizens of that locality, and believing that an opportunity should be afforded for the expression of the interest felt throughout the country in this event, I respectfully recommend fitting and co-operative action by Congress on behalf of the people of the United States.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury exhibits in detail the condition of our national finances and the operations of the several branches of the Government related to his Department.

The total ordinary revenues of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, amounted to $379,266,074.76, of which $219,091,173.63 was received from customs duties and $124,296,871.98 from internal-revenue taxes.

The total receipts from all sources exceeded those for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, by $7,862,797.10.

The ordinary expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, were $259,653,958.67, leaving a surplus of $119,612,116.09.

The decrease in these expenditures as compared with the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, was $8,278,221.30, notwithstanding the payment of more than $5,000,000 for pensions in excess of what was paid for that purpose in the latter-mentioned year.

The revenues of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1889, ascertained for the quarter ended September 30, 1888, and estimated for the remainder of the time, amount to $377,000,000; and the actual and estimated ordinary expenditures for the same year are $273,000,000, leaving an estimated surplus of $104,000,000.

The estimated receipts for the year ending June 30, 1890, are $377,000,000, and the estimated ordinary expenditures for the same time are $275,767,488.34, showing a surplus of $101,232,511.66.

The foregoing statements of surplus do not take into account the sum necessary to be expended to meet the requirements of the sinking-fund act, amounting to more than $47,000,000 annually.

The cost of collecting the customs revenues for the last fiscal year was 2.44 per cent.; for the year 1885 it was 3.77 per cent.

The excess of internal-revenue taxes collected during the last fiscal year over those collected for the year ended June 30, 1887, was $5,489,174.26, and the cost of collecting this revenue decreased from 3.4 per cent. in 1887 to less than 3.2 per cent. for the last year. The tax collected on oleomargarine was $723,948.04 for the year ending June 30, 1887, and $864,139.88 for the following year.

The requirements of the sinking-fund act have been met for the year ended June 30, 1888, and for the current year also, by the purchase of bonds. After complying with this law as positively required, and bonds sufficient for that purpose had been bought at a premium, it was not deemed prudent to further expend the surplus in such purchases until the authority to do so should be more explicit. A resolution, however, having been passed by both Houses of Congress removing all doubt as to Executive authority, daily purchases of bonds were commenced on the 23d day of April, 1888, and have continued until the present time. By this plan bonds of the Government not yet due have been purchased up to and including the 30th day of November, 1888, amounting to $94,700,400, the premium paid thereon amounting to $17,508,613.08.

The premium added to the principal of these bonds represents an investment yielding about 2 per cent. interest for the time they still had to run; and the saving to the Government represented by the difference between the amount of interest at 2 per cent. upon the sum paid for principal and premium and what it would have paid for interest at the rate specified in the bonds if they had run to their maturity, is about $27,165,000.

At first sight this would seem to be a profitable and sensible transaction on the part of the Government. But, as suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, the surplus thus expended for the purchase of bonds was money drawn from the people in excess of any actual need of the Government, and was so expended rather than allow it to remain idle in the Treasury. If this surplus under the operation of just and equitable laws had been left in the hands of the people, it would have been worth in their business at least 6 per cent. per annum. Deducting from the amount of interest upon the principal and premium of these bonds for the time they had to run at the rate of 6 per cent. the saving of 2 per cent. made for the people by the purchase of such bonds, the loss will appear to be $55,760,000.

This calculation would seem to demonstrate that if excessive and unnecessary taxation is continued and the Government is forced to pursue this policy of purchasing its own bonds at the premiums which it will be necessary to pay, the loss to the people will be hundreds of millions of dollars.

Since the purchase of bonds was undertaken as mentioned, nearly all that have been offered were at last accepted. It has been made quite apparent that the Government was in danger of being subjected to combinations to raise their price, as appears by the instance cited by the Secretary of the offering of bonds of the par value of only $326,000 so often that the aggregate of the sums demanded for their purchase amounted to more than $19,700,000.

Notwithstanding the large sums paid out in the purchase of bonds the surplus in the Treasury on the 30th day of November, 1888, was $52,234,610.01, after deducting about $20,000,000 just drawn out for the payment of pensions.

At the close of the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, there had been coined under the compulsory silver-coinage act $266,988,280 in silver dollars, $55,504,310 of which were in the hands of the people.

On the 30th day of June, 1888, there had been coined $299,708,790; and of this $55,829,303 was in circulation in coin, and $200,387,376 in silver certificates, for the redemption of which silver dollars to that amount were held by the Government.

On the 30th day of November, 1888, $312,570,990 had been coined, $60,970,990 of the silver dollars were actually in circulation, and $237,418,346 in certificates.

The Secretary recommends the suspension of the further coinage of silver, and in such recommendation I earnestly concur.

For further valuable information and timely recommendations I ask the careful attention of the Congress to the Secretary's report.

The Secretary of War reports that the Army at the date of the last consolidated returns consisted of 2,189 officers and 24,549 enlisted men.

The actual expenditures of the War Department for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, amounted to $41,165,107.07, of which sum $9,158,516.63 was expended for public works, including river and harbor improvements.

"The Board of Ordnance and Fortifications," provided for under the act approved September 22 last, was convened October 30, 1888, and plans and specifications for procuring forgings for 8, 10, and 12 inch guns, under provisions of section 4, and also for procuring 12-inch breech-loading mortars, cast-iron, hooped with steel, under the provisions of section 5 of the said act, were submitted to the Secretary of War for reference to the board, by the Ordnance Department on the same date.

These plans and specifications having been promptly approved by the board and the Secretary of War, the necessary authority to publish advertisements, inviting proposals, in the newspapers throughout the country, was granted by the Secretary on November 12, and on November 13 the advertisements were sent out to the different newspapers designated. The bids for the steel forgings are to be opened on December 20, 1888, and for the mortars on December 15, 1888.

A board of ordnance officers was convened at the Watervliet arsenal on October 4, 1888, to prepare the necessary plans and specifications for the establishment of an army gun factory at that point. The preliminary report of this board, with estimates for shop buildings and officers' quarters, was approved by the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, November 6 and 8. The specifications and form of advertisement and instructions to bidders have been prepared, and advertisements inviting proposals for the excavations for the shop building and for erecting the two sets of officers' quarters have been published. The detailed drawings and specifications for the gun-factory building are well in hand, and will be finished within three or four months, when bids will be invited for the erection of the building. The list of machines, etc., is made out, and it is expected that the plans for the large lathes, etc., will be completed within about four months, and after approval by the Board of Ordnance and Fortifications, bids for furnishing the same will be invited. The machines and other fixtures will be completed as soon as the shop is in readiness to receive them, probably about July, 1890.

Under the provisions of the Army bill, for the procurement of pneumatic dynamite guns, the necessary specifications are now being prepared and advertisements for proposals will issue early in December. The guns will probably be of 15 inches caliber and fire a projectile that will carry a charge, each, of about 500 pounds of explosive gelatine with full-caliber projectiles. The guns will probably be delivered in from six to ten months from the date of the contract, so that all the guns of this class that can be procured under the provisions of the law will be purchased during the year 1889.

I earnestly request that the recommendations contained in the Secretary's report, all of which are, in my opinion, calculated to increase the usefulness and discipline of the Army, may receive the consideration of the Congress. Among these the proposal that there should be provided a plan for the examination of officers to test their fitness for promotion is of the utmost importance. This reform has been before recommended in the reports of the Secretary, and its expediency is so fully demonstrated by the argument he presents in its favor that its adoption should no longer be neglected.

The death of General Sheridan in August last was a national affliction. The Army then lost the grandest of its chiefs. The country lost a brave and experienced soldier, a wise and discreet counselor, and a modest and sensible man. Those who in any manner came within the range of his personal association will never fail to pay deserved and willing homage to his greatness and the glory of his career; but they will cherish with more tender sensibility the loving memory of his simple, generous, and considerate nature.

The Apache Indians, whose removal from their reservation in Arizona followed the capture of those of their number who engaged in a bloody and murderous raid during a part of the years 1885 and 1886, are now held as prisoners of war at Mount Vernon barracks, in the State of Alabama. They numbered, on the 31st day of October, the date of the last report, 83 men, 170 women, 70 boys, and 59 girls, in all 382 persons. The commanding officer states that they are in good health and contented, and that they are kept employed as fully as is possible in the circumstances. The children as they arrive at a suitable age are sent to the Indian schools at Carlisle and Hampton. Last summer some charitable and kind people asked permission to send two teachers to these Indians for the purpose of instructing the adults as well as such children as should be found there. Such permission was readily granted, accommodations were provided for the teachers, and some portions of the buildings at the barracks were made available for school purposes. The good work contemplated has been commenced, and the teachers engaged are paid by the ladies with whom the plan originated.

I am not at all in sympathy with those benevolent but injudicious people who are constantly insisting that these Indians should be returned to their reservation. Their removal was an absolute necessity if the lives and property of citizens upon the frontier are to be at all regarded by the Government. Their continued restraint at a distance from the scene of their repeated and cruel murders and outrages is still necessary. It is a mistaken philanthropy, every way injurious, which prompts the desire to see these savages returned to their old haunts. They are in their present location as the result of the best judgment of those having official responsibility in the matter, and who are by no means lacking in kind consideration for the Indians. A number of these prisoners have forfeited their lives to outraged law and humanity. Experience has proved that they are dangerous and can not be trusted. This is true not only of those who on the war-path have heretofore actually been guilty of atrocious murder, but of their kindred and friends, who, while they remained upon their reservation, furnished aid and comfort to those absent with bloody intent.

These prisoners should be treated kindly and kept in restraint far from the locality of their former reservation; they should be subjected to efforts calculated to lead to their improvement and the softening of their savage and cruel instincts, but their return to their old home should be persistently resisted.

The Secretary in his report gives a graphic history of these Indians, and recites with painful vividness their bloody deeds and the unhappy failure of the Government to manage them by peaceful means. It will be amazing if a perusal of this history will allow the survival of a desire for the return of these prisoners to their reservation upon sentimental or any other grounds.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy demonstrates very intelligent management in that important Department, and discloses the most satisfactory progress in the work of reconstructing the Navy made during the past year. Of the ships in course of construction; five, namely, the Charleston, Baltimore, Yorktown, Vesuvius, and the Petrel, have in that time been launched and are rapidly approaching completion; and in addition to the above, the Philadelphia, the San Francisco, the Newark, the Bennington, the Concord, and the Herreshoff torpedo-boat are all under contract for delivery to the Department during the next year. The progress already made and being made gives good ground for the expectation that these eleven vessels will be incorporated as part of the American Navy within the next twelve months.

The report shows that notwithstanding the large expenditures for new construction, and the additional labor they involve, the total ordinary or current expenditures of the Department for the three years ending June 30, 1888, are less by more than 20 per cent. than such expenditures for the three years ending June 30, 1884.

The various steps which have been taken to improve the business methods of the Department are reviewed by the Secretary. The purchasing of supplies has been consolidated and placed under a responsible bureau head. This has resulted in the curtailment of open purchases, which in the years 1884 and 1885 amounted to over 50 per cent. of all the purchases of the Department, to less than 11 per cent.; so that at the present time about 90 per cent. of the total departmental purchases are made by contract and after competition. As the expenditures on this account exceed an average of $2,000,000 annually, it is evident that an important improvement in the system has been inaugurated and substantial economies introduced.

The report of the Postmaster-General shows a marked increase of business in every branch of the postal service.

The number of post-offices on July 1, 1888, was 57,376, an increase of 6,124 in three years and of 2,219 for the last fiscal year. The latter-mentioned increase is classified as follows:

New England States	5
Middle States	181
Southern States and Indian Territory (41)	1,406
The States and Territories of the Pacific coast	190
The ten States and Territories of the West and Northwest	435
District of Columbia	2
Total	2,219

Free-delivery offices have increased from 189 in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, to 358 in the year ended June 30, 1888.

In the railway mail service there has been an increase in one year of 168 routes, and in the number of miles traveled per annum an increase of 15,795,917.48. The estimated increase of railroad service for the year was 6,000 miles, but the amount of new railroad service actually put on was 12,764.50 miles.

The volume of business in the money-order division, including transactions in postal-notes, reached the sum of upwards of $143,000,000 for the year.

During the past year parcel post conventions have been concluded with Barbadoes, the Bahamas, British Honduras, and Mexico, and are now under negotiation with all the Central and South American states. The increase of correspondence with foreign countries during the past three years is gratifying, and is especially notable and exceptional with the Central and South American states and with Mexico. As the greater part of mail matter exchanged with these countries is commercial in character, this increase is evidence of the improved business relations with them. The practical operation of the parcel post conventions, so far as negotiated, has served to fulfill the most favorable predictions as to their benefits. In January last a general postal convention was negotiated with the Dominion of Canada, which went into operation on March 1, and which practically makes one postal territory of the United States and Canada. Under it merchandise parcels may now be transmitted through the mails at fourth-class rates of postage.

It is not possible here to touch even the leading heads of the great postal establishment, to illustrate the enormous and rapid growth of its business and the needs for legislative readjustment of much of its machinery that it has outgrown. For these and valuable recommendations of the Postmaster-General, attention is earnestly invited to his report.

A Department whose revenues have increased from $19,772,000 in 1870 to $52,700,000 in 1888, despite reductions of postage which have enormously reduced rates of revenue while greatly increasing its business, demands the careful consideration of the Congress as to all matters suggested by those familiar with its operations, and which are calculated to increase its efficiency and usefulness.

A bill, proposed by the Postmaster-General, was introduced at the last session of the Congress, by which a uniform standard in the amount of gross receipts would fix the right of a community to a public building to be erected by the Government for post-office purposes. It was demonstrated that, aside from the public convenience and the promotion of harmony among citizens—invariably disturbed by change of leasings and of site—it was a measure of the highest economy and of sound business judgment. It was found that the Government was paying in rents at the rate of from 7 to 10 per cent. per annum on what the cost of such public buildings would be. A very great advantage resulting from such a law would be the prevention of a large number of bills, constantly introduced for the erection of public buildings at places, and involving expenditures, not justified by public necessity. I trust that this measure will become a law at the present session of Congress.

Of the total number of postmasters, 54,874 are of the fourth class. These, of course, receive no allowances whatever for expenses in the service, and their compensation is fixed by percentages on receipts at their respective offices. This rate of compensation may have been, and probably was at some time, just, but the standard has remained unchanged through the several reductions in the rates of postage. Such reductions have necessarily cut down the compensation of these officials, while it undoubtedly increased the business performed by them. Simple justice requires attention to this subject to the end that fourth-class postmasters may receive at least an equivalent to that which the law itself, fixing the rate, intended for them.

Another class of postal employés whose condition seems to demand legislation is that of clerks in post-offices; and I call especial attention to the repeated recommendations of the Postmaster-General for their classification. Proper legislation of this character for the relief of carriers in the free-delivery service has been frequent. Provision is made for their promotion; for substitutes for them on vacation; for substitutes for holidays, and limiting their hours of labor. Seven million dollars has been appropriated for the current year to provide for them, though the total number of offices where they are employed is but 358 for the past fiscal year, with an estimated increase for the current year of but 40, while the total appropriation for all clerks in offices throughout the United States is $5,950,000.

The legislation affecting the relations of the Government with railroads is in need of revision. While, for the most part, the railroad companies throughout the country have cordially co-operated with the Post-Office Department in rendering excellent service, yet under the law as it stands, while the compensation to them for carrying the mail is limited and regulated, and although railroads are made post-roads by law, there is no authority reposed anywhere to compel the owner of a railroad to take and carry the United States mails. The only alternative provided by act of Congress in case of refusal is for the Postmaster-General to send mail forward by pony express. This is but an illustration of ill-fitting legislation, reasonable and proper at the time of its enactment, but long since outgrown and requiring readjustment.

It is gratifying to note from the carefully prepared statistics accompanying the Postmaster-General's report that, notwithstanding the great expansion of the service, the rate of expenditure has been lessened, and efficiency has been improved in every branch; that fraud and crime have decreased; that losses from the mails have been reduced, and that the number of complaints of the service made to postmasters and to the Department are far less than ever before.

The transactions of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, are contained in the report of the Attorney-General, as well as a number of valuable recommendations, the most of which are repetitions of those previously made, and ought to receive consideration.

It is stated in this report that though judgments in civil suits amounting to $552,021.08 were recovered in favor of the Government during the year, only the sum of $132,934 was collected thereon; and that though fines, penalties, and forfeitures were imposed amounting to $541,808.43, only $109,648.42 of that sum was paid on account thereof. These facts may furnish an illustration of the sentiment which extensively prevails, that a debt due the Government should cause no inconvenience to the citizen.

It also appears from this report that though prior to March, 1885, there had been but six convictions in the Territories of Utah and Idaho under the laws of 1862 and 1882, punishing polygamy and unlawful cohabitation as crimes, there have been since that date nearly six hundred convictions under these laws and the statutes of 1887; and the opinion is expressed that under such a firm and vigilant execution of these laws, and the advance of ideas opposed to the forbidden practices, polygamy within the United States is virtually at an end.

Suits instituted by the Government under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1887, for the termination of the corporations known as the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company and the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints have resulted in a decree favorable to the Government, declaring the charters of these corporations forfeited and escheating their property. Such property, amounting in value to more than $800,000, is in the hands of a receiver pending further proceedings, an appeal having been taken to the Supreme Court of the United States.

In the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which will be laid before you, the condition of the various branches of our domestic affairs connected with that Department and its operations during the past year, are fully exhibited. But a brief reference to some of the subjects discussed in this able and interesting report can here be made; but I commend the entire report to the attention of the Congress, and trust that the sensible and valuable recommendations it contains will secure careful consideration.

I can not too strenuously insist upon the importance of proper measures to insure a right disposition of our public lands, not only as a matter of present justice, but in forecast of the consequences to future generations. The broad, rich acres of our agricultural plains have been long preserved by nature to become her untrammeled gift to a people civilized and free, upon which should rest, in well-distributed ownership, the numerous homes of enlightened, equal, and fraternal citizens. They came to national possession with the warning example in our eyes of the entail of iniquities in landed proprietorship which other countries have permitted and still suffer. We have no excuse for the violation of principles, cogently taught by reason and example, nor for the allowance of pretexts which have sometimes exposed our lands to colossal greed. Laws which open a door to fraudulent acquisition, or administration which permits favor to rapacious seizure by a favored few of expanded areas that many should enjoy, are accessory to offenses against our national welfare and humanity, not to be too severely condemned or punished.

It is gratifying to know that something has been done at last to redress the injuries to our people and check the perilous tendency of the reckless waste of the national domain. That over 80,000,000 acres have been arrested from illegal usurpation, improvident grants, and fraudulent entries and claims, to be taken for the homesteads of honest industry—although less than the greater areas thus unjustly lost—must afford a profound gratification to right-feeling citizens as it is a recompense for the labors and struggles of the recovery. Our dear experience ought sufficiently to urge the speedy enactment of measures of legislation which will confine the future disposition of our remaining agricultural lands to the uses of actual husbandry and genuine homes.

Nor should our vast tracts of so-called desert lands be yielded up to the monopoly of corporations or grasping individuals, as appears to be much the tendency under the existing statute. These lands require but the supply of water to become fertile and productive. It is a problem of great moment how most wisely for the public good that factor shall be furnished. I can not but think it perilous to suffer either these lands or the sources of their irrigation to fall into the hands of monopolies, which by such means may exercise lordship over the areas dependent on their treatment for productiveness. Already steps have been taken to secure accurate and scientific information of the conditions, which is the prime basis of intelligent action. Until this shall be gained, the course of wisdom appears clearly to lie in a suspension of further disposal, which only promises to create rights antagonistic to the common interest. No harm can follow this cautionary conduct. The land will remain, and the public good presents no demand for hasty dispossession of national ownership and control.

I commend also the recommendations that appropriate measures be taken to complete the adjustment of the various grants made to the States for internal improvements and of swamp and overflowed lands, as well as to adjudicate and finally determine the validity and extent of the numerous private land claims. All these are elements of great injustice and peril to the settlers upon the localities affected; and now that their existence can not be avoided, no duty is more pressing than to fix as soon as possible their bounds and terminate the threats of trouble which arise from uncertainty.

The condition of our Indian population continues to improve and the proofs multiply that the transforming change, so much to be desired, which shall substitute for barbarism enlightenment and civilizing education, is in favorable progress. Our relations with these people during the year have been disturbed by no serious disorders, but rather marked by a better realization of their true interests, and increasing confidence and good-will. These conditions testify to the value of the higher tone of consideration and humanity which has governed the later methods of dealing with them, and commend its continued observance

Allotments in severalty have been made on some reservations until all those entitled to land thereon have had their shares assigned, and the work is still continued. In directing the execution of this duty I have not aimed so much at rapid dispatch as to secure just and fair arrangements which shall best conduce to the objects of the law, by producing satisfaction with the results of the allotments made. No measure of general effect has ever been entered on from which more may be fairly hoped, if it shall be discreetly administered. It proffers opportunity and inducement to that independence of spirit and life which the Indian peculiarly needs, while at the same time the inalienability of title affords security against the risks his inexperience of affairs or weakness of character may expose him to in dealing with others. Whenever begun upon any reservation it should be made complete, so that all are brought to the same condition, and, as soon as possible, community in lands should cease by opening such as remain unallotted to settlement. Contact with the ways of industrious and successful farmers will perhaps add a healthy emulation which will both instruct and stimulate.

But no agency for the amelioration of this people appears to me so promising as the extension, urged by the Secretary, of such complete facilities of education as shall, at the earliest possible day, embrace all teachable Indian youth, of both sexes, and retain them with a kindly and beneficent hold until their characters are formed and their faculties and dispositions trained to the sure pursuit of some form of useful industry. Capacity of the Indian no longer needs demonstration. It is established. It remains to make the most of it, and when that shall be done the curse will be lifted, the Indian race saved, and the sin of their oppression redeemed. The time of its accomplishment depends upon the spirit and justice with which it shall be prosecuted. It can not be too soon for the Indian, nor for the interests and good name of the nation.

The average attendance of Indian pupils on the schools increased by over 900 during the year, and the total enrollment reached 15,212. The cost of maintenance was not materially raised. The number of teachable Indian youth is now estimated at 40,000, or nearly three times the enrollment of the schools. It is believed the obstacles in the way of instructing are all surmountable, and that the necessary expenditure would be a measure of economy.

The Sioux tribes on the great reservation of Dakota refused to assent to the act passed by the Congress at its last session for opening a portion of their lands to settlement, notwithstanding modification of the terms was suggested which met most of their objections. Their demand is for immediate payment of the full price of $1.25 per acre for the entire body of land the occupancy of which they are asked to relinquish.

The manner of submission insured their fair understanding of the law, and their action was undoubtedly as thoroughly intelligent as their capacity admitted. It is at least gratifying that no reproach of overreaching can in any manner lie against the Government, however advisable the favorable completion of the negotiation may have been esteemed.

I concur in the suggestions of the Secretary regarding the Turtle Mountain Indians, the two reservations in California, and the Crees. They should in my opinion receive immediate attention.

The number of pensioners added to the rolls during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888, is 60,252; and increase of pensions was granted in 45,716 cases. The names of 15,730 pensioners were dropped from the rolls during the year for various causes, and at the close of the year the number of persons of all classes receiving pensions was 452,557. Of these there were 806 survivors of the war of 1812, 10,787 widows of those who served in that war, 16,060 soldiers of the Mexican war, and 5,104 widows of said soldiers.

One hundred and two different rates of pensions are paid to these beneficiaries, ranging from $2 to $416.66 per month.

The amount paid for pensions during the fiscal year was $78,775,861.92, being an increase over the preceding year of $5,308,280.22. The expenses attending the maintenance and operation of the Pension Bureau during that period were $3,262,524.67, making the entire expenditures of the bureau $82,038,386.59, being 21½ per cent. of the gross income and nearly 31 per cent. of the total expenditures of the Government during the year.

I am thoroughly convinced that our general pension laws should be revised and adjusted to meet, as far as possible in the light of our experience, all meritorious cases. The fact that one hundred and two different rates of pensions are paid can not, in my opinion, be made consistent with justice to the pensioners or to the Government; and the numerous private pension bills that are passed, predicated upon the imperfection of general laws, while they increase in many cases existing inequality and injustice, lend additional force to the recommendation for a revision of the general laws on this subject.

The laxity of ideas prevailing among a large number of our people regarding pensions is becoming every day more marked. The principles upon which they should be granted are in danger of being altogether ignored, and already pensions are often claimed because the applicants are as much entitled as other successful applicants rather than upon any disability reasonably attributable to military service. If the establishment of vicious precedents be continued, if the granting of pensions be not divorced from partisan and other unworthy and irrelevant considerations, and if the honorable name of veteran unfairly becomes by these means but another term for one who constantly clamors for the aid of the Government, there is danger that injury will be done to the fame and patriotism of many whom our citizens all delight to honor, and that a prejudice will be aroused unjust to meritorious applicants for pensions.

The Department of Agriculture has continued, with a good measure of success, its efforts to develop the processes, enlarge the results, and augment the profits of American husbandry. It has collected and distributed practical information, introduced and tested new plants, checked the spread of contagious disease of farm animals, resisted the advance of noxious insects and destructive fungus growths, and sought to secure to agricultural labor the highest reward of effort and the fullest immunity from loss. Its records of the year show that the season of 1888 has been one of medium production. A generous supply of the demands of consumption has been assured, and a surplus for exportation, moderate in certain products and bountiful in others, will prove a benefaction alike to buyer and grower.

Four years ago it was found that the great cattle industry of the country was endangered, and those engaged in it were alarmed at the rapid extension of the European lung plague of pleuro-pneumonia. Serious outbreaks existed in Illinois, Missouri, and Kentucky, and in Tennessee animals affected were held in quarantine. Five counties in New York and from one to four counties in each of the States of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, and Maryland were almost equally affected.

With this great danger upon us, and with the contagion already in the channels of commerce, with the enormous direct and indirect losses already being caused by it, and when only prompt and energetic action could be successful, there were in none of these States any laws authorizing this Department to eradicate the malady or giving the State officials power to co-operate with it for this purpose. The Department even lacked both the requisite appropriation and authority.

By securing State co-operation in connection with authority from Congress, the work of eradication has been pressed successfully, and this dreaded disease has been extirpated from the Western States and also from the Eastern States, with the exception of a few restricted areas, which are still under supervision. The danger has thus been removed, and trade and commerce have been freed from the vexatious State restrictions which were deemed necessary for a time.

During the past four years the process of diffusion, as applied to the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, has been introduced into this country and fully perfected by the experiments carried on by the Department of Agriculture. This process is now universally considered to be the most economical one, and it is through it that the sorghum-sugar industry has been established upon a firm basis and the road to its future success opened. The adoption of this diffusion process is also extending to Louisiana and other sugar-producing parts of the country, and will doubtless soon be the only method employed for the extraction of sugar from the cane.

An exhaustive study has also, within the same period, been undertaken of the subject of food adulteration and the best analytical methods for detecting it. A part of the results of this work has already been published by the Department, which, with the matter in course of preparation, will make the most complete treatise on that subject that has ever been published in any country.

The Department seeks a progressive development. It would combine the discoveries of science with the economics and amelioration of rural practice. A supervision of the endowed experimental-station system recently provided for is a proper function of the Department, and is now in operation. This supervision is very important, and should be wisely and vigilantly directed, to the end that the pecuniary aid of the Government in favor of intelligent agriculture should be so applied as to result in the general good and to the benefit of all our people, thus justifying the appropriations made from the public Treasury.

The adjustment of the relations between the Government and the railroad companies which have received land grants and the guaranty of the public credit in aid of the construction of their roads should receive early attention. The report of a majority of the commissioners appointed to examine the affairs and indebtedness of these roads, in which they favor an extension of the time for the payment of such indebtedness in at least one case where the corporation appears to be able to comply with well-guarded and exact terms of such extension, and the reinforcement of their opinion by gentlemen of undoubted business judgment and experience, appointed to protect the interests of the Government as directors of said corporation, may well lead to the belief that such an extension would be to the advantage of the Government.

The subject should be treated as a business proposition with a view to a final realization of its indebtedness by the Government, rather than as a question to be decided upon prejudice or by way of punishment for previous wrong-doing.

The report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, with its accompanying documents, gives in detail the operations of the several departments of the District government, and furnishes evidence that the financial affairs of the District are at present in such satisfactory condition as to justify the commissioners in submitting to the Congress estimates for desirable and needed improvements.

The commissioners recommend certain legislation which in their opinion is necessary to advance the interests of the District.

I invite your special attention to their request for such legislation as will enable the commissioners, without delay, to collect, digest, and properly arrange the laws by which the District is governed, and which are now embraced in several collections, making them available only with great difficulty and labor. The suggestions they make touching desirable amendments to the laws relating to licenses granted for carrying on the retail traffic in spirituous liquors, to the observance of Sunday, to the proper assessment and collection of taxes, to the speedy punishment of minor offenders, and to the management and control of the reformatory and charitable institutions supported by Congressional appropriations, are commended to careful consideration.

I again call attention to the present inconvenience and the danger to life and property attending the operation of steam-railroads through and across the public streets and roads of the District. The propriety of such legislation as will properly guard the use of these railroads and better secure the convenience and safety of citizens is manifest.

The consciousness that I have presented but an imperfect statement of the condition of our country and its wants, occasions no fear that anything omitted is not known and appreciated by the Congress, upon whom rests the responsibility of intelligent legislation in behalf of a great nation and a confiding people.

As public servants we shall do our duty well if we constantly guard the rectitude of our intentions, maintain unsullied our love of country, and with unselfish purpose strive for the public good.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WASHINGTON, December 3, 1888.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I move that the message of the President of the United States lie upon the table and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I was about to move an adjournment, but I think it would be convenient to the Senate to learn from gentlemen having various measures in charge what is likely to be the order of business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business is House bill 9051, the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. HOAR. At what hour to-morrow will that be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to give notice that I shall call up for consideration, with the consent of the Senate, the bill reported by the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the report of the Pacific Railway Commission, providing for a settlement with the Union Pacific Railroad Company, to-morrow morning immediately after the routine business of the morning hour is completed. That bill was made a special order for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. At 2 o'clock. Then, as the tariff bill, I understand, is to be called up to-morrow, I shall move immediately after the routine business that this bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to give notice that I shall, as soon as practicable, ask the Senate to take up and dispose of the resolution for the investigation of the election in Louisiana in April last. I am not informed by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] whether or not there will be any objection to the passage of that resolution. He was not present in the Senate when the resolution was taken up on the last occasion, but I expect that there will be no objection to the passage of the resolution, and that, therefore, it will not take up the time of the Senate.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I wish to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the senior Senator from Louisiana has strenuously objected to the passage of that resolution, and will continue to do so.

Mr. CHANDLER. This is the first time that the Senator has so informed the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say at this time, in connection with the unfinished business, that to-morrow at 2 o'clock I expect to ask the Senate to go on with that order. In view of the notice given by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], I think I ought to say that if the business which he suggests is prolonged beyond a day or two I shall ask the Senate later on to begin regularly the consideration of the tariff bill during the morning hour.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 4, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 3, 1888.

This being the day designated by the Constitution, the members of the House of Representatives of the Fiftieth Congress assembled in their Hall for their second session.

At 12 o'clock noon the Speaker, Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative of the State of Kentucky, called the House to order.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we devoutly bless Thee that since the adjournment of the last session not a member of this House has been called away by death, but that the representatives of the people are returned to their seats in safety, peace, and health.

Spread over us, we beseech Thee, the shadow of Thy wing, and continue to keep us under Thy sacred protection.

May all the deliberations of this session be marked by a profound zeal for the safety, honor, and welfare of the nation, by a wise and sound judgment, kindliness of spirit, and urbanity of manner.

We humbly ask through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The roll was called, and the following members answered to their names:

Alabama—James T. Jones, Hilary A. Herbert, William C. Oates, James E. Cobb, John H. Bankhead, William H. Forney, Joseph Wheeler.

Arkansas—C. R. Breckinridge, Thomas C. McRae, Samuel W. Peel.

California—T. L. Thompson, Marion Biggs, W. W. Morrow, Charles N. Felton, William Vandever.

Colorado—

Connecticut—Carlos French, Charles A. Russell.

Delaware—John B. Penington.

Florida—Charles Dougherty.

Georgia—Henry G. Turner, Charles F. Crisp, Thomas W. Grimes, John D. Stewart, James H. Blount, Judson C. Clements.

Illinois—Ransom W. Dunham, Frank Lawler, George E. Adams, A. J. Hopkins, Robert R. Hitt, Lewis E. Payson, Philip S. Post, William H. Gest, George A. Anderson, William M. Springer, Jonathan H. Rowell, Joseph G. Cannon, Silas Z. Landes, Edward Lane, Jehu Baker, John R. Thomas.

Indiana—Alvin P. Hovey, Jonas G. Howard, William S. Holman, Courtland C. Matson, Thomas M. Browne, James T. Johnston, Benjamin F. Shively.

Iowa—John H. Gear, Walter I. Hayes, David B. Henderson, Daniel Kerr, J. B. Weaver, A. R. Anderson, Adoniram J. Holmes.

Kansas—Thomas Ryan, John A. Anderson, Erastus J. Turner, Samuel R. Peters.

Kentucky—William J. Stone, W. Godfrey Hunter, A. B. Montgomery, Asher G. Caruth, John G. Carlisle, William C. P. Breckinridge, James B. McCreary, George M. Thomas, W. P. Taulbee, H. F. Finley.

Louisiana—Matthew D. Lagan, Edward J. Gay, Newton C. Blanchard, S. M. Robertson.

Maine—Thomas B. Reed, Nelson Dingley, jr., Seth L. Milliken, Charles A. Boutelle.

Maryland—Frank T. Shaw, Harry Welles Rusk, Isidor Rayner, Barnes Compton, Louis E. McComas.

Massachusetts—Robert T. Davis, Edward D. Hayden, Henry Cabot Lodge, William Cogswell, Charles H. Allen, John E. Russell, William Whiting, Francis W. Rockwell.

Michigan—J. Logan Chipman, Edward P. Allen, James O'Donnell, Julius C. Burrows, Melbourne H. Ford, Mark S. Brewer, Justin R. Whiting, Timothy E. Tarsney, Byron M. Cutcheon.

Minnesota—Thomas Wilson, Edmund Rice, Knute Nelson.

Mississippi—John M. Allen, T. C. Catchings, F. G. Barry, Charles E. Hooker.

Missouri—Charles H. Mansur, Alexander M. Dockery, William Warner, John T. Heard, John E. Hutton, John M. Glover, Richard P. Bland, William J. Stone, William H. Wade, James P. Walker.

Nebraska—George W. E. Dorsey.

Nevada—William Woodburn.

New Hampshire—L. F. McKinney, Jacob H. Gallinger.

New Jersey—James Buchanan, John Kean, jr., James N. Pidcock, William Walter Phelps, Herman Lehlbach, William McAdoo.

New York—Felix Campbell, Stephen V. White, Archibald M. Bliss, Amos J. Cummings, Lloyd S. Bryce, Timothy J. Campbell, Samuel S. Cox, Francis B. Spinola, William G. Stahlnecker, Henry Bacon, John H. Ketcham, Stephen T. Hopkins, Charles Tracey, George West, John H. Moffitt, Abraham X. Parker, James S. Sherman, James J. Belden, Milton De Lano, Newton W. Nutting, Thomas S. Flood, Charles S. Baker, John G. Sawyer, John M. Farquhar, John B. Weber, William G. Laidlaw.

North Carolina—Louis C. Latham, John Nichols, John M. Brower, Alfred Rowland, John S. Henderson, William H. H. Cowles.

Ohio—Benjamin Butterworth, E. S. Williams, S. S. Yoder, M. M. Boothman, James E. Campbell, Jacob Romeis, Albert C. Thompson, Jacob J. Pugsley, Joseph H. Outhwaite, Charles H. Grosvenor, Beriah Wilkins, William McKinley, jr., Ezra B. Taylor, Martin A. Foran.

Oregon—Binger Hermann.

Pennsylvania—Edwin S. Osborne (at large), Henry H. Bingham, Charles O'Neill, Samuel J. Randall, William D. Kelley, Alfred C. Harmer, Smedley Darlington, Robert M. Yardley, John A. Hiestand, William H. Sowden, Charles R. Buckalew, Franklin Bound, Frank C. Bunnell, Edward Scull, Louis E. Atkinson, John Patton, Welty McCullogh, John Dalzell, Thomas M. Bayne, Oscar L. Jackson, Norman Hall.

Rhode Island—Warren O. Arnold.

South Carolina—Samuel Dibble, George D. Tillman, James S. Cothran, William Elliott.

Tennessee—Roderick R. Butler, L. C. Houk, John R. Neal, Benton McMillin, James D. Richardson, Joseph E. Washington, Washington C. Whitthorne, Benjamin A. Enloe.

Texas—C. B. Kilgore, Silas Hare, Jo. Abbott, W. H. Crain, L. W. Moore, R. Q. Mills, J. D. Sayers, S. W. T. Lanham.

Vermont—John W. Stewart, William W. Grout.

Virginia—T. H. B. Browne, George D. Wise, John R. Brown, Samuel I. Hopkins, Charles T. O'Ferrall, W. H. F. Lee, H. Bowen.

West Virginia—William L. Wilson.

Wisconsin—Lucien B. Caswell, Richard Guenther, Robert M. La Follette, Henry Smith, Thomas R. Hudd, Charles B. Clark, Ormsby B. Thomas, N. P. Haugen, Isaac Stephenson.

Mr. HUTTON. I wish to state that my colleague, Mr. CLARDY, is detained at his home on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. It appears from the call of the roll that 236 members have responded to their names, and there is, therefore, a quorum of the House present.

The following is the list of the Territorial Delegates:

Arizona—Marcus A. Smith.

Dakota—Oscar S. Gifford.

Idaho—Fred. T. Dubois.

Montana—Joseph K. Toole.

New Mexico—Antonio Joseph.

Utah—John T. Caine.

Washington—Charles S. Voorhees.

Wyoming—Joseph M. Carey.

NOTIFICATION FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that a quorum of that body was assembled and ready to proceed to business; also that a committee consisting of two members, Mr. MORRILL and Mr. SAULSBURY, had been appointed to join such committee as should be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House was assembled, and that Congress was ready to receive any communication he desired to make.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has appeared and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed on the part of the House, to join such committee as may be appointed by the Senate, to wait upon the President and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

The SPEAKER appointed as such committee on the part of the House, Mr. HOLMAN, Mr. TURNER of Georgia, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House take a recess until half past 1 o'clock, to await the report of the committee sent to wait upon the President.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 1.30 p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 1.30 p. m.) resumed its session.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed under resolution of the House to wait upon the President and inform him a quorum was present and ready to receive any communication he may be prepared to make, have performed that duty; and the President has requested us to extend his congratulations to the House on account of the safe return of its members, and to say that he will shortly communicate to the House in writing.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

A message in writing from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received; which was laid before the House, and read in full.

[It will be found in the Senate proceedings.]

Mr. MILLS submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the message of the President be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying documents, printed.

PRINTING PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed —— thousand copies of the President's last annual message, for the use of the House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

And then, on motion of Mr. MILLS (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BIGGS: A bill (H. R. 11610) granting a pension to Edwin Cotton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11611) granting a pension to Mrs. P. Campron—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McKINNEY: A bill (H. R. 11612) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah A. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 11613) granting a pension to Peter J. Hershey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11614) granting a pension to Daniel Danielson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11615) granting an increase of pension to John C. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SAYERS: A bill (H. R. 11616) for the relief of Thornton A. Washington—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. YODER: A bill (H. R. 11617) granting a pension to Mary Thompson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11618) granting a pension to Mary Bristley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11619) authorizing the President to appoint and retire William G. Galloway with the rank and grade of captain of infantry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

JOHN T. MORGAN, a Senator from the State of Alabama, CUSHMAN K. DAVIS, a Senator from the State of Minnesota, FRANK HISCOCK, a Senator from the State of New York, MATTHEW S. QUAY, a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania, and JOHN H. REAGAN, a Senator from the State of Texas, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FINANCE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year 1888; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF SURVEYOR-GENERAL OF NEW MEXICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the United States surveyor-general of New Mexico, submitted in pursuance of the requirements of the eighth section of the act of July 22, 1854; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Chief of Engineers relative to the construction of the building for the Library of Congress under the provisions of the act approved October 2, 1888, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government.

Mr. HALE. I move that the report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It calls for an immediate appropriation.

The motion was agreed to.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the conclusions of fact and law of the Court of Claims in certain spoliation claims under the act approved January 20, 1885; which, on motion of Mr. HALE, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF IDAHO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the governor of Idaho to the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the affairs in and the progress and development of the Territory of Idaho during the last fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

FISH COMMISSIONER'S REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy for the year 1888, transmitted in accordance with law; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REPORTS OF THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a full and complete statement of all property in his possession belonging to the United States December 3, 1888, and of the amounts received from the sale of waste paper; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from July 1, 1887, to June 30, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This report, with the accompanying papers, will lie on the table and be printed, if there be no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is it usual to print that large document relating to the financial matters of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the question of printing it had better be referred to the Committee on Printing. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPERTY REPORT OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, transmitting a complete account of all property belonging to the United States in his possession on the 3d day of December, 1888; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN presented the petition of Frederick A. Schmidt, administrator of Thomas H. Yeatman, deceased, late of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying payment of a claim for war supplies; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the memorial of 16 members of the Columbus (Ohio) Barracks band, remonstrating against the passage of the House bill proposing to prevent them from accepting civil engagements; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of the Columbia (Oregon) Water Way Association, praying that appropriations be made for the improvement of the Columbia River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of the president and other officers of the Fairfield County Historical Society, of Connecticut, praying that an appropriation be made to be expended in removing to this country the remains of Joel Barlow, formerly minister plenipotentiary and envoy extraordinary to the court of the First Napoleon, who died during his service. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Nathaniel J. Coffin, of Hallowell, Me., praying to be granted authority to present to the Library of Congress a chart containing the location of the magnet poles and the source of the Gulf Stream; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of John Kennedy, late a citizen of Washington, D. C., by Margaret Kennedy, executrix, praying to be allowed damages for property taken and used by the Government in the erection of a fort, known as Fort Sedgwick, in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3644) to amend the act approved February 25, 1885, entitled "An act to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3645) granting to the Astoria and South Coast Railway Company the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in the county of Clatsop and State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3647) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3648) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3649) to place John J. S. Hassler on the retired-list of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. REAGAN. I introduce two bills by request. I ask that the bill I send to the desk be read by its title with a view to get advice as to its proper reference.

The bill (S. 3650) authorizing the construction of two steel rams to be armed with heavy rifled dynamite guns and pneumatic torpedo-throwers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not know whether the bill should go to the Committee on Coast Defenses, which has that subject somewhat under consideration, or to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or the Military Committee. Perhaps there are Senators who know better where it ought to go. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has taken a good deal of interest in this subject and perhaps can advise me as to the reference that should be made.

Mr. DOLPH. I think the bill should go to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred, if there be no objection.

Mr. HALE. All matters relating to the construction of vessels for naval warfare have invariably gone to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I have not known that the Committee on Coast Defenses in the course of its investigations or work has ever taken into consideration the question of constructing naval vessels.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not understand that these proposed vessels can properly be called naval vessels. They are for the protection and defense of our ports. They are like the floating batteries which are mentioned in the report of the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses, and which were provided for in the bill reported by the Committee on Coast Defenses.

A line must be drawn somewhere, or else we may as well do away with the Committee on Coast Defenses entirely. I think we have made but little progress in the matter of coast defenses except through the Committee on Appropriations. To judge by what has been accomplished, all such bills probably should go there.

Mr. HALE. I suppose that the Committee on Coast Defenses would examine generally into the subject and make recommendations, which of course the country and the Congress would listen to with great interest and attention; but when Congress comes to the question of constructing any kind of craft for defense in the harbors, or for sailing the seas, or for fighting battles, it will be the Navy Department under which the vessels, whatever their kind may be, will be constructed. So it seems to me clear in regard to a measure of this kind, which provides for the construction of rams, or whatever they may be, that it is the Navy Department and the Naval Committee that should consider the question.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to ask him, if these vessels are constructed will they not properly belong to and be under the control of the Navy Department and become a part of the Navy?

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HARRIS. Then, it seems to me unquestionable that the bill ought to go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DOLPH. I have yet to learn precisely what was intended by the Senate when it constituted the Committee on Coast Defenses. If it is a mere ornamental committee, the sooner it is dispensed with the better.

At the last session of Congress the Committee on Coast Defenses reported a bill intended to carry out the recommendations of the Board on Fortifications and other Defenses, providing for the erection of certain fortifications, and also for the construction of certain floating batteries, somewhat similar, I presume, to the vessels proposed to be constructed under the provisions of this bill. In the judgment of some Senators the amount proposed to be appropriated was large, and after discussion, the Committee on Appropriations having reported in the naval appropriation bill and also in the Army appropriation bill some appropriations for coast defenses, the matter was allowed to lie over upon the Calendar.

I think it was the intention of the Senate to draw the line somewhere in this matter, and to take a part of the jurisdiction that has been exercised by the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Naval Affairs from those committees and give it to the Committee on Coast Defenses. With that view the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs were made members of the Committee on Coast Defenses.

It seems to me that such matters as floating batteries, rams, and other appliances for coast defenses, to be used only locally in the harbors in conjunction with fixed fortifications for the defense of a harbor, ought to be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses. I do not think they are properly a part of the Navy. At least I think it is apparent that the Senate intended to divide the jurisdiction between those two committees.

The Senator from Maine knows very well that there has been no appropriation made for any such purpose upon a bill coming from either the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Coast Defenses, as a committee, but that all the appropriations which have been made have been inserted in the regular appropriation bills, although there was some objection made upon the floor of the Senate to the effect that it was not the proper way to make appropriations for these purposes.

I speak not only for myself but for the other members of the committee, and I desire to retain for it such jurisdiction as it was intended by the Senate it should have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] moves the reference of the bill to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. HALE. Unless the Senator from Oregon consents to a reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs, I will move, with his consent, to amend his motion by referring the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine proposes to amend the pending motion so as to refer the bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs, which the Chair thinks is not in order. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I will ask the Senator from Maine, with the consent of the Senate, that the motion to refer may lie over until to-morrow morning, in order that I may consult with the other members of the committee.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to that course, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table until to-morrow, having been read twice by title.

Mr. REAGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3651) authorizing the construction of two steel cruisers to be armed with dynamite and torpedo throwers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3652) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3653) to authorize the sale of a tract of land in the military reservation at Fort Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3654) granting an increase of pension to Addison A. Jackson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3655) granting a pension to James Swift; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SAWYER introduced a bill (S. 3656) granting a pension to George Batterson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3657) granting a pension to Adolph Henning; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Dr. Henning, which I move be referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLODGETT introduced a bill (S. 3658) granting a pension to Elijah J. Booth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3659) granting a pension to William H. Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 3660) to create a bureau of health and to prevent the introduction and extension of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. GIBSON. This bill was draughted by committees of the several commercial organizations of the city of New Orleans, held October 5, 1888, and it is accompanied by a memorial which is not long. I ask that the memorial may be printed in the RECORD, as it relates to a very important subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is accompanied by a memorial, which the Senator from Louisiana asks may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope we shall not commence that practice at this session. Let the memorial be printed as an ordinary document. I have no objection to that course, if the Senator thinks the memorial is important.

Mr. GIBSON. Let the memorial be printed as an ordinary document, then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 3661) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks and grounds at New Orleans to the Tulane University of Louisiana at New Orleans, for educational purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 3662) to provide for the payment of Joseph H. Jenkins for services rendered by him as clerk to the secretary of the Territory of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3663) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT TO REVENUE BILL.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no resolutions, concurrent or other, the order of morning business is closed. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday gave notice of his intention to move for the consideration of a bill at the close of the routine morning business to-day.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3401. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg leave to inquire if the report of the special committee on that subject has been printed and laid on the desks of Senators?

Mr. FRYE. It was printed at the last session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report and the testimony have been printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems to me that Senators ought to have an opportunity to examine that report before being called upon to vote on the bill. As all are aware, there was not very much opportunity to do so during the latter days of the last session, and the vacation has been a very short one. This is a very important matter, as all must agree. The testimony, I understand, is very voluminous. For one I should like to have an opportunity to examine it.

I may vote for the bill when it comes up and I may not. I confess for one (I speak for myself) I have had no opportunity to give any time to the matter. I should be very much gratified if the bill could be laid over. This is the second day of the session. The tariff bill is on the table, as I understand, ready to be proceeded with, and it seems to me we might go on with something that we knew more about than we now do about the bill called up by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3401.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MITCHELL. I call for the reading of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine to proceed to the consideration of the bill. The report can not properly be read until that question is decided and the Senate agrees to take up the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg pardon; I thought the bill was before the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that it is hardly worth while to take up this bill during the morning hour. I do not believe the Senate is now prepared to enter into a discussion of it. Unless some Senator desires to address the Senate on the subject, it seems to me that it would be well to postpone it and proceed with what it was understood would be the regular order when we came together, the tariff bill.

Mr. HOAR. This bill was set down by a special vote.

Mr. TELLER. It was set down for when?

Mr. HOAR. It was set down for this morning by a special vote at the last session.

Mr. TELLER. If it was set down for this day it will come up at 2 o'clock. This proceeding does not seem to be in accordance with any order we have heretofore made. I am not opposed to the bill so far as I understand it, but I have had no opportunity to look into the subject and to investigate it, to read the report or anything else relating to it. I was not aware that the bill would be called up to-day. I was not aware that the bill had been set down for to-day until the Senator from Massachusetts made the statement.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to debate? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRYE. Of course I do not wish to urge a bill upon the Senate where sufficient opportunity has not been given for its examination. But this matter is a very familiar one to the United States Senate. It has been discussed over and over again, session after session. A special committee was appointed in the early part of the last session to consider the President's message touching the Pacific railroads and the indebtedness of the companies to the United States. That committee devoted its time, all that it could spare, to the investigation. It gave thorough attention and examination to the subject committed to it. Long before the close of the session it came to a definite conclusion, and a unanimous conclusion, as to one of those railroads, the Union Pacific and the Central Branch. It found that the Union and Central roads proper could not be connected; that it was impossible from the difference in the conditions and the propositions of the respective corporations. Therefore it reported a bill touching only the Union Pacific and Central Branch. It reported that bill unanimously. The report was made in writing, and was printed as many as four months ago. It was printed July 31, 1888.

A special order was made of this bill for 2 o'clock to-day, but notice was given by the Senator from Iowa that he would call up the tariff bill at 2 o'clock. It seemed to me that this bill could be disposed of in four or five morning hours, there being but little routine business now to be attended to, and it looks as if it was my duty to insist upon the motion which I made, and which I gave notice yesterday I would make to-day. I do not see now any reason why I ought not to insist upon the motion, of course taking the direction of the Senate in relation to it.

Mr. PLUMB. This is, I think, fully as much a question of private interest as of public interest. The debt which it is proposed to adjust does not mature for about nine years. I think I can conceive that in the present temper of the public mind, and in view of some promises which have been rather recently made, more obligation rests upon the Senate to discharge the public business which is before it, and which has been more or less at issue during the recent campaign, than to take up any matter of private concern.

The Senator from Maine, I think, is mistaken in his estimate that four or five morning hours will dispose of this measure. It is one which, in my judgment, will require a great deal of debate. Without in any way saying what may become of the bill, it will be found, I think, to be one of rather more importance than he seems to suppose; that is to say, of importance in a direction which he does not appear to have taken into account.

I therefore think that if there is any spare time between now and 2 o'clock, at which hour, I understand, the Senator from Iowa will call up the tariff bill, it would be as well to anticipate that time and take up the tariff bill now.

Mr. FRYE. I am entirely willing to have a reassignment of this bill, if the Senate will consent, for one week from to-day. That will give time for Senators to examine the reports and the bill, etc. If that will satisfy the Senate I will consent to do it and ask that the bill be made the regular order after the routine business in the morning for Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent——

Mr. PLUMB. I shall object, Mr. President.

Mr. FRYE. I move, then, that the bill be made a special order for Tuesday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that Senate bill 3401 be made the special order for Tuesday, December 11, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire as a matter of parliamentary law, the bill being now a special order under the order of the Senate, whether a simple motion to postpone it until Tuesday next would not effect the purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the motions would be equivalent to each other; that a motion to postpone would have the same effect as a motion to make the bill a special order.

Mr. HOAR. The distinction, if the Chair pleases, is this, that an original motion to make a special order requires a two-thirds vote, while a motion to postpone a special order from day to day only requires a majority vote. That is the point I had in my mind when I made the inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that the consideration of this bill having been assigned for 2 o'clock to-day it can not be proceeded with now except by a vote; and the bill not having been taken up, the Chair is of opinion that a motion to postpone it at this time or to make it a special order for Tuesday week is not in order.

Mr. FRYE. Then the objection made by the Senator from Kansas prevails.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Until 2 o'clock. The Chair is of opinion that the motion can not be made now, nor until after the bill is taken up.

Mr. FRYE. I withdraw my motion now, and will renew it at 2 o'clock.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 9051.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, being in order, the Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

Mr. ALLISON. When this bill was under consideration in October last there was an understanding respecting the reading of the bill and amendment, and the method of consideration. I do not remember precisely the details of the understanding. I presume it can be ascertained by referring to the Journal. I know the first or formal reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The understanding, as the Chair recalls it, was that the bill from the House of Representatives was not to be read formally, but that the reading was to proceed upon the substitute reported by the Senate Committee on Finance.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the clerks refer to the Journal. I should be glad to know just what was the exact order made at that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chief Clerk will read the entry in the Journal bearing upon the subject.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

On motion by Mr. ALLISON,
The Senate proceeded to consider, as in Committee of the Whole, the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue; and,
On motion by Mr. ALLISON, and by unanimous consent,
Ordered, That the part proposed to be inserted in the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance be first considered.
Pending debate,
On motion by Mr. COKE,
The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business, etc.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that all?

Mr. COCKRELL. There was no agreement at all, then.

Mr. ALLISON. There was a further agreement respecting the consideration of the bill by paragraphs, as I remember.

Mr. HOAR. The RECORD will show.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To ascertain the agreement that was made in that particular, reference to the RECORD would be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. It is manifest that it is not necessary to read all at once the entire substitute reported, which would take a day or two; and unless unanimous consent has already been given, I ask now unanimous consent that the substitute may be read for amendment by paragraphs and sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the substitute reported by the Senate Committee on Finance may be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. By paragraphs and sections—as to the detail of the tariff sections by paragraphs, and as to the remaining portion of the measure by sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the substitute may be read by paragraphs and sections for amendment, the first formal reading at length being waived.

Mr. VANCE. Is it not more in order to have it read for information first, and then by paragraphs for amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the usual order. The Senator from Iowa asks that that order may be changed, that the formal reading may be waived and that the substitute be read by paragraphs and sections for amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I shall object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina objects. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance. Having read the first and second paragraphs of the proposed section 1—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will be suspended. The proceeding relative to this bill, which occurred on the 8th of October last, and as found printed in the RECORD of the 9th of October, will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.
The motion was agreed to.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.
Mr. ALLISON. As this is a long bill and the Senate is familiar with its provisions, at least with those of the original House bill, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the bill at length may be dispensed with, and that as the substitute is read it may be open to amendment; that is to say, that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.
Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Iowa if there is any objection to having the measure printed in the RECORD?
Mr. HARRIS. It has been printed in the RECORD, I think.
Mr. ALLISON. No, it has not been printed in the RECORD.
Mr. MORGAN. Not the bill.
Mr. HARRIS. The reports were printed in the RECORD.
Mr. ALLISON. Is it proposed that both the bill and the substitute be printed in the RECORD?
Mr. HARRIS. I suppose there is no objection to so printing the bill and amendment, if the Senator suggests it.
Mr. MORGAN. Yes, I make that suggestion. My purpose, of course, is to get the amendment of the Senate Committee on Finance before the country. The bill itself has been before the country. It is a House bill, and has been printed, I believe, in various forms. I have no objection to the bill going in. My request, though, was as to the amendment.
Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection certainly to the amendment being printed in the RECORD.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment of the Committee on Finance will be printed in the RECORD.
Mr. HARRIS. If either is printed in the RECORD, let the bill and amendment both be printed.
Mr. BUTLER. I was about to suggest that, Mr. President.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill and the amendment reported by the Committee on Finance will be printed in the RECORD. It is so ordered.
The bill is as follows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then follows the print of the bill and amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. From the proceedings as read at the Secretary's desk it certainly would be open to question whether the order I asked for at that time would include the omission of the formal reading of the substitute; but it was my intention at the time to dispense not only with the reading of the original bill, but also with the formal reading of the substitute. The object, I think, of my suggestion is clear, from the fact that I asked that as the substitute was read it might be open to amendment. It was, of course, my intention that the formal reading of the substitute should be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the request of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, it seems to me, with all deference to the Senator from North Carolina, unless there is express information on the subject, unanimous consent has already been given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If that was a continuing order, not interrupted by the adjournment of the Senate, the Chair would hold that undoubtedly the formal reading had been waived.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make an inquiry. I inquire whether the bill will not be open to amendment after it has been read through in detail.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the uniform practice of the Senate it will be.

Mr. SHERMAN. So, I take it, if the Senator from North Carolina wishes, as I understand him to wish, to have the substitute open to amendment, amendments to be offered by any member of the Senate after it has been read in detail, he has that right under the general rules of the Senate, and even if the bill has been gone through and has been subject to amendment by detail and by paragraphs and sections, after that has been concluded in Committee of the Whole, it is still open to any amendments that may be offered.

Mr. VANCE. It did not occur to me when I objected to the reading of the substitute for amendment by sections that unanimous consent had been given in the closing days of the last session to waive the formal reading of the measure at length.

I wish to say that on this side of the Chamber we are not prepared to go on immediately with the measure by sections, amending it as we go on; and if we were to go on with it now it would necessitate our going back to propose amendments to such parts as may have been passed over.

I suggest, with a view really to saving time, that a postponement of the bill be made until this time to-morrow, when the Democratic members of the Finance Committee will try to be ready with their amendments and go on regularly with the bill. If we were to go on now it would necessitate our going back again, which would occupy more time and introduce more confusion into the consideration of the measure than if the bill were suffered to go over to-day and be taken up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow at 2 o'clock. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. If the bill is to be postponed until to-morrow—and of course I do not wish to press it unduly—I suggest to Senators that we take it up immediately after the morning business to-morrow. With that understanding, and with the further understanding that the substitute shall then be read for amendment, and amendments shall then be offered if any are to be moved, I am willing that it may go over until to-morrow, in deference to wishes of Senators on the other side.

Mr. VANCE. That would be agreeable to me.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Does the Senator from Iowa propose after passing over a paragraph, that the right to amend a paragraph which has been passed over shall be cut off by this agreement?

Mr. ALLISON. It is not so intended, nor so desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, then, the consideration of the bill is postponed until to-morrow at the close of the routine morning business, when it will be resumed and considered by paragraphs and sections, the formal reading of the substitute being waived.

The Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1996, a bill (H. R. 5080) for the relief of C. B. Wilson.

Mr. SHERMAN. I doubt whether we shall make any progress to-day, and therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 5, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 4, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. C. N. BRUMM, of Pennsylvania;
Mr. WILLIAM D. BYNUM, of Indiana;
Mr. G. W. CROUSE, of Ohio;
Mr. ASHBEL P. FITCH, of New York;
Mr. M. T. GRANGER, of Connecticut;
Mr. T. D. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina;
Mr. W. H. MARTIN, of Texas;
Mr. J. L. MACDONALD, of Minnesota;
Mr. J. MCKENNA, of California;
Mr. R. J. VANCE, of Connecticut;
Mr. T. S. WILKINSON, of Louisiana; and
Mr. JACOB YOST, of Virginia.

ANNUAL REPORT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

REFUND OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the refund of customs duties for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the contingent expenses of that Department for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENTS TO INFORMERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting report of payments made to informers and seizing officers under the customs-revenue laws for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency to the second session of the Fiftieth Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIM, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, with a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, a report of the surveyor-general for New Mexico on the private land claim numbered 156; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENSES OF PROPAGATION OF FOOD FISHES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, transmitting statement of expenditures for the propagation of food fishes for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION, PUBLIC SCHOOL TEACHERS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners for the District of Columbia, transmitting an exhibit showing the compensation paid to each teacher of the public schools of the District of Columbia for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Chief of Engineers, transmitting a report relative to the construction of the building for the Library of Congress under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act, approved October 2, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INVENTORY OF PROPERTY, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of the property of the United States in the possession of the Clerk of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

PROPERTY IN CHARGE OF THE DOORKEEPER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, transmitting a statement of property in charge of the Doorkeeper belonging to the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

SALES OF WASTE PAPER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, showing sales of waste paper in his department since the commencement of the first session of the Fiftieth Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STRUBLE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LAFFOON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. FULLER, for ten days, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CARLTON, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. CLARDY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be also granted for ten days to my colleague, Mr. CONGER.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ADDITIONAL MESSENGER, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be authorized to appoint one additional messenger, who shall also act as night watchman, at a salary of $100 per month during the remainder of this session; said messenger to be assigned to duty with the committees of the House of Representatives located in the Butler Building, and who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

TESTIMONY, ALASKA SEAL FISHERIES.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have leave to print the evidence taken by that committee in the investigation regarding the seal fisheries of Alaska.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SESSIONS OF COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to offer the resolution I send to the desk, and to ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations, and its subcommittees, have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

PURCHASE OF REAL ESTATE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TAULBEE, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Whereas it is stated in certain newspapers that the commissioners of the District of Columbia have in recent purchases of real estate within and for the use of the District of Columbia paid to and through certain agents, appointed or employed by them, prices above that asked or received by the vendees or owners of such property, contrary to law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a special committee of five members to investigate the matter, and report to the House in writing.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that to-day be regarded as Monday, and that the States and Territories be called for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

Mr. DINGLEY. I object for the present. An order has been specially assigned for to-day.

SECOND ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MCRAE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11620) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask to have printed in the RECORD, without the names, the petition which I send to the Clerk's desk. It is a petition of the citizens of North Dakota asking for the immediate admission of South Dakota and Montana, and for constitutional conventions in North Dakota, Washington, and New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Territories, and be printed in the RECORD.

The petition is as follows:

NORTH DAKOTA STATEHOOD LEAGUE.

To Hon. Grover Cleveland, President, and to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

We, the undersigned citizens and electors of North Dakota, respectfully represent that the best interests of the country, and especially of the Territories, require the immediate admission of all the States formed from Territories now ready for admission into the Union, and the speedy formation of State constitutions for the remainder, including North Dakota, Washington, and New Mexico. We therefore pray that the President may recommend the admission of South Dakota and Montana under their constitutions, and that the Fiftieth Congress forthwith admit the same, and provide for constitutional conventions in North Dakota, and the other Territories, in harmony with the ordinance of 1787, and a long line of precedents; and they will ever pray.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 234) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL KNOX.

Mr. DINGLEY. At the last session a special assignment was made for to-day of Senate bill No. 449, for the erection of a monument to Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, at Thomaston, Me. Subsequently, in my absence, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] entered a motion to reconsider the special assignment, which is a privileged question before the House; and I now move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. COX. What is the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. For the erection of a monument to Maj. Gen. Henry Knox.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, is that the regular order?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged motion. The rule expressly provides that after six days shall have elapsed from the time when a motion to reconsider was entered any member may call it up as a privileged motion.

Mr. KILGORE. I desire to submit a point of order upon the order made at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KILGORE. The rule provides that any measure contemplating an appropriation of money must be considered in Committee of the Whole. I take it that that rule can be dispensed with; but the rule also provides that no change in the rule can be made except upon one day's notice thereof. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] asked unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill S. 449, and assign the 4th day of December for the consideration of that bill. Now, I take it that it was competent for the House to assign the 4th day of December for the consideration of that bill; but it was not competent for the House to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the consideration of the bill. That is the point I make.

The SPEAKER. Even if an order to assign a bill for consideration on a certain day is considered as a change of the rules of the House which would require one day's notice, still the House by unanimous consent can dispense with that one day's notice, and that was what was done on the occasion to which the gentleman has referred. This order was made by unanimous consent of the House, and no objection was offered by any member on the floor, so that the Chair thinks the objection is too late now.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand the motion now is to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and that that motion is not debatable. This is a measure to appropriate $25,000 to build a monument to the memory of Major-General Knox, at Thomaston, Me. Will not the bill have to be considered?

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read if it is taken up by the House. But the question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. What was the original motion?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 449) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, at Thomaston, Me.

The SPEAKER. By an order made at the last session this bill was set for consideration on this day, and after that, and within the time prescribed by the rules, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] entered a motion to reconsider that order. That is the motion which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] now moves to lay on the table.

Mr. KILGORE. Can the bill be read?

The SPEAKER. It can be read by unanimous consent. The House is not now called to vote upon the bill, but to vote on the motion to lay on the table.

The question was put; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 86, noes 42.

Mr. KILGORE. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. We may as well have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 125, nays 53, not voting 146; as follows:

YEAS—125.

Adams,	Cutcheon,	Hunter,	Romeis,
Allen, Mass.	Dalzell,	Jackson,	Rowell,
Allen, Mich.	Davis,	Johnston, Ind.	Russell, Conn.
Atkinson,	De Lano,	Jones,	Ryan,
Bacon,	Dibble,	Kean,	Scull,
Baker, N. Y.	Dingley,	Kelley,	Seymour,
Baker, Ill.	Dorsey,	Ketcham,	Sherman,
Bayne,	Dunham,	La Follette,	Sowden,
Biggs,	Farquhar,	Laidlaw,	Spinola,
Bliss,	Felton,	Lehlbach,	Stephenson,
Boothman,	Finley,	Lodge,	Stewart, Vt.
Bound,	Flood,	Long,	Taulbee,
Boutelle,	Foran,	McAdoo,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Bowen,	Ford,	McComas,	Thomas, Ky.
Brewer,	Gallinger,	McCormick,	Thomas, Ill.
Browne, Ind.	Gear,	McKenna,	Thomas, Wis.
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gest,	McKinley,	Thompson, Ohio
Buchanan,	Grimes,	Moffitt,	Tracey,
Burrows,	Grosvenor,	Morrill,	Turner, Kans.
Butler,	Grout,	Morrow,	Vandever,
Bynum,	Harmer,	Nelson,	Warner,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Haugen,	Nichols,	Weber,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hayden,	Nutting,	White, N. Y.
Cannon,	Henderson, Iowa	O'Donnell,	Whiting, Mass.
Caruth,	Hermann,	O'Neill, Pa.	Wilkins,
Caswell,	Hiestand,	Osborne,	Wilkinson,
Catchings,	Hires,	Patton,	Williams,
Clark,	Holmes,	Payson,	Yardley,
Cogswell,	Hopkins, Va.	Penington,	Yost.
Cox,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Peters,
Crouse,	Houk,	Reed,
Cummings,	Hovey,	Rockwell,

NAYS—53.

Abbott,	Dargan,	McMillin,	Stewart, Ga
Allen, Miss.	Dockery,	McRae,	Stone, Ky.
Anderson, Ill.	Elliott,	Neal,	Thompson, Cal.
Bankhead,	Granger,	Oates,	Tillman,
Barry,	Henderson, N. C.	Outhwaite,	Turner, Ga.
Blanchard,	Herbert,	Peel,	Walker,
Bland,	Holman,	Rayner,	Washington,
Blount,	Howard,	Richardson,	Weaver,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Johnston, N. C.	Rowland,	Wheeler,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Lane,	Sayers,	Wilson, Minn.
Bryce,	Lanham,	Shaw,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cobb,	Latham,	Shively,
Cowles,	Martin,	Smith,
Crisp,	McCreary,	Springer,

NOT VOTING—146.

Anderson, Iowa	Dougherty,	Landes,	Post,
Anderson, Miss.	Dunn,	Lawler,	Pugsley,
Anderson, Kans.	Enloe,	Lee,	Randall,
Arnold,	Ermentrout,	Lind,	Rice,
Barnes,	Fisher,	Lyman,	Robertson,
Belden,	Fitch,	Lynch,	Rogers,
Belmont,	Forney,	Macdonald,	Russell, Mass.
Bingham,	French,	Maffett,	Rusk,
Bowden,	Fuller,	Mahoney,	Sawyer,
Brower,	Funston,	Maish,	Scott,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gaines,	Mansur,	Seney,
Brown, Ohio	Gay,	Mason,	Simmons,
Brumm,	Gibson,	Matson,	Snyder,
Buckalew,	Glass,	McClammy,	Spooner,
Bunnell,	Glover,	McCullogh,	Stahlnecker,
Burnes,	Goff,	McKinney,	Steele,
Burnett,	Greenman,	McShane,	Stewart, Tex.
Butterworth,	Guenther,	Merriman,	Stockdale,
Campbell, Ohio,	Hall,	Milliken,	Stone, Mo.
Candler,	Hare,	Mills,	Struble,
Carlton,	Hatch,	Montgomery,	Symes,
Cheadle,	Hayes,	Moore,	Tarsney,
Chipman,	Heard,	Morgan,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Clardy,	Hemphill,	Morse,	Townshend,
Clements,	Henderson, Ill.	Newton,	Vance,
Cockran,	Hitt,	Norwood,	Wade,
Collins,	Hogg,	O'Ferrall,	West,
Compton,	Hooker,	O'Neall, Ind.	White, Ind.
Conger,	Hopkins, Ill.	O'Neill, Mo.	Whiting, Mich.
Cooper,	Hudd,	Owen,	Whitthorne,
Cothran,	Hutton,	Parker,	Wickham,
Crain,	Kennedy,	Perkins,	Wilber,
Culberson,	Kerr,	Perry,	Wise,
Darlington,	Kilgore,	Phelan,	Woodburn,
Davenport,	Laffoon,	Phelps,	Yoder.
Davidson, Ala.	Lagan,	Pidcock,
Davidson, Fla.	Laird,	Plumb,

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. WHEELER, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

Mr. RICHARDSON. My colleague [Mr. WHITTHORNE] is detained at home by illness.

The following members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. BARNES with Mr. COOPER.
Mr. BURNES with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.
Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. STRUBLE.
Mr. MOORE with Mr. WICKHAM.
Mr. CARLTON with Mr. SAWYER.
Mr. WHITTHORNE with Mr. WHITE, of Indiana.
Mr. MERRIMAN with Mr. WILBER.
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. CHEADLE.
Mr. COTHRAN with Mr. BROWN, of Ohio.
Mr. PERRY with Mr. BELDEN.
Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. FUNSTON.
Mr. MORGAN with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. HATCH with Mr. SPOONER.
Mr. SENEY with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR, for this day.
Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill (S. 449) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox at Thomaston, Me.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to raise that question. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill has not been read, I believe.

The SPEAKER. It will be read, if there be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. KILGORE. Does the reading of the bill interfere with my raising the question of consideration? If so, I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. It does not. The rule provides that whenever the reading of any paper upon which the House is not then called to take a final vote is demanded and objected to the House shall determine whether it shall be read or not; but there was no objection to the request for the reading of this bill, and the reading will not interfere at all with the question of consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox at Thomaston, Me., and for grading and inclosing with stone curbing and iron fencing the lot upon which said monument shall be erected, which sum shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, or such officer as he may designate: Provided, That the money hereby appropriated shall be drawn from time to time only as may be required during the progress of the work, and upon the requisition of the Secretary of War: And provided further, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be so expended until a suitable lot at Thomaston, Me., for the erection of said monument shall be conveyed, with all the right, title, and interest therein of the owner thereof, to the United States, and the deed duly recorded, and the town of Thomaston shall have provided for public use an open highway thereto.

SEC. 2. That this act shall be in force from its passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of this bill?

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 89, noes 30.

Mr. KILGORE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. KILGORE (before the completion of the count). Mr. Speaker, I am willing to abandon the point of no quorum with the understanding that we shall have half an hour on each side for the discussion of this question, and that we shall have the yeas and nays on the question of ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the tellers report—ayes 93, noes 5. The ayes have it, and the House determines to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a Senate bill which has been unanimously reported by the House Committee on the Library. It appropriates $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, of Revolutionary fame, and provides that this monument shall be erected in the town in which his remains are buried and where he resided after he retired from the position of Secretary of War. The bill also provides that the town of Thomaston shall first convey to the United States a suitable site for the erection of the monument.

Among the distinguished generals who led the Continental army, under the immediate direction of Washington, and achieved our national independence, none is entitled to have his memory held in higher esteem than Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, the trusted artillery leader and associate of Washington, and his Secretary of War and of the Navy when the "Father of his Country" was called to the Presidency.

Born in Boston July 25, 1750, of Scotch and Irish stock, Knox, though a young man of only twenty-four, came prominently into notice in 1774 as one of the patriot leaders. When war was inevitable he joined the ranks of the patriot militia, notwithstanding the opposition of his wife's relatives, who were prominent Tories. The night before the battle of Bunker Hill, young Knox, accompanied by his wife, who sympathized with the American cause, and who concealed his weapons in the lining of her garments, escaped from Boston, then garrisoned by the British troops, and joined the patriot forces. Although not in commission, Knox took a conspicuous part in the battle of Bunker Hill as an aid to General Ward.

Immediately after the battle Knox was recognized as one of the most efficient officers in the Continental army which invested Boston. When Washington took command, his skill as an engineer in planning fortifications and as an artillerist in placing his guns, attracted the attention of the commander-in-chief, and from that time to the end of the war Washington trusted to Knox's military skill and sagacity more than to any other officer associated with him.

The first mission which Washington intrusted to Knox was that of procuring artillery from Ticonderoga to place in the works which he had constructed for the investment of Boston. In the winter of 1775–'76 Knox brought from far-off Ticonderoga to Boston, over rugged mountains, through unbroken forests, and over frozen rivers and swamps, eight brass and six iron mortars, two iron howitzers, thirteen brass and twenty-six iron cannon, 2,300 pounds of lead, and a barrel of flints.

When Knox accomplished his difficult mission so successfully and rejoined the army at Cambridge, Washington appointed him to the chief command of the artillery of the Continental army. This position he filled with so great success that he was promoted from colonel to brigadier-general, and long before the war closed was made a major-general.

Knox was actively engaged in the New Jersey campaign, having charge of the artillery in the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Germantown, Monmouth, and Brandywine. He shared with Washington the hardships and anxieties of that terrible winter at Valley Forge. After the battle of Monmouth, Knox was specially thanked by Washington for the ability with which he had handled his artillery.

Irving gives a picture of the patriot camp at Morristown and of Washington with his three trusted generals, Greene, Sullivan, and "brave, genial, generous Knox, never so happy as when by his side." Knox was in the grand battery near Washington at the siege of Yorktown, and was selected by the commanding general to receive the sword of Cornwallis. To Knox was given the delicate and difficult task of disbanding the American army at West Point at the successful close of the war for independence—a duty which he performed with such consummate tact and skill as to receive the thanks of the American people. After the farewell address of Washington it was Knox who moved the resolution of thanks, and it was Knox who received the first farewell embrace.

In 1784 Knox was appointed by Congress Secretary of War under the Confederation. When the new government was inaugurated under the Constitution, Washington called to his assistance his trusted friend, General Knox, who was appointed Secretary of War and charged with the duty of laying the foundations for a navy. When Washington was inaugurated for a second time, in 1793, he continued Knox in his position as Secretary of War and Navy. In 1795, after eleven years of service in this important position, during which time he laid the foundations of a navy as well as an army, Knox retired from public life and moved to Thomaston, Me., to manage an estate, into the possession of which he had come by purchase and through inheritance by his wife.

At Thomaston he erected a fine mansion, where he received the visits of Talleyrand, Louis Philippe, and other noted men, dispensed generous hospitality, and entered upon large business operations. Here, in the midst of his usefulness, beloved by his neighbors and friends, and held in honor by a grateful country, Knox died suddenly October 25, 1806. He was buried October 28 with military honors near his mansion, but his remains were subsequently removed to the handsome village cemetery, where they now lie.

Congress has appropriately recognized the obligation of the people of the United States to do honor to the memory of the patriotic leaders whose services on the battle-field achieved the independence of the United States. The monuments and memorials which have been erected in the national capital, or on the field where their most conspicuous services were rendered, or in the places where they lived and died, are not only a just recognition of the valuable services of the patriot dead, but also a conspicuous incitement to those who come after them to emulate their patriotism and fidelity.

Judged by the importance of his services in the war for independence, by the high esteem in which he was held by the Father of his Country, and by his prominence in the work of organizing the Army and Navy under the Confederation and under the Presidency of Washington—at once soldier and statesman—it would be difficult to name a Revolutionary hero, after Washington, more deserving to have his memory perpetuated by an appropriate monument than General Knox.

Undoubtedly in due time a statue of Knox will be placed in Statuary Hall, in this Capitol, by the State of Maine, in which district Knox spent the closing years of his life and with whose interests he was closely identified.

But it is fitting that the Republic in whose creation he bore so conspicuous a part should erect in the beautiful village where General Knox lived and died, and where his remains now repose, an appropriate memorial which shall not only give expression to the nation's gratitude for the services of Washington's most trusted commander, counselor, and Cabinet officer in the creation and organization of the United States, but which also shall serve to impress upon every citizen who stands on the soil where the remains of this foremost hero of the Revolution rest the deep and abiding conviction—so essential to the development of patriotism—that the nation will not forget the services rendered by the brave leaders who struggled so long and so hard to secure her independence.

Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to give my friend from Texas [Mr. KILGORE], who is opposed to this bill, the control of half an hour's time in opposition to the measure. I now yield to him thirty minutes to use as he may see fit.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to concede everything said by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] in praise of Major-General Knox and in commendation of the great services rendered the country by him during the Revolutionary war. I am willing to concede that he was a very distinguished soldier and one of the greatest and purest patriots of that period. But I am not willing to admit that he and his reputation and his patriotism and his great services to the cause of liberty, taken all together, are superior to the Constitution of the United States.

I have investigated this subject, have taken the pains to look into it with some care, and have never yet been able to find a single clause or sentence or line in the Constitution of the United States authorizing Congress to enact legislation of this character. If my distinguished friend from Maine can enlighten me and the House and the country on this branch of this important and interesting question it will afford me great pleasure to listen to him. Whenever objection to such legislation is urged on the ground that there is no constitutional authority for it the invariable answer is that there are precedents for it; that Congress has on some former occasion passed laws of a similar nature. This is deemed a conclusive answer by the advocates of such measures, who are ever quoting precedents and never quoting the Constitution.

I take it there are precedents for bills like this; in fact, precedent can perhaps be found somewhere in the history of the legislation of this country for almost any scheme that it ever entered into the mind of man to conceive. But it ought not to be necessary for me to suggest to this House that Congress does not derive its authority from precedent. If this is a government of limited power, the limitation on its authority must be contained in the Constitution of the United States, and it is to that instrument we must look as furnishing the only guide for action by Congress. It is true, in construing or interpreting a doubtful clause in the organic law of the land, a line of precedent in one direction, concurred in by the whole country, would probably be sufficient to determine the meaning of such clause.

If Congress can, by piling up vicious precedents one upon another, acquire authority not specifically granted by the Constitution, can enact laws wholly unauthorized by the Constitution, then this is no longer a Government of limited power and there is no restraint upon Federal legislation and no protection to the people in whose interest the Constitution was formed. The Constitution could, according to this theory, be utterly subverted by the legislative department of the Government.

I send to the Clerk's desk this morning's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and ask that the Clerk read the marked paragraphs in the admirable message sent to Congress on yesterday by the President. They are peculiarly pertinent to questions such as are now before this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The people must still be taxed for the support of the Government under the operation of tariff laws. But to the extent that the mass of our citizens are inordinately burdened beyond any useful public purpose, and for the benefit of a favored few, the Government, under pretext of an exercise of its taxing power, enters gratuitously into partnership with these favorites, to their advantage and to the injury of a vast majority of our people.

The necessity of the reduction of our revenue is so apparent as to be generally conceded. But the means by which this end shall be accomplished and the sum of direct benefit which shall result to our citizens present a controversy of the utmost importance. There should be no scheme accepted as satisfactory by which the burdens of the people are only apparently removed. Extravagant appropriations of public money, with all their demoralizing consequences, should not be tolerated, either as a means of relieving the Treasury of its present surplus or as furnishing pretext for resisting a proper reduction in tariff rates. Existing evils and injustice should be honestly recognized, boldly met, and effectively remedied. There should be no cessation of the struggle until a plan is perfected, fair and conservative toward existing industries, but which will reduce the cost to consumers of the necessaries of life, while it provides for our manufacturers the advantage of freer raw materials and permits no injury to the interests of American labor.

The cause for which the battle is waged is comprised within lines clearly and distinctly defined. It should never be compromised. It is the people's cause.

It can not be denied that the selfish and private interests which are so persistently heard, when efforts are made to deal in a just and comprehensive manner with our tariff laws, are related to, if they are not responsible for, the sentiment largely prevailing among the people that the General Government is the fountain of individual and private aid; that it may be expected to relieve with paternal care the distress of citizens and communities, and that from the fullness of its Treasury it should, upon the slightest possible pretext of promoting the general good, apply public funds to the benefit of localities and individuals. Nor can it be denied that there is a growing assumption that, as against the Government and in favor of private claims and interests, the usual rules and limitations of business principles and just dealing should be waived.

These ideas have been unhappily much encouraged by legislative acquiescence. Relief from contracts made with the Government is too easily accorded in favor of the citizen; the failure to support claims against the Government by proof is often supplied by no better consideration than the wealth of the Government and the poverty of the claimant; gratuities in the form of pensions are granted upon no other real ground than the needy condition of the applicant, or for reasons less valid; and large sums are expended for public buildings and other improvements upon representations scarcely claimed to be related to public needs and necessities.

The extent to which the consideration of such matters subordinates and postpones action upon subjects of great public importance, but involving no special, private, or partisan interest, should arrest attention and lead to reformation.

* * * * * * *

Appropriation bills for the support of the Government are defaced by items and provisions to meet private ends, and it is freely asserted by responsible and experienced parties that a bill appropriating money for public internal improvement would fail to meet with favor, unless it contained items more for local and private advantage than for public benefit.

These statements can be much emphasized by an ascertainment of the proportion of Federal legislation, which either bears upon its face its private character, or which, upon examination, develops such a motive power.

* * * * * * *

This devotion will lead us to strongly resist all impatience of constitutional limitations of Federal power, and to persistently check the increasing tendency to extend the scope of Federal legislation into the domain of State and local jurisdiction, upon the plea of subserving the public welfare. The preservation of the partitions between proper subjects of Federal and local care and regulation is of such importance under the Constitution, which is the law of our very existence, that no consideration of expediency or sentiment should tempt us to enter upon doubtful ground. We have undertaken to discover and proclaim the richest blessings of a free Government, with the Constitution as our guide. Let us follow the way it points out. It will not mislead us. And surely no one who has taken upon himself the solemn obligation to support and preserve the Constitution can find justification or solace for disloyalty in the excuse that he wandered and disobeyed in search of a better way to reach the public welfare than the Constitution offers.

What has been said is deemed not inappropriate at a time when, from a century's height, we view the way already trod by the American people, and attempt to discover their future path.

The seventh President of the United States—the soldier and statesman, and at all times the firm and brave friend of the people—in vindication of his course as the protector of popular rights and the champion of true American citizenship declared:

"The ambition which leads me on is an anxious desire and a fixed determination to restore to the people, unimpaired, the sacred trust they have confided to my charge; to heal the wounds of the Constitution and to preserve it from further violation; to persuade my countrymen, so far as I may, that it is not in a splendid government supported by powerful monopolies and aristocratical establishments that they will find happiness, or their liberties protection, but in a plain system, void of pomp—protecting all and granting favors to none—dispensing its blessings like the dews of heaven, unseen and unfelt save in the freshness and beauty they contribute to produce. It is such a government that the genius of our people requires—such an one only under which our States may remain, for ages to come, united, prosperous, and free."

Mr. KILGORE. In my humble judgment this private legislation is the bane of this country and the greatest evil of the times. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, but this distinguished patriot of the American Revolution deserves a monument. It is entirely fit and proper that the memory of his great deeds should by perpetuated in that way. But I can not believe it is within the duty and the power of Congress to provide such monument. I do think Congress is exceeding its authority when it proposes to appropriate money wrung from the people by taxation to erect a monument in Maine, or Texas, or California, or elsewhere. It might be said with some plausibility that Congress could provide for such a monument in the District of Columbia.

Gentlemen who favor such legislation contend that ample authority therefor is found in that clause of the Constitution which declares that Congress shall have the power to lay and collect taxes, etc., "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States."

It can not be reasonably contended that the language which authorizes Congress to provide for the general welfare of the United States confers any power to enact laws such as are contemplated by this bill. If it does, then Congress can declare any legislation which the judgment of the majority may deem to be promotive of the "general welfare," and the judgment and discretion of Congress in such cases would afford the only limitation upon its power, and this is the same as no limitation at all.

The Constitution declares that Congress shall have authority to pass all laws necessary to carry into effect the power delegated to the Federal Government and all other power vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or office thereof. The will and discretion of Congress must therefore be subordinate to the limitation imposed by the great charter of our liberties.

All such legislation as that proposed by this bill is pernicious and dangerous because it is wholly unwarranted, and it certainly ought not to be indulged in by Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. But before he takes the floor I ask the right to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL. I object.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me this bill comes here under peculiar circumstances. Why has not the State of Maine, which seems to be so patriotic on this occasion, built this monument to the memory of this distinguished soldier when he died more than eighty years ago? I think we may reasonably suspect, inasmuch as the locality in which this distinguished soldier died has so long neglected his memory, that these people have failed for so many years to go down into their own pockets for the purpose of building a monument to the memory of one of their own distinguished patriots who died some ninety years ago—I think that the whole of the patriotism which is manifested for the memory of this distinguished patriot on this occasion is really more in the interest of an appropriation to adorn a town in the State of Maine than to perpetuate the memory of this distinguished Revolutionary soldier.

But, Mr. Speaker, while the extract from the President's annual message which has been read by the Clerk at the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] may have been good public policy, wise political economy, some time ago, yet we have recently learned in this country we are collecting money without costing any one a single cent; that the one hundred millions of surplus piled up in the Treasury is not a tax at all; that nobody is paying it; that the more we are taxed the richer we are getting. In that view of the question I do not know why gentlemen on the other side are so modest as merely to ask for $25,000 to erect this monument when they might as easily ask for an appropriation of $100,000, and especially——

Mr. BOUTELLE (interrupting). That must have been the speech the gentleman made in Missouri during the late campaign.

Mr. BLAND. And especially if it goes to the patriotic State of Maine, from which the honorable gentleman comes who desires to interrupt me. I do not see why that State should claim all the patriotism in this country and yet for eighty-odd years have refused or neglected to build a monument to one of its own distinguished soldiers, and which now comes here and asks on the part of Congress an appropriation of $25,000. The patriotism here is that kind of patriotism which seeks to ornament towns with monuments to the memory of men who died nearly a century ago, and whose memory has ever since been neglected by these latter-day patriots of Maine.

But, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, why should we object to this and talk of constitutional questions when we are told that the great public interest requires that we should tax the people in order to enrich them? Are we not raising money enough to-day, and ought we not to squander it on monuments or to get rid of it in any other way so as to make room for more taxation, because the more we are taxed, we have been told, the richer we are getting? That seems to have been settled as part of the public policy of the country.

I know, sir, that at the last session of Congress I made a good many—I will not say enemies on this floor, but I created a good deal of hard feeling on the part of members because I made objection to the erection of public buildings at various little hamlets throughout the country. I had the mistaken notion that the money collected for that purpose was a tax on the people; that they had to pay it; that every expenditure out of the public Treasury was at the cost of the taxation of the people; but I have since then learned that is all a mistake. That is all a mistake; and why not erect monuments? On the contrary, the higher the tax the richer the people are getting. Let us, therefore, build this monument. Let us erect public buildings everywhere. Let us appropriate for rivers and harbors. Let us build navies. Let us raise armies. Go it, boots! Dad pays the whole expense, and who cares for the outcome? [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KILGORE. I will now yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I have before me a list of the bills reported favorably for the purpose of erecting monuments in various States. They are twelve in number reported favorably, of which some five have passed the Senate. They are located in nine different States and in this District, and appropriate in the aggregate $275,000.

Now, it seems to me that this is going into the monument business rather at wholesale. It may be that every one of these objects is a proper one, but this long list shows the tendency toward increasing the demands on the public Treasury whenever any precedent therefor has been established. This list includes a monument in Ohio to the memory of William Henry Harrison; in Washington, to Zachary Taylor; in Pennsylvania, to the memory of the soldiers at Valley Forge; in North Carolina, to Nathaniel Greene; in Virginia, to Daniel Morgan; in Kentucky, to George Rogers Clark; in Massachusetts, to Joseph Warren; in Virginia, to the mother of Washington; in Maine, to Henry Knox; in New Jersey, a monument at Trenton; in Washington, a monument to John A. Logan; and a monument at Point Pleasant, W. Va.

How many may have been already provided for in the preceding Congresses I do not know; but there is not one whose name is on this list who is not a man of whom this country may well be proud and whose memory it might well appropriately honor. There is not one for whose memory the expenditure of the public money can not be just as well defended as for the distinguished hero and soldier whose monument is to be erected if this Senate bill shall become a law, and there are scores of others who are equally worthy as this list of heroes which I have read. If such men, Mr. Speaker, glorious as they were and as heroic as were their services to the cause of liberty in this country, as Daniel Morgan, Henry Knox, Nathaniel Greene, and William Henry Harrison are appropriate objects for the appropriation on the part of the National Government of moneys to erect monuments to their memory within the limits of their respective States, then how many more are there of the heroes of the war of the Revolution, the second war of independence, fought in 1812, and the war with Mexico, as well as in the late war, who are equally worthy of that distinguished honor and for whose memory similar sums should be expended.

I do not object to the erection of monuments in the city of Washington for proper purposes; nor have I objected to the National Government aiding in the erection of monuments where the States or localities themselves have come forward and given by private donation the bulk of the money to cover the expense, though that, I think, is a dangerous precedent; but if we enter, as we now propose to do in this particular case, upon this character of legislation, attention having been called to it and a contest having been made over it, it will become a precedent for all other expenditures of money for this purpose in all of the other States; for if Congress appropriates the sum of $25,000 as a donation to erect a monument in the State of Maine, all of the other States will claim an equal right to a similar appropriation. I do not object to it on the ground that it is a national tribute in honor of the distinguished soldier, General Knox; nor do I object to it because it is located in Maine, for I should make the same observations and interpose the same objections about any similar monument erected anywhere in America under similar circumstances, because it establishes a dangerous precedent; and if we go into it, where is it to end?

I have no desire to discuss any of the incidental questions which have been discussed to-day. I want to confine myself to the single observation made pertinent by this list to which I have referred, and to call particular attention to the fact that this case becomes now a precedent for all further action. If we pass the Senate bill it will be accepted as the purpose of Congress to erect handsome monuments in the various States to such heroes as those States may designate as worthy of that honor.

I am informed by my friend from New York [Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL] that there have been already a number of precedents, and I ask leave to append the list of such precedents furnished me by him; and I also append the list used by me. It is only, I apprehend, a partial list, but it is sufficient to illustrate the point I desire to make.

BILLS ON THE HOUSE CALENDAR FAVORABLY REPORTED.

H. R. 1740, William Henry Harrison (Ohio)	$20,000
H. R. 4381, Zachary Taylor (Washington)	35,000
H. R. 6146, Centennial and Memorial Association of Valley Forge (Pennsylvania)	25,000
H. R. 1704, Nathaniel Greene (North Carolina)	20,000
H. R. 1889, Daniel Morgan (Virginia)	25,000
S. 2267, George Rogers Clark (Kentucky)	25,000
S. 2392, Joseph Warren (Massachusetts)	15,000
S. 1211, Mary, mother of Washington (Virginia)	20,000
S. 449, Henry Knox (Maine)	25,000
S. 599, Trenton monument (New Jersey)	30,000
Res. 155, John A. Logan (Washington), and guns, etc	10,000
H. R. 6164, Point Pleasant (West Virginia)	25,000
Total	275,000

MONUMENTS.

Forty-sixth Congress.

Monument at Yorktown (volume 21, Laws, second session, page 163)	$20,000
Brigadier-General Herkimer, at Utica, N. Y. (volume 21, Laws, second session, page 163)	4,100

Forty-seventh Congress.

Newburgh, N. Y. (volume 22, Laws, first session, page 385)	$10,000
Same, for expenses, etc. (same volume, page 642)	25,000
Major-General the Baron de Kalb (volume 22, Laws, second session Forty-seventh Congress, page 421)	10,000

Forty-eighth Congress.

Burgoyne's surrender, Schuylerville, N. Y. (volume 23, Laws, second session Forty-eighth Congress, page 279)	$40,000
Baxter Springs, Kans., in memory of Union soldiers (same volume and page)	4,000

Forty-ninth Congress.

National monument at Plymouth, Mass. (volume 24, Laws, first session, page 18)	$15,000

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. KILGORE. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing at any considerable length the proposition now pending before the House, but more with the intention of entering my protest against this character of legislation. No man in America more highly reveres the memory of our Revolutionary heroes than I do. The gentleman from Maine himself, who presses this bill, has not a more profound regard for the memory of General Knox, who was both as general and statesman distinguished in the early period of our Revolution and Government, than I. But I do desire to enter a protest, humble though it be, against the policy of the Government of the United States going outside of its own territory, that is outside of the territory over which it has exclusive jurisdiction, and entering into the monument business within the limits of the States. If monuments are to be built, why not put at the country's capital?

How is it that patriotism never bubbled up until now? How is it that it has been left all these years for the distinguished gentleman from Maine at this late date to discover that to fail to contribute for the erection of this monument out of the United States Treasury would be an exhibition of a want of patriotism on the part of the representatives of the people? Will he claim that his own State has been too poor all these years to do it? I would think not. He will not insist that at no time in the past has there been the sum of $25,000 of surplus money in the treasury of his State, I assume. Then why come to Congress and ask to have the appropriation made here for the purpose of erecting a monument within the borders of his State? Why has his State refused so long to erect a monument if doing so was unpatriotic?

There were a few of us, if I may be permitted to illustrate my idea of how this kind of work should be done, that, since I have been a Representative in this Hall, conceived the idea of having a monument to one of Tennessee's most distinguished heroes, in fact her most distinguished military hero, General Jackson. After a conference with Clark Mills, the artist, we determined to try to get and did get a duplicate of the monument that stands to the memory of that great hero of New Orleans in the square in front of the White House. But, Mr. Speaker, it never entered into the minds of any one of us to undertake to burden the people of the United States with the expenditure for that work. We believed that it was a grander monument when erected by the love of his fellow-citizens, and placed there by their private contributions, than if paid for with the people's trust funds. The humblest monument that rears its head not six feet above the ground will be a more effective and a more admirable token of the esteem of the people than the most glittering and costly statue or colossal column that could be reared at the expense of the people in violation it may be of the Constitution, and certainly by questionable constitutional authority.

But if we erect a monument to the memory of General Knox, why should we not also erect a monument to every other distinguished Revolutionary hero? How is it that Jefferson, who participated in the Revolution; how is it that General Jackson, who was an humble soldier in the Revolution as well as a statesman afterwards; how is it that Madison, the father of the Constitution; how is it that Monroe, all of our greatest statesmen who were contemporaneous with the formation of the Government, never found it incumbent upon them to recommend to Congress while occupying the Presidential chair the erection of these and similar monuments in the different States of the Union?

It was probably because they doubted their authority to do it in the first place. They might still doubt the propriety of doing it in the second place. We may by such legislation as this have a glittering exterior; but we will have one from which the heart is gone. General Knox already has a monument to his memory by the side of which this little concern, costing $25,000, would be a disgrace. He has a monument in the hearts of the people, rising to the very skies, and to be seen for all time. [Applause.] Fortunately for him this immortal hero is not dependent upon the mortar and marble of a profligate period for his fame. Brighter than brass and more immortal than marble is the monument his immortal deeds make for him. [Applause.]

Mr. KILGORE. I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR].

Mr. MANSUR. As a great-grandson of one who fought in the war of the Revolution, I should feel it averse to my own inclination if I did not speak a word in favor of the erection of a monument to this most distinguished and worthy hero of the American Revolution. But before I conclude I shall offer as an amendment to the bill that the monument be erected in the city of Washington, instead of at Thomaston, Me.

This is the capital city of the nation, named after the great hero of that war. His countenance beams down upon every member from the canvas to the right of the Speaker; and it is but proper that the monuments and the pictures should adorn and maintain the fame of the great Washington, and that he should be surrounded in the capital of the nation with those who were his lieutenants in the glory of achieving the independence conferred upon our common country. From that standpoint it seems to me that it ought to be erected at this place rather than at the place where General Knox merely lived. Every person to-day who is a worthy citizen of this nation shares in the glory and the honor conferred by such men as Knox upon the country; and for this we have this as a precedent, that the nation has seen fit to erect here at the capital a monument in memory of Maj. Gen. Nathaniel Greene. I believe, when we remember that there are only about a dozen of them, that in this centennial year of our Constitution we can not do better than to erect a monument to each one of the major-generals of that period at the great capital city of the nation.

In regard to the fact that Jefferson and those other gentlemen, as stated by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] did not recommend monuments to the memory of these men, I will merely say that the Government at that time was weak, and under the burdens of taxation, which had been made necessary in the struggle for our liberties.

But now we are rich, and I am in favor of the erection of this monument in Washington, so that it will give to the people of the country everywhere an opportunity to look upon this monument when they come to the capital. And I appeal to gentlemen on the other side to waive the location of it and permit the bill to be so amended and have it erected here.

Personally, I do trust that the time will come when this city will be adorned by a statue to every one of the lieutenants of Washington who rose to the position of major-general in that great contest.

Furthermore, I would say to gentlemen on this floor that Knox was the favorite general of George Washington, and as such he ought to be commemorated in this city. I now move to amend the bill by striking out in the seventh line "Thomaston, Me.," and inserting "Washington, D. C.;" and strike out all after the words "Secretary of War," in the fourteenth line, and insert "it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to designate a place in some one of the public reservations in the city of Washington on which said monument shall be erected."

The SPEAKER. That is not in order now, unless the gentleman from Maine yields for that purpose.

Mr. DINGLEY. I do not yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] yielded thirty minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] for debate, not for amendments. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] has twenty-two minutes of his hour remaining.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, like my friend from Missouri who has just taken his seat, I am a grandson of one of the men who went through the seven years' struggle by which the liberties of our country were established. While I am not here for the purpose of giving votes for extravagant expenditures of any kind, when a case of this character arises which is to transmit to our children and our children's children for many generations to come that which will refresh in their memories the hardships, the privations, and the sufferings which those gallant men bore in order that this Republic might be created, I feel as though it was my duty, as an humble member of this House and one occupying a seat on this side of it, to give my vote in favor of such a measure.

And I appeal to gentlemen in the name of patriotism to let this bill pass in order that the memory of the dark days and of the suffering of the American army during the Revolution may be handed down to our children to refresh and renew their attachment to the institutions which were established by their courage and their sacrifices. I regret, sir, that I am not in a condition this morning to discuss this question as I would like to, but I can not let the opportunity pass without expressing my sentiments, and I hope and trust that when the time comes to take the vote it will be unanimous upon this side of the House in favor of the bill. During my term of service here I shall not vote for any extravagant appropriations for the construction of public buildings or for the improvement of rivers and harbors, nor for any other measures which would tap the Treasury improperly. But this bill is of a character that I shall always be found supporting, and there can be no question as to the right of the representatives of the people to make such an appropriation. As to the question why this monument was not erected before, if you read the history of the early days of the Republic you will find that jealousies existed then as they exist to-day, and that party spirit ran higher than it does now, and in that history you may find the question answered. In conclusion, I repeat, sir, that I shall give my vote for this measure.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I now demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. That will cut off the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] desires to offer.

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered it will, of course, cut off all debate and amendments.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] has used the half hour which was allowed for debate in opposition to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The time has been consumed.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] allow the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR] to be pending upon the demand for the previous question?

Mr. DINGLEY. I can not yield for that purpose.

The question was taken upon ordering the previous question; and there were—ayes 67, noes 29.

Mr. BLAND. No quorum.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the point of "no quorum" is made we may as well have the yeas and nays at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 46, not voting 166; as follows:

YEAS—112.

Adams,	Dalzell,	Hovey,	Patton,
Allen, Mass.	Dargan,	Howard,	Payson,
Anderson, Kans.	Davis,	Hunter,	Peters,
Atkinson,	De Lano,	Jackson,	Pugsley,
Baker, N. Y.	Dibble,	Johnston, Ind.	Reed,
Belden,	Dingley,	Kean,	Romeis,
Biggs,	Dorsey,	Kelley,	Rowell,
Bingham,	Dunham,	Ketcham,	Ryan,
Boothman,	Ermentrout,	La Follette,	Sherman,
Boutelle,	Farquhar,	Laidlaw,	Sowden,
Bowen,	Finley,	Lee,	Spinola,
Brewer,	Flood,	Lehlbach,	Stewart, Vt.
Browne, Ind.	Foran,	Long,	Taulbee,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gallinger,	McComas,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Buchanan,	Gear,	McCormick,	Thomas, Wis.
Burrows,	Gest,	McKenna,	Thompson, Ohio
Butler,	Grosvenor,	McKinley,	Tillman,
Butterworth,	Grout,	Milliken,	Turner, Kans.
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Harmer,	Mofflitt,	Vandever,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hayden,	Morrill,	Wade,
Caswell,	Heard,	Morrow,	Warner,
Chipman,	Henderson, Iowa	Nelson,	Weber,
Clark,	Hermann,	Nichols,	Whiting, Mass.
Cogswell,	Hiestand,	Nutting,	Wilkins,
Cox,	Hires,	O'Donnell,	Williams,
Crouse,	Hopkins, Ill.	O'Ferrall,	Yardley,
Cummings,	Hopkins, N. Y.	O'Neill, Pa.	Yoder,
Cutcheon,	Houk,	Osborne,	Yost.

NAYS—46.

Abbott,	Cowles,	Martin,	Sayers,
Allen, Mich.	Elliott,	Matson,	Springer,
Anderson, Ill.	Henderson, N. C.	McCreary,	Stewart, Ga.
Baker, Ill.	Herbert,	McMillin,	Stone, Ky.
Bankhead,	Holman,	McRae,	Turner, Ga.
Blount,	Hooker,	Moore,	Washington,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Hutton,	Neal,	Weaver,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Johnston, N. C.	Oates,	Wheeler,
Bynum,	Lane,	Outhwaite,	Wilson, Minn.
Campbell, Ohio	Lanham,	Penington,	Wilson, W. Va.
Clements,	Latham,	Richardson,
Cobb,	Maish,	Rowland,

NOT VOTING—166.

Allen, Miss.	Davidson, Fla.	Landes,	Russell, Mass.
Anderson, Iowa	Dockery,	Lawler,	Rusk,
Anderson, Miss.	Dougherty,	Lind,	Sawyer,
Arnold,	Dunn,	Lodge,	Scott,
Bacon,	Enloe,	Lyman,	Scull,
Barnes,	Felton,	Lynch,	Seney,
Barry,	Fisher,	Macdonald,	Seymour,
Bayne,	Fitch,	Maffett,	Shaw,
Belmont,	Ford,	Mahoney,	Shively,
Blanchard,	Forney,	Mansur,	Simmons,
Bland,	French,	Mason,	Smith,
Bliss,	Fuller,	McAdoo,	Snyder,
Bound,	Funston,	McClammy,	Spooner,
Bowden,	Gaines,	McCullogh,	Stahlnecker,
Brower,	Gay,	McKinney,	Steele,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gibson,	McShane,	Stephenson,
Brown, Ohio	Glass,	Merriman,	Stewart, Tex.
Brumm,	Glover,	Mills,	Stockdale,
Bryce,	Goff,	Montgomery,	Stone, Mo.
Buckalew,	Granger,	Morgan,	Struble,
Bunnell,	Greenman,	Morse,	Symes,
Burnes,	Grimes,	Newton,	Tarsney,
Burnett,	Guenther,	Norwood,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Candler,	Hall,	O'Neall, Ind.	Thomas, Ky.
Cannon,	Hare,	O'Neill, Mo.	Thomas, Ill.
Carlton,	Hatch,	Owen,	Thompson, Cal.
Caruth,	Haugen,	Parker,	Tracey,
Catchings,	Hayes,	Peel,	Townshend,
Cheadle,	Hemphill,	Perkins,	Vance,
Clardy,	Henderson, Ill.	Perry,	Walker,
Cockran,	Hitt,	Phelan,	West,
Collins,	Hogg,	Phelps,	White, Ind.
Compton,	Holmes,	Pidcock,	White, N. Y.
Conger,	Hopkins, Va.	Plumb,	Whiting, Mich.
Cooper,	Hudd,	Post,	Whitthorne,
Cothran,	Jones,	Randall,	Wickham,
Crain,	Kennedy,	Rayner,	Wilber,
Crisp,	Kerr,	Rice,	Wilkinson,
Culberson,	Kilgore,	Robertson,	Wise,
Darlington,	Laffoon,	Rockwell,	Woodburn.
Davenport,	Lagan,	Rogers,
Davidson, Ala.	Laird,	Russell, Conn.

No quorum voted.

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. BRUMM, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. GAINES, on all political questions until further notice.

Mr. GRANGER with Mr. ROCKWELL, on this vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCREARY). Upon this question the yeas are 112, and the nays are 46.

Mr. BLAND. The record discloses that no quorum has voted.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, it is very evident that there is a quorum present, if not on the floor, in the rooms surrounding it, and in order to test the question I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Anderson, Iowa	Davidson, Fla.	Howard,	Post,
Anderson, Miss.	Dougherty,	Kennedy,	Randall,
Arnold,	Dunn,	Laffoon,	Rayner,
Bacon,	Enloe,	Laird,	Rogers,
Barnes,	Fisher,	Landes,	Russell, Mass.
Barry,	Fitch,	Lind,	Scott,
Belmont,	Forney,	Lyman,	Simmons,
Blanchard,	Fuller,	Lynch,	Snyder,
Bowden,	Funston,	Maffett,	Spooner,
Brower,	Gaines,	Mahoney,	Stahlnecker,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Gay,	Mason,	Steele,
Brown, Ohio	Gibson,	McAdoo,	Stewart, Tex.
Buckalew,	Glass,	McClammy,	Stone, Mo.
Bunnell,	Glover,	McCullogh,	Struble,
Burnes,	Goff,	McShane,	Symes,
Burnett,	Granger,	Merriman,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Candler,	Greenman,	Montgomery,	Thomas, Ill.
Carlton,	Grout,	Morgan,	Townshend,
Cheadle,	Guenther,	Morse,	West,
Clardy,	Hall,	Newton,	Wheeler,
Cockran,	Hatch,	Norwood,	White, Ind.
Collins,	Haugen,	Nutting,	Whitthorne,
Compton,	Hayes,	O'Neall, Ind.	Wickham,
Conger,	Hemphill,	O'Neill, Mo.	Wilber,
Cooper,	Henderson, Ill.	Parker,	Williams,
Cothran,	Hires,	Perkins,	Wise,
Crain,	Hitt,	Perry,	Woodburn.
Culberson,	Hogg,	Phelan,
Davenport,	Hopkins, Ill.	Phelps,
Davidson, Ala.	Hovey,	Plumb,

Members absent on leave were as follows:

Mr. STRUBLE, Mr. ANDERSON of Iowa, Mr. LAFFOON, Mr. FULLER, Mr. CARLTON, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. CLARDY.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. LANDES, on account of death in his family.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCMILLIN). The Clerk reports as present 206 members, being more than a quorum. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House several requests for leave of absence.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROGERS, until Friday next.

To Mr. BARNES, for two days.

To Mr. MORGAN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important private business.

To Mr. ENLOE, on account of illness.

Mr. OATES. I desire to ask indefinite leave of absence for my colleague from Alabama, Mr. DAVIDSON, on account of important private business.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

Mr. DINGLEY. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the demand for the previous question on ordering the bill to a third reading. On this question the yeas and nays were ordered and taken, but no quorum voted. The roll will again be called.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 34, not voting 166; as follows:

YEAS—124.

Adams,	Cutcheon,	Hopkins, Va.	Pugsley,
Allen, Mass.	Dalzell,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Reed,
Anderson, Kans.	Dargan,	Houk,	Robertson,
Atkinson,	Darlington,	Howard,	Rockwell,
Baker, N. Y.	Davis,	Hunter,	Romeis,
Bayne,	De Lano,	Jackson,	Rowell,
Biggs,	Dibble,	Johnston, Ind.	Russell, Conn.
Bingham,	Dingley,	Kean,	Rusk,
Boothman,	Dorsey,	Kelley,	Scull,
Bound,	Dunham,	Ketcham,	Sherman,
Boutelle,	Farquhar,	La Follette,	Sowden,
Bowen,	Finley,	Lagan,	Spinola,
Brewer,	Flood,	Laidlaw,	Stephenson,
Browne, Ind.	Foran,	Lehlbach,	Stewart, Vt.
Brown, J. R., Va.	French,	Lodge,	Taulbee,
Brumm,	Gallinger,	Long,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Bryce,	Gear,	McComas,	Thomas, Ky.
Buchanan,	Gest,	McKenna,	Thomas, Wis.
Burrows,	Grimes,	Mofflitt,	Thompson, Ohio
Butler,	Grosvenor,	Morrill,	Thompson, Cal.
Butterworth,	Grout,	Morrow,	Tillman,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Harmer,	Nichols,	Tracey,
Campbell, Ohio	Haugen,	O'Donnell,	Vandever,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hayden,	O'Ferrall,	Wade,
Caruth,	Heard,	O'Neill, Pa.	Warner,
Chipman,	Henderson, Iowa	Osborne,	Weber,
Clark,	Hermann,	Owen,	White, N. Y.
Cogswell,	Hiestand,	Patton,	Whiting, Mass.
Cox,	Hires,	Payson,	Wilkins,
Crouse,	Holmes,	Peters,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cummings,	Hopkins, Ill.	Pidcock,	Yoder.

NAYS—34.

Allen, Mich.	Clements,	Holman,	McMillin,
Allen, Miss.	Cobb,	Hooker,	McRae,
Anderson, Ill.	Cowles,	Johnston, N. C.	Moore,
Baker, Ill.	Elliott,	Jones,	Neal,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Henderson, N. C.	Lanham,	Richardson,
Bynum,	Herbert,	McCreary,	Rowland,

Sayers,	Stewart, Ga.	Walker,	Wilson, Minn.
Shively,	Stone, Ky.	Washington,
Springer,	Turner, Ga.	Weaver,

NOT VOTING—166.

Abbott,	Dockery,	Lind,	Rayner,
Anderson, Iowa	Dougherty,	Lyman,	Rice,
Anderson, Miss.	Dunn,	Lynch,	Rogers,
Arnold,	Enloe,	Macdonald,	Russell, Mass.
Bacon,	Ermentrout,	Maffett,	Ryan,
Bankhead,	Felton,	Mahoney,	Sawyer,
Barnes,	Fisher,	Maish,	Scott,
Barry,	Fitch,	Mansur,	Seney,
Belden,	Ford,	Martin,	Seymour,
Belmont,	Forney,	Mason,	Shaw,
Blanchard,	Fuller,	Matson,	Simmons,
Bland,	Funston,	McAdoo,	Smith,
Bliss,	Gaines,	McClammy,	Snyder,
Blount,	Gay,	McCormick,	Spooner,
Bowden,	Gibson,	McCullogh,	Stahlnecker,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Glass,	McKinley,	Steele,
Brower,	Glover,	McKinney,	Stewart, Tex.
Bowne, T.H.B., Va.	Goff,	McShane,	Stockdale,
Brown, Ohio	Granger,	Merriman,	Stone, Mo.
Buckalew,	Greenman,	Milliken,	Struble,
Bunnell,	Guenther,	Mills,	Symes,
Burnes,	Hall,	Montgomery,	Tarsney,
Burnett,	Hare,	Morgan,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Candler,	Hatch,	Morse,	Thomas, Ill.
Cannon,	Hayes,	Nelson,	Townshend,
Carlton,	Hemphill,	Newton,	Turner, Kans.
Caswell,	Henderson, Ill.	Norwood,	Vance,
Catchings,	Hitt,	Nutting,	West,
Cheadle,	Hogg,	Oates,	Wheeler,
Clardy,	Hovey,	O'Neall, Ind.	White, Ind.
Cockran,	Hudd,	O'Neill, Mo.	Whiting, Mich.
Collins,	Hutton,	Outhwaite,	Whitthorne,
Compton,	Kennedy,	Parker,	Wickham,
Conger,	Kerr,	Peel,	Wilbur,
Cooper,	Kilgore,	Penington,	Wilkinson,
Cothran,	Laffoon,	Perkins,	Williams,
Crain,	Laird,	Perry,	Wise,
Crisp,	Landes,	Phelan,	Woodburn,
Culberson,	Lane,	Phelps,	Yardley,
Davenport,	Latham,	Plumb,	Yost.
Davidson, Ala.	Lawler,	Post,
Davidson, Fla.	Lee,	Randall,

So no quorum voted.

During the roll-call,

Mr. RICHARDSON said: I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The following additional pairs, for this day, were announced:

Mr. WISE with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. MONTGOMERY with Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. ENLOE with Mr. KENNEDY.

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. WICKHAM.

Mr. ERMENTROUT with Mr. SEYMOUR.

Mr. MCKINLEY (having voted ay). I desire to withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 124, the nays 34. No quorum has voted.

Mr. MANSUR. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman on the other side in charge of this bill is willing, if unanimous consent can be had, that the amendment I proposed some time ago shall be voted upon, with the understanding that a five-minute statement shall be allowed on each side, and if the amendment should not prevail, that then there shall be a vote on the bill as it stands. If this can be done, I for one shall not feel it my duty to oppose the bill further.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rules expressly provide that when the absence of a quorum is shown by a yea-and-nay vote, no other business is in order except a call of the House or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MANSUR. Then we can have a call of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand the Chair to rule that, although there may be unanimous consent to the arrangement suggested, such an arrangement can not now be made, but the question must first be taken either upon a motion to adjourn or a motion for a call of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rules are explicit; only two motions are in order after the absence of a quorum has been shown by a yea-and-nay vote; and that so far as the present occupant of the chair knows there has been no variation under any circumstances.

Mr. DINGLEY. In view of that statement I will move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. BLAND. And pending that motion I will move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. We can test whether a quorum is present or not by the yeas and nays.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 58, nays 118, not voting 148; as follows:

YEAS—58.

Abbott,	Bankhead,	Bland,	Breckinridge, Ky.
Allen, Miss.	Biggs,	Blount,	Browne, Ind.
Anderson, Ill.	Blanchard,	Breckinridge, Ark.	Bynum,
Clements,	Herbert,	Maish,	Richardson,
Cobb,	Holman,	Martin,	Rowland,
Cowles,	Hopkins, Va.	Matson,	Sayers,
Crisp,	Howard,	McKinney,	Shively,
Dargan,	Hudd,	McMillin,	Stone, Ky.
Dockery,	Johnston, N. C.	McRae,	Thompson, Cal.
Dunn,	Jones,	Moore,	Tillman,
Elliott,	Kilgore,	Neal,	Turner, Ga.
Grimes,	Lagan,	Oates,	Walker,
Hare,	Lane	Peel,	Weaver.
Heard,	Lanham,	Penington,
Henderson, N. C.	Latham,	Pidcock,

NAYS—118.

Allen, Mass.	Dalzell,	Jackson,	Russell, Conn
Allen, Mich.	Darlington,	Johnston, Ind.	Scull,
Anderson, Kans.	Davis,	Kean,	Sherman,
Atkinson,	De Lano,	Kelley,	Sowden,
Baker, N. Y.	Dingley,	Kerr,	Spinola,
Baker, Ill.	Dorsey,	Ketcham,	Springer,
Bayne,	Dunham,	La Follette,	Stahlnecker,
Belden,	Farquhar,	Laidlaw,	Stephenson,
Bingham,	Felton,	Lehlbach,	Stewart, Ga.
Boothman,	Finley,	Long,	Stewart, Vt.
Bound,	Flood,	Mansur,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Boutelle,	French,	McCormick,	Thomas, Ky.
Bowen,	Gallinger,	McCreary,	Thomas, Wis.
Brewer,	Gear,	McKenna,	Thompson, Ohio
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gest,	Moffitt,	Tracey,
Brumm,	Grosvenor,	Morrow,	Turner, Kans.
Bryce,	Grout,	Nichols,	Vandever,
Buchanan,	Harmer,	O'Donnell,	Wade,
Burrows,	Haugen,	O'Ferrall,	Warner,
Butler,	Hayden,	O'Neill, Pa.	Weber,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Henderson, Iowa	Osborne,	White, N. Y.
Campbell, Ohio	Hermann,	Patton,	Whiting, Mass.
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Hiestand,	Payson,	Wilkins,
Caruth,	Hires,	Peters,	Wilson, Minn.
Clark,	Holmes,	Pugsley,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cogswell,	Hooker,	Reed,	Yardley,
Cox,	Hopkins, Ill.	Rice,	Yoder,
Crouse,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Rockwell,	Yost.
Cummings,	Houk,	Romeis,
Cutcheon,	Hunter,	Rowell,

NOT VOTING—148.

Adams,	Dougherty,	Macdonald,	Ryan,
Anderson, Iowa	Enloe,	Maffett,	Sawyer,
Anderson, Miss.	Ermentrout,	Mahoney,	Scott,
Arnold,	Fisher,	Mason,	Seney,
Bacon,	Fitch,	McAdoo,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Foran,	McClammy,	Shaw,
Barry,	Ford,	McComas,	Simmons,
Belmont,	Forney,	McCullogh,	Smith,
Bliss,	Fuller,	McKinley,	Snyder,
Bowden,	Funston,	McShane,	Spooner,
Brower,	Gaines,	Merriman,	Steele,
Browne, T.H.B., Va.	Gay,	Milliken,	Stewart, Tex.
Brown, Ohio	Gibson,	Mills,	Stockdale,
Buckalew,	Glass,	Montgomery,	Stone, Mo.
Bunnell,	Glover,	Morgan,	Struble,
Burnes,	Goff,	Morrill,	Symes,
Burnett,	Granger,	Morse,	Tarsney,
Butterworth,	Greenman,	Nelson,	Taulbee,
Candler,	Guenther,	Newton,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Cannon,	Hall,	Norwood,	Thomas, Ill.
Carlton,	Hatch,	Nutting,	Townshend,
Caswell,	Hayes,	O'Neall, Ind.	Vance,
Catchings,	Hemphill,	O'Neill, Mo.	Washington,
Cheadle,	Henderson, Ill.	Outhwaite,	West,
Chipman,	Hitt,	Owen,	Wheeler,
Clardy,	Hogg,	Parker,	White, Ind.
Cockran,	Hovey,	Perkins,	Whiting, Mich.
Collins,	Hutton,	Perry,	Whitthorne,
Compton,	Kennedy,	Phelan,	Wickham,
Conger,	Laffoon,	Phelps,	Wilber,
Cooper,	Laird,	Plumb,	Wilkinson,
Cothran,	Landes,	Post,	Williams,
Crain,	Lawler,	Randall,	Wise,
Culberson,	Lee,	Rayner,	Woodburn.
Davenport,	Lind,	Robertson,
Davidson, Ala.	Lodge,	Rogers,
Davidson, Fla.	Lyman,	Russell, Mass.
Dibble,	Lynch,	Rusk,

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the demand I made for the previous question may cover an amendment made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the gentleman can withdraw his privileged question, and that will allow any amendment to be offered.

Mr. DINGLEY. With that understanding I withdraw it, and yield to the gentleman to offer his amendment.

Mr. MANSUR. I move to strike out, in line 7 of the printed bill, the words "Thomaston, Me.," and insert "Washington, in the District of Columbia." Also strike out of the bill all after the words "Secretary of War," in line 14, and insert:

That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to designate a place in one of the public reservations in the city of Washington on which the said monument shall be erected.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps proper for me to say that I did not accept that amendment to be covered by the previous question when it was first proposed because it seemed to me to be entirely out of accord with the spirit of the bill, and that it would in effect destroy the particular object we had in view.

It is the purpose of the State of Maine, at an early day, to add another statue in Statuary Hall, the subject of which will be General

Knox, and as that will be in the general collection of the nation, it seemed entirely proper the monument here proposed should be erected in the town in which he lived, and where he died, and where his remains are buried. It is for that reason I refused to allow it to come in to be voted on by the House. But I now allow it to be offered with the understanding that whatever the vote may be those gentlemen who have been withholding their votes will then give their votes so that the majority of the House may decide the several questions before it. It is but proper to say that I hope the amendment will be voted down. I now demand the previous question on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] demands the previous question on the amendment. The order for the yeas and nays will be dispensed with unless demanded again.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not catch what my friend from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] said. Did I understand him to say that there was an agreement between himself and gentlemen who were leading the opposition that if this amendment should be voted down there should be no further dilatory motions?

Mr. DINGLEY. I understood that to be the suggestion of the gentleman who approached me on the subject.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I was not a party to it.

Mr. McMILLIN. With whom was that agreement made?

Mr. DINGLEY. With the gentleman who proposed the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman was not opposing the bill originally. I only make this statement for the purpose of freeing myself from being bound by any agreement made.

Mr. MANSUR. I would state I did oppose the bill in its original shape, and so stated.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope that, whatever may be the understanding of individual gentlemen, when this question is taken the House will proceed to dispose of this matter. I do not see the propriety of dilatory motions on a question of this kind at this stage of the business, and I hope the House will dispose of this question so that we may proceed to something else.

The question was taken on ordering the previous question on the amendment, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLAND. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 88, noes 3.

Mr. BLAND. Better have a quorum, had we not?

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 137, nays 32, not voting 155; as follows:

YEAS—137.

Adams,	Cutcheon,	Hunter,	Rice,
Allen, Mass.	Dalzell,	Jackson,	Robertson,
Anderson, Kans.	Dargan,	Johnston, Ind.	Rockwell,
Atkinson,	Darlington,	Jones,	Romeis,
Baker, N. Y.	Davis,	Kean,	Rowell,
Baker, Ill.	De Lano,	Kerr,	Russell, Conn.
Barry,	Dibble,	Ketcham,	Scull,
Bayne,	Dingley,	La Follette,	Sherman,
Belden,	Dorsey,	Lagan,	Sowden,
Biggs,	Dunham,	Lawler,	Spinola,
Bingham,	Ermentrout,	Lehlbach,	Springer,
Blount,	Farquhar,	Long,	Stephenson,
Boothman,	Felton,	Maish,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Bound,	Finley,	Mansur,	Thomas, Ky.
Boutelle,	Flood,	McComas,	Thomas, Wis.
Bowen,	Foran,	McCormick,	Thompson, Ohio
Brewer,	Gallinger,	McCullogh,	Thompson, Cal.
Browne, Ind.	Gear,	McKenna,	Tillman,
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gest,	McKinney,	Tracey,
Brumm,	Grimes,	Milliken,	Turner, Kans.
Bryce,	Grosvenor,	Moffitt,	Vandever.
Buchanan,	Grout,	Morrill,	Wade,
Butler,	Harmer,	Morrow,	Warner,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Haugen,	Nelson,	Weaver,
Campbell, Ohio.	Hayden,	Oates,	Weber,
Campbell, T. J., N. Y.	Henderson, Iowa	O'Donnell,	White, N. Y.
Cannon,	Herbert,	O'Ferrall,	Whiting, Mass.
Caruth,	Hiestand,	O'Neill, Pa.	Wilson, Minn.
Catchings,	Hires,	Osborne,	Wilson, W. Va.
Clark,	Holmes,	Payson,	Yardley,
Cobb,	Hooker,	Peel,	Yoder,
Cogswell,	Hopkins, Ill.	Penington,	Yost.
Cox,	Hopkins, Va.	Peters,
Crouse,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Pugsley,
Cummings,	Hudd,	Reed,

NAYS—32.

Abbott,	Cowles,	Martin,	Rowland,
Allen, Miss.	Elliott,	Matson,	Sayers,
Anderson, Ill.	Henderson, N. C.	McMillin,	Shively,
Blanchard,	Holman,	McRae,	Stewart, Ga.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Howard,	Moore,	Stone, Ky.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Hutton,	Neal,	Turner, Ga.
Bynum,	Johnston, N. C.	Pidcock,	Walker,
Clements,	Lanham,	Richardson,	Washington.

NOT VOTING—155.

Allen, Mich.	Arnold,	Barnes,	Bliss,
Anderson, Iowa	Bacon,	Belmont,	Bowden,
Anderson, Miss.	Bankhead,	Bland,	Brower,
Browne, T. H. B., Va.	Funston,	Macdonald,	Sawyer,
Brown, Ohio.	Gaines,	Maffett,	Scott,
Buckalew,	Gay,	Mahoney,	Seney,
Bunnell,	Gibson,	Mason,	Seymour,
Burnes,	Glass,	McAdoo,	Shaw,
Burnett,	Glover,	McClammy,	Simmons,
Burrows,	Goff,	McCreary,	Smith,
Butterworth,	Granger,	McKinley,	Snyder,
Candler,	Greenman,	McShane,	Spooner,
Carlton,	Guenther,	Merriman,	Stahlnecker,
Caswell,	Hall,	Mills,	Steele,
Cheadle,	Hare,	Montgomery,	Stewart, Tex.
Chipman,	Hatch,	Morgan,	Stewart, Vt.
Clardy,	Hayes,	Morse,	Stockdale,
Cockran,	Heard,	Newton,	Stone, Mo.
Collins,	Hemphill,	Nichols,	Struble,
Compton,	Henderson, Ill.	Norwood,	Symes,
Conger,	Hermann,	Nutting,	Tarsney,
Cooper,	Hitt,	O'Neall, Ind.	Taulbee,
Cothran,	Hogg,	O'Neill, Mo.	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Crain,	Houk,	Outhwaite,	Thomas, Ill.
Crisp,	Hovey,	Owen,	Townshend.
Culberson,	Kelley,	Parker,	Vance,
Davenport,	Kennedy,	Patton,	West,
Davidson, Ala.	Kilgore,	Perkins,	Wheeler,
Davidson, Fla.	Laffoon,	Perry,	White, Ind.
Dockery,	Laidlaw,	Phelan,	Whiting, Mich.
Dougherty,	Laird,	Phelps,	Whitthorne,
Dunn,	Landes,	Plumb,	Wickham,
Enloe,	Lane,	Post,	Wilber,
Fisher,	Latham,	Randall,	Wilkins,
Fitch,	Lee,	Rayner,	Wilkinson,
Ford,	Lind,	Rogers,	Williams,
Forney,	Lodge,	Russell, Mass.	Wise,
French,	Lyman,	Rusk,	Woodburn.
Fuller,	Lynch,	Ryan,

So the previous question was ordered.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. DINGLEY, the recapitulation of the vote was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced for the remainder of the day:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. BACON with Mr. KELLEY.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are two amendments. Let them both be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. There are two on the same subject-matter.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 7 of the printed bill, strike out the words "Thomaston, Me.," and insert "Washington, in the District of Columbia."

Mr. SPRINGER. They both pertain to the same subject and would necessarily follow. Let the other be read, and the vote be taken upon both.

The SPEAKER. They will be read, and if there be no objection the vote will be taken on both amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the words "Secretary of War," in line 14, and insert "that it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to designate a place in some one of the public reservations in the city of Washington on which the said monument shall be erected."

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote will be taken on both amendments.

Mr. BLAND. We had better have a vote upon the two propositions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to have a vote upon either one of them.

The question was taken on the first amendment; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 85.

Mr. BLAND. Let us have a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DINGLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 66, nays 91, not voting 167; as follows:

YEAS—66.

Abbott,	Ermentrout,	Mansur,	Shively,
Allen, Mich.	Ford,	Martin,	Smith,
Allen, Miss.	Gest,	McKinney,	Sowden,
Anderson, Ill.	Grimes,	McMillin,	Springer,
Baker, Ill.	Henderson, N. C.	McRae,	Stewart, Ga.
Biggs,	Herbert,	Mills,	Stone, Ky.
Blount,	Holman,	Moore,	Thompson, Cal.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Hooker,	Neal,	Tracey,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Hopkins, Va.	Oates,	Turner, Ga.
Brewer,	Johnston, N. C.	Outhwaite,	Walker,
Browne, Ind.	Jones,	Peel,	Washington,
Bryce,	Kerr,	Penington,	Weaver,
Clements,	Ketcham,	Pidcock,	Wilson, Minn.
Cobb,	Lane,	Rice,	Wilson, W. Va.
Cowles,	Lanham,	Richardson,	Yoder.
Dargan,	Lawler,	Robertson,
Elliott,	Lee,	Sayers,

NAYS—91.

Adams,	Atkinson,	Belden,	Boutelle,
Allen, Mass.	Baker, N. Y.	Bingham,	Bowen,
Anderson, Kans.	Bayne,	Boothman,	Brown, J. R., Va.

Brumm,	Dunham,	La Follette,	Russell, Conn.
Buchanan,	Farquhar,	Laidlaw,	Ryan,
Burrows,	Finley,	Lehlbach,	Scull,
Butler,	Flood,	Long,	Sherman,
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Gallinger,	McCormick,	Spinola,
Campbell, Ohio	Gear,	McCullogh,	Stephenson,
Campbell, T.J., N.Y.	Grosvenor,	Milliken,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Cannon,	Grout,	Moffitt,	Thomas, Ky.
Caruth,	Haugen,	Morrill,	Thomas, Wis.
Caswell,	Hayden,	Morrow,	Thompson, Ohio
Clark,	Henderson, Iowa	O'Donnell,	Turner, Kans.
Cogswell,	Hires,	O'Ferrall,	Vandever,
Crouse,	Holmes,	O'Neill, Pa.	Wade,
Cummings,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Osborne,	Warner,
Cutcheon,	Houk,	Payson,	Weber,
Dalzell,	Howard,	Peters,	White, N. Y.
Davis,	Hudd,	Reed,	Whiting, Mass.
De Lano,	Hunter,	Rockwell,	Yardley,
Dibble,	Jackson,	Romeis,	Yost.
Dingley,	Johnston, Ind.	Rowell,

NOT VOTING—167.

Anderson, Iowa	Dockery,	Lagan,	Randall,
Anderson, Miss.	Dorsey,	Laird,	Rayner,
Arnold,	Dougherty,	Landes,	Rogers,
Bacon,	Dunn,	Latham,	Rowland,
Bankhead,	Enloe,	Lind,	Russell, Mass.
Barnes,	Felton,	Lodge,	Rusk,
Barry,	Fisher,	Lyman,	Sawyer,
Belmont,	Fitch,	Lynch,	Scott,
Blanchard,	Foran,	Macdonald,	Seney,
Bland,	Forney,	Maffett,	Seymour,
Bliss,	French,	Mahoney,	Shaw,
Bound,	Fuller,	Maish,	Simmons,
Bowden,	Funston,	Mason,	Snyder,
Brower,	Gaines,	Matson,	Spooner,
Browne, T.H.B., Va.	Gay,	McAdoo,	Stahlnecker,
Brown, Ohio	Gibson,	McClammy,	Steele,
Buckalew,	Glass,	McComas,	Stewart, Tex.
Bunnell,	Glover,	McCreary,	Stewart, Vt.
Burnes,	Goff,	McKenna,	Stockdale,
Burnett,	Granger,	McKinley,	Stone, Mo.
Butterworth,	Greenman,	McShane,	Struble,
Bynum,	Guenther,	Merriman,	Symes,
Candler,	Hall,	Montgomery,	Tarsney,
Carlton,	Hare,	Morgan,	Taulbee,
Catchings,	Harmer,	Morse,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Cheadle,	Hatch,	Nelson,	Thomas, Ill.
Chipman,	Hayes,	Newton,	Tillman,
Clardy,	Heard,	Nichols,	Townshend,
Cockran,	Hemphill,	Norwood,	Vance,
Collins,	Henderson, Ill.	Nutting,	West,
Compton,	Hermann,	O'Neall, Ind.	Wheeler,
Conger,	Hiestand,	O'Neill, Mo.	White, Ind.
Cooper,	Hitt,	Owen,	Whiting, Mich.
Cothran,	Hogg,	Parker,	Whitthorne,
Cox,	Hopkins, Ill.	Patton,	Wickham,
Crain,	Hovey,	Perkins,	Wilber,
Crisp,	Hutton,	Perry,	Wilkins,
Culberson,	Kean,	Phelan,	Wilkinson,
Darlington,	Kelley,	Phelps,	Williams,
Davenport,	Kennedy,	Plumb,	Wise,
Davidson, Ala.	Kilgore,	Post,	Woodburn.
Davidson, Fla.	Laffoon,	Pugsley,

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 66, noes 85.

Mr. BLAND demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 56, nays 101, not voting 167; as follows:

YEAS—56.

Abbott,	Dargan,	Lanham,	Sayers,
Allen, Miss.	Dockery,	Latham,	Smith,
Anderson, Ill.	Elliott,	Martin,	Stewart, Ga.
Bankhead,	French,	McMillin,	Stone, Ky.
Bland,	Grimes,	McRae,	Taulbee,
Blount,	Henderson, N. C.	Moore,	Thompson, Cal.
Breckinridge, Ark.	Herbert,	Neal,	Tillman,
Breckinridge, Ky.	Holman,	Oates,	Turner, Ga.
Bynum,	Hooker,	Peel,	Wade,
Catchings,	Hopkins, Va.	Penington,	Walker,
Clements,	Hutton,	Pidcock,	Washington,
Cobb,	Johnston, N. C.	Rice,	Whiting, Mich.
Cowles,	Kilgore,	Richardson,	Wilson, Minn.
Crisp,	Lane,	Rowland,	Wilson, W. Va.

NAYS—101.

Adams,	Crouse,	Hunter,	Romeis,
Allen, Mass.	Cummings,	Jackson,	Rowell,
Allen, Mich.	Cutcheon,	Johnston, Ind.	Russell, Conn.
Anderson, Kans.	Dalzell,	Kerr,	Ryan,
Atkinson,	Davis,	La Follette,	Scull,
Baker, N. Y.	De Lano,	Laidlaw,	Sherman,
Baker, Ill.	Dibble,	Lehlbach,	Sowden,
Bayne,	Dingley,	Long,	Spinola,
Belden,	Dunham,	Mansur,	Springer,
Bingham,	Farquhar,	McComas,	Stephenson,
Boothman,	Felton,	McCullogh,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Bound,	Finley,	McKenna,	Thomas, Ky.
Boutelle,	Flood,	Milliken,	Thomas, Wis.
Bowen,	Gallinger,	Moffitt,	Thompson, Ohio
Brown, J. R., Va.	Gear,	Morrill,	Tracey,
Brumm,	Gest,	Nelson,	Vandever,
Bryce,	Grosvenor,	O'Donnell,	Warner,
Buchanan,	Grout,	O'Ferrall,	Weaver,
Burrows,	Haugen,	O'Neill, Pa.	Weber,
Butler,	Hayden,	Osborne,	White, N. Y.
Campbell, F., N. Y.	Henderson, Iowa	Outhwaite,	Whiting, Mass.
Cannon,	Hermann,	Payson,	Yardley,
Caruth,	Hiestand,	Peters,	Yost.
Caswell,	Hires,	Pugsley,
Clark,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Reed,
Cogswell,	Houk,	Rockwell,

NOT VOTING—167.

Anderson, Iowa	Dougherty,	Laird,	Randall,
Anderson, Miss.	Dunn,	Landes,	Rayner,
Arnold,	Enloe,	Lawler,	Robertson,
Bacon,	Ermentrout,	Lee,	Rogers,
Barnes,	Fisher,	Lind,	Russell, Mass.
Barry,	Fitch,	Lodge,	Rusk,
Belmont.	Foran,	Lyman,	Sawyer,
Biggs,	Ford,	Lynch,	Scott,
Blanchard,	Forney,	Macdonald,	Seney,
Bliss,	Fuller,	Maffett,	Seymour,
Bowden,	Funston,	Mahoney,	Shaw,
Brewer,	Gaines,	Maish,	Shively,
Brower,	Gay,	Mason,	Simmons,
Browne, T.H.B., Va.	Gibson,	Matson,	Snyder,
Browne, Ind.	Glass,	McAdoo,	Spooner,
Brown, Ohio	Glover,	McClammy,	Stahlnecker,
Buckalew,	Goff,	McCormick,	Steele,
Bunnell,	Granger,	McCreary,	Stewart, Tex.
Burnes,	Greenman,	McKinley,	Stewart, Vt.
Burnett,	Guenther,	McKinney,	Stockdale,
Butterworth,	Hall,	McShane,	Stone, Mo.
Campbell, Ohio	Hare,	Merriman,	Struble,
Campbell, T.J., N.Y.	Harmer,	Mills,	Symes,
Candler,	Hatch,	Montgomery,	Tarsney,
Carlton,	Hayes,	Morgan,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Cheadle,	Heard,	Morrow,	Thomas, Ill.
Chipman,	Hemphill,	Morse,	Townshend,
Clardy,	Henderson, Ill.	Newton,	Turner, Kans.
Cockran,	Hitt,	Nichols,	Vance,
Collins,	Hogg,	Norwood,	West,
Compton,	Holmes,	Nutting,	Wheeler,
Conger,	Hopkins, Ill.	O'Neall, Ind.	White, Ind.
Cooper,	Hovey,	O'Neill, Mo.	Whitthorne,
Cothran,	Howard,	Owen,	Wickham,
Cox,	Hudd,	Parker,	Wilber,
Crain,	Jones,	Patton,	Wilkins,
Culberson,	Kean,	Perkins,	Wilkinson,
Darlington,	Kelley,	Perry,	Williams,
Davenport,	Kennedy,	Phelan,	Wise,
Davidson, Ala.	Ketcham,	Phelps,	Woodburn,
Davidson, Fla.	Laffoon,	Plumb,	Yoder.
Dorsey,	Lagan,	Post,

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call,

On motion of Mr. MILLIKEN, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon agreeing to the second amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MANSUR], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 47, nays 70, not voting 207; as follows:

YEAS—47.

Abbott,	Holman,	Moore,	Stone, Ky.
Allen, Mich.	Hooker,	Neal,	Taulbee,
Baker, Ill.	Hopkins, Va.	Oates,	Thompson, Cal.
Blount,	Hudd,	Penington,	Tracey,
Breckinridge, Ark.	Johnston, N. C.	Pidcock,	Turner, Ga.
Breckinridge, Ky.	Kerr,	Rice,	Walker,
Cobb,	Lane,	Richardson,	Washington,
Cowles,	Lanham,	Robertson,	Weaver,
Elliott,	Lawler,	Rowland,	Whiting, Mich.
Gest,	Martin,	Sayers,	Wilson, Minn.
Grimes,	McMillin,	Sowden,	Wilson, W. Va.
Heard,	McRae,	Stewart, Ga.

NAYS—70.

Adams,	Cogswell,	Hopkins, N. Y.	Romeis,
Anderson, Ill.	Crouse,	Hunter,	Rowell,
Anderson, Kans.	Cummings,	Hutton,	Russell, Conn.
Baker, N. Y.	Cutcheon,	Jackson,	Scull,
Bayne,	Davis,	Johnston, Ind.	Sherman,
Belden,	Dibble,	La Follette,	Stephenson,
Boothman,	Dingley,	Lehlbach,	Taylor, J. D., Ohio
Boutelle,	Dunham,	McComas,	Thomas, Ky.
Bowen,	Farquhar,	McCullogh,	Thomas, Wis.
Brown, J. R., Va.	Finley,	Moffitt,	Thompson, Ohio
Brumm,	Fitch,	Morrow,	Vandever,
Burrows,	Gallinger,	Nelson,	Wade,
Butler,	Gear,	Nichols,	Warner,
Campbell, F., N.Y.	Grosvenor,	O'Neill, Pa.	White, N.Y.
Cannon,	Haugen,	Osborne,	Yardley,
Caruth,	Hiestand,	Peters,	Yost.
Caswell,	Hires,	Reed,
Clark,	Holmes,	Rockwell,

NOT VOTING—207.

Allen, Mass.	Bryce,	Cox,	French,
Allen, Miss.	Buchanan,	Crain,	Fuller,
Anderson, Iowa	Buckalew,	Crisp,	Funston,
Anderson, Miss.	Bunnell,	Culberson,	Gaines,
Arnold,	Burnes,	Dalzell,	Gay,
Atkinson,	Burnett,	Dargan,	Gibson,
Bacon,	Butterworth,	Darlington,	Glass,
Bankhead,	Bynum,	Davenport,	Glover,
Barnes,	Campbell, Ohio	Davidson, Ala.	Goff,
Barry,	Campbell, T. J., N.Y.	Davidson, Fla.	Granger,
Belmont,	Candler,	De Lano,	Greenman,
Biggs,	Carlton,	Dockery,	Grout,
Bingham,	Catchings,	Dorsey,	Guenther,
Blanchard,	Cheadle,	Dougherty,	Hall,
Bland,	Chipman,	Dunn,	Hare,
Bliss,	Clardy,	Enloe,	Harmer,
Bound,	Clements,	Ermentrout,	Hatch,
Bowden,	Cockran,	Felton,	Hayden,
Brewer,	Collins,	Fisher,	Hayes,
Brower,	Compton,	Flood,	Hemphill,
Browne, T.H.B., Va.	Conger,	Foran,	Henderson, Iowa
Browne, Ind.	Cooper,	Ford,	Henderson, N. C.
Brown, Ohio	Cothran,	Forney,	Henderson, Ill.

Herbert,	Maish,	Patton,	Steele,
Hermann,	Mansur,	Payson,	Stewart, Tex.
Hitt,	Mason,	Peel,	Stewart, Vt.
Hogg,	Matson,	Perkins,	Stockdale,
Hopkins, Ill.	McAdoo,	Perry,	Stone, Mo.
Houk,	McClammy,	Phelan,	Struble,
Hovey,	McCormick,	Phelps,	Symes,
Howard,	McCreary,	Plumb,	Tarsney,
Jones,	McKenna,	Post,	Taylor, E. B., Ohio
Kean,	McKinley,	Pugsley,	Thomas, Ill.
Kelley,	McKinney,	Randall,	Tillman,
Kennedy,	McShane,	Rayner,	Townshend,
Ketcham,	Merriman,	Rogers,	Turner, Kans.
Kilgore,	Milliken,	Russell, Mass.	Vance,
Laffoon,	Mills,	Rusk,	Weber,
Lagan,	Montgomery,	Ryan,	West,
Laidlaw,	Morgan,	Sawyer,	Wheeler,
Laird,	Morrill,	Scott,	White, Ind.
Landes,	Morse,	Seney,	Whiting, Mass.
Latham,	Newton,	Seymour,	Whitthorne,
Lee,	Norwood,	Shaw,	Wickham,
Lind,	Nutting,	Shively,	Wilber,
Lodge,	O'Donnell,	Simmons,	Wilkins,
Long,	O'Ferrall,	Smith,	Wilkinson,
Lyman,	O'Neall, Ind.	Snyder,	Williams,
Lynch,	O'Neill, Mo.	Spinola,	Wise,
Macdonald,	Outhwaite,	Spooner,	Woodburn,
Maffett,	Owen,	Springer,	Yoder.
Mahoney,	Parker,	Stahlnecker,

During the roll-call,

Mr. GALLINGER said: I ask by unanimous consent that the reading of the names of members voting be dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

The names were read.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 47 and the noes are 70. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DINGLEY. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 28, noes 31.

The SPEAKER. More than a sufficient number have voted in favor of ordering the yeas and nays. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the Chair will cause to be read the order which was made at the last session with reference to the daily adjournment of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That hereafter when the House adjourns it shall adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock on the next succeeding day, and after general debate has been closed on the bill entitled "An act to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue" the session shall close each day at 5 o'clock p. m. This resolution not to interfere with the sessions provided for Friday evenings.

The SPEAKER. So much of this order as provided that the House should meet at 11 o'clock was changed on the 30th of July, and it was then provided that the House should meet at 12 o'clock; but the remainder of the rule, which fixed the time for the daily adjournment of the House, was not changed, and it was not limited to the last session. The Chair thinks, therefore, that the order is still in force, and, the hour of 5 o'clock p. m. having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BINGHAM: Joint resolution (H. Res. 235) authorizing Capt. G. S. Anderson, Sixth Cavalry, to accept from the President of the French Republic a diploma conferring the decoration of chevalier of the National Order of the Legion of Honor—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BOOTHMAN: A bill (H. R. 11621) granting an increase of pension to George W. Crout—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11622) granting a pension to William J. Bryan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUBOIS: A bill (H. R. 11623) for relief of Kate F. Dunlap—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. GEAR: A bill (H. R. 11624) to increase the pension of Jacob Rogers—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GEST: A bill (H. R. 11625) to grant a pension to Martin Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 11626) granting a pension to Thomas McMann—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Mary Horning—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11628) granting a pension to Mary A. Start—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11629) granting a pension to Elizabeth Clover—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11630) for the relief of John O. McDonald—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. R. WHITING: A bill (H. R. 11631) for the relief of Elwin A. Scutt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: A bill (H. R. 11632) to place the name of John J. S. Hassler on the retired-list of the United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of business men of Nebraska, in favor of the Western Pacific Railroad funding bill—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of the selectmen of Plymouth, Mass., for repair of beach in that town—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. MACDONALD: Petition of citizens of North Dakota for immediate admission of South Dakota and Montana, and for constitutional conventions in North Dakota, Washington, and New Mexico—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. NEAL: A bill making an appropriation to continue the improvement in the Tennessee River above Chattanooga—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill making an appropriation to continue the improvements in the Tennessee River below Chattanooga—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill making an appropriation to continue the improvements in the Little Tennessee River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, a bill making an appropriation to complete the projected improvements in the Hiwassee River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. PIDCOCK: Petition of John Carpenter, jr., of Clinton, N. J., against the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. ROWLAND: Petition of the Croatan Indians, of Robeson County, North Carolina, for relief—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

ALFRED H. COLQUITT, a Senator from the State of Georgia, and DWIGHT M. SABIN, a Senator from the State of Minnesota, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THE SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 1665 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a statement exhibiting the expenditures at the Springfield Armory, and the arms, components of arms, and appendages fabricated, altered, and repaired at that armory during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1888; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present resolutions adopted by the American Peace Society held in Pilgrim Hall, Boston, November 26, 1888, in favor of international arbitration, in which they set out their approval of the resolution of the Senate passed at the last session, and also pray that "the way may be opened for the ultimate establishment of a permanent international tribunal to which may be referred those disputes which have hitherto plunged nations in war." I move that the resolutions be printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TURPIE introduced a bill (S. 3664) granting a pension to Mary C. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3665) to provide for the sale of certain land; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying petition, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS introduced a bill (S. 3666) to amend an act entitled "An act granting to the city of Grand Forks, Dak., the right to build two free bridges across the Red River," approved May 21, 1888; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 3667) to incorporate the Equitable Gas Light and Fuel Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PADDOCK (for Mr. INGALLS) introduced a bill (S. 3668) granting an increase of pension to Joseph D. Tate; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

THE MEAT PRODUCT.

Mr. VEST. I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the special committee created at the last session of the Senate to examine the questions touching the meat product of the United States, and especially as to the transportation of beef and beef cattle, and the sale of the same in the cattle markets, stock-yards, and cities, and whether there exists or has existed any combination of any kind, either on the part of the Trunk Line Association or the Central Traffic Association or other agencies of transportation, or on the part of those engaged in buying, selling, or shipping meat products, by reason of which the prices of beef and beef cattle have been so controlled or affected as to diminish the price paid the producer without lessening the cost of meat to the consumer, be continued, with power to sit during the sessions and recess of the Senate, at such times and places as it may determine, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, and also to employ a stenographer and a sergeant-at-arms; all necessary expenses of said committee to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and said committee shall report to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rules require the reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I hope that will not be insisted upon. This is practically the same resolution which was adopted by the Senate at its last session.

I wish to make a brief statement as to the necessity for this resolution continuing the committee.

It is very well known to the Senate that our late session lasted until a few days before the election. It is also well known to the Senate that it was almost impossible to transact any public business for some days after the election occurred.

The committee met on the 20th of November at St. Louis and was in session five days taking testimony. On account of the sickness of one of its members and the necessary absence of others, the committee was left without a quorum and adjourned over to meet to-day in the city of Washington.

We find ourselves now pressed with the business of the session, and it is simply impossible for us to continue our labors at this time. We ask, therefore, that this resolution be adopted continuing the committee, in order that we may go on with the taking of testimony and attain the object which was originally contemplated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the rule requiring the reference of the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate may be waived.

Mr. SHERMAN. The resolution seems to contemplate that the committee should continue during the next recess. Is that the case?

Mr. VEST. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHERMAN. It seems to me that that would be rather unusual at this period of the session. If at the end of the present session it should appear necessary to continue the committee during the next recess it would probably be best to defer it until that time.

Mr. VEST. I will state very frankly to the Senator from Ohio that unless the public business is expedited much beyond what we contemplate it is believed by us that we can do very little during this session of Congress, the short session. We therefore thought it was better to ask, in the event that we can not finish our labors during this session, that the committee should sit during the next recess.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to the resolution except that I think it ought to go, according to the rule, to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, because that is the universal rule, and it would not delay it; it might be reported back to-day, perhaps.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Missouri will allow me, I should like to call his attention to a very small technicality, but one which may defeat his resolution. The recess which he describes in the resolution undoubtedly would mean only the little recess between the adjournment of the Senate on the 4th of March and its assembling a day or two after, on the call of the new President, for the purpose of executive business. I suppose the Senator desires to have the labor accomplished during the summer recess.

Mr. VEST. The verbiage of the resolution can be altered so as to preclude that criticism. I mean, of course, the recess of the Senate between this Congress and the next one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio object to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it had better follow the rule. I have no doubt it will be reported back promptly. I have no objection whatever to the continuance of the committee, but that is the rule of the Senate, and it had better be observed in all cases. I have a resolution which I propose to offer of a similar character, which I shall ask may go to the same committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

ALLEGED OUTRAGES IN ALASKA.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to communicate to the Senate what information, if any, there is in the Department in reference to alleged outrages and restraint of liberty committed in Alaska upon Indian females and other persons, and what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department to protect the persons of female residents in Alaska from outrage, violence, and restraint of liberty.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I think it is proper that I should state that I offer the resolution not from any knowledge I have myself of the alleged outrages, but from the fact that the public prints for some time have been full of statements of outrages in Alaska of the kind indicated in the resolution, of the most barbarous character. Some of the statements have come from those who have visited Alaska during the last season, and some from persons who have been residents there, writing letters published in the newspapers over their own signatures. They are of such a character as to put the public prints upon inquiry, and I have been unable to obtain any information from the reports of Government officials upon the subject.

It seems to me that the Senate should be put in possession of any information there can possibly be in the Department in reference to this matter, and if we fail in that respect some steps should be taken to determine the truth of these allegations. If the allegations are true, it is a public scandal that no steps have been taken to prevent the repetition of the outrages; and if they are not true, it is a public scandal that such statements should be circulated without refutation.

Mr. PLATT. May I hear the resolution read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The resolution was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Foreign Relations, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Relations with Canada be continued with all the authority conferred by resolution at the last session, and with power to sit during the recess of the Senate and report at the December session in 1889.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE, ETC.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President and the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and the Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

Mr. MORRILL. The object of the resolution is to enable the Finance Committee and the members of the Senate to obtain these documents promptly without having to wait until the end of the session before copies of them can be obtained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the resolution, requiring the printing of extra copies, under the rules should be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have it referred to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

INTRODUCTION OF YELLOW FEVER.

Mr. PLUMB. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Epidemic Diseases be directed to inquire as to the cause of the introduction of yellow fever into the State of Florida during the past season, whether the instrumentalities of such introduction are still in force, and what legislation, if any, is necessary to prevent a similar or other introduction in the future, and to report by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. HARRIS. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to report to the Senate the amount of payments made by the Treasurer of the United States to the Soldiers' Home at Washington during each year of the last ten years on account of the sources of revenue provided in section 7 of chapter 25 of the laws of 1851, entitled "An act to found a military asylum for the relief and support of invalid and disabled soldiers of the Army of the United States," approved March 3, 1851, and also whether such sums added to other sources of revenue available for the use of said home have been and are adequate for the maintenance of said home, and if not, what additional amendment is required for the purpose.

LEASES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate what, if any, leases for lands, mineral or otherwise, in the Indian Territory are now existing; whether the same or any of them were made under legal authority; and whether any of them, and if so which ones, have been approved by the Secretary of the Interior or other authority in his Department.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business——

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of House bill 9051 under the agreement made yesterday.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance will proceed, and as it is read by paragraphs and sections it will be open to amendment.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance. Before having concluded the reading of the third paragraph of the proposed section 1——

Mr. HALE. In reading the first section will amendments need to be offered to each paragraph of the section, or must we wait until the reading of the section is completed? The order is that the reading shall be by paragraphs and sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would be more convenient to allow the reading of the section or paragraph to be concluded before amendments are offered.

Mr. HALE. To allow the reading of the section to be concluded?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order was that the substitute should be read by paragraphs and sections. The Chair thinks a paragraph would be open to amendment as soon as its reading was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator from Maine that when we reach the schedules of the tariff it would be better, I should think, to offer amendments to the paragraphs as they are reached in the reading——

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ALLISON. Because the tariff schedules form a single section.

Mr. HALE. My inquiry was only directed to the treatment of a section in which are found several paragraphs, whether Senators are expected to wait until the entire section is read or must offer amendments paragraph by paragraph as the paragraphs are read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the agreement of the Senate the paragraphs are open to amendment as the reading proceeds; but the Chair would hold that at the conclusion of the reading of a section, if any Senator desired to offer an amendment to a particular paragraph it would then be reverted to and the amendment could be offered.

Mr. HALE. That will cover the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the reading of the revenue bill been commenced this morning?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been commenced.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he and I understand alike that the Committee on Finance has reported but one amendment to the bill. Is there one amendment or more than one amendment reported by the Senator from Iowa to the pending bill?

Mr. ALLISON. There is but one amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. That is my impression.

Mr. ALLISON. It is an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HARRIS. I regarded it as one amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. There is one amendment to the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. The formal reading of that amendment has been dispensed with by consent of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been.

Mr. HARRIS. That being true, and there being but the one amendment, and that amendment in my opinion presenting an issue upon the general principle of revenue legislation, in order to test the sense of the Senate as to whether it will adopt the principle indicated by the House bill, which, as I understand it, proposes to reduce revenue by reducing taxation, while the substitute proceeds upon a principle of reducing revenue by to some extent at least increasing taxation, I move to lay on the table the amendment reported by the committee; and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves to lay upon the table the amendment reported by the committee, and upon this question asks that the yeas and nays may be entered on the Journal.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TURPIE. I call for the reading of the amendment for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment will proceed.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine will state his inquiry.

Mr. FRYE. Is the amendment now being read for information on the motion to lay on the table?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asked that the amendment might be read for information. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to lay the amendment upon the table, which is not debatable. Strictly speaking, the reading of the amendment would be in the nature of debate, and therefore not in order; but the request usually, when made, has been agreed to by the Senate, and the Chair is acting in accordance with the precedents.

Mr. FRYE. I wished to distinctly understand whether or not the reading was for amendment under the proposition of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is being read simply for information.

Mr. HARRIS. It can only be read for information under the pending motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. That amounts to a violation of the understanding. I do not know whether the Senator from Indiana looks at it in that way.

Mr. FRYE. It is a violation of the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a violation of the rule and a violation of the unanimous understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Strictly speaking, it is a violation of the rule; but it is in accordance with the uniform practice of the Senate, when the reading of an amendment is called for for information, to accede to the request.

Mr. SHERMAN. I submit to the Senator from Indiana whether the effect of his request is not substantially a violation of the unanimous agreement entered into in regard to this matter yesterday. It is a matter for him to decide. If he thinks otherwise, I shall not press the suggestion, nor do I care anything about it.

Mr. TURPIE. I will say, in answer to the Senator from Ohio, that for myself I do not wish, either directly or indirectly, to violate the understanding or agreement. When I asked for the reading of the amendment for information I supposed that the amendment was a separate measure offered by the committee to some section of the bill which they had reported as a substitute.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me to state to him——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I only proposed to ask the Senator from Indiana to withdraw his request for the reading for information, and to inform him, in connection with that request, that the amendment is the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance. It is simply one amendment in the nature of a substitute for the whole House bill, and that amendment I have moved to lay on the table.

Mr. TURPIE. I supposed at the time I asked for the reading for information that a separate section upon some subject had been reported by the committee, or a majority of it, as an amendment to the bill which it presented as a substitute. But, there being no such separate section, I shall not insist upon the reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from Indiana being withdrawn, the question recurs upon the motion made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to lay the amendment on the table, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on this motion.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. My colleague would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I should vote "nay," and I presume he would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and I understand that the Senator from Nevada would vote "nay."

Mr. FAULKNER (when Mr. KENNA'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. KENNA] is detained from the Senate to-day and is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea" on the pending motion.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" and I presume he would vote "nay."

Mr. HISCOCK. My colleague [Mr. EVARTS] would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. ALLISON (when the name of Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, was called). My colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa] is necessarily absent from the Chamber and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. If my colleague were here he would vote in the negative.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SABIN. I transfer my pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], who is absent, and I vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. BLAIR. I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. I understand that the pair has been announced.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not see him here. As he is not present, I withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to inquire if a pair has been announced with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], who is absent from the city.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No such pair has been announced.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask his colleague [Mr. TURPIE] whether the senior Senator from Indiana is paired.

Mr. TURPIE. I am not aware that he is.

Mr. HARRIS. I had supposed that he was, but did not know with whom. I know that if the Senator from Indiana were here he would vote "yea" upon the pending motion, and with that knowledge I should be glad if some Senator on the other side would pair with him if he has no pair.

Mr. BLAIR. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES], if that is agreeable to his colleague.

Mr. HARRIS. That Senator is absent also.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is absent and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is absent. They would vote against each other if they were present.

Mr. WALTHALL. There is no objection to that transfer.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I will transfer the pair and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to make a statement. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] was paired by arrangement with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON]. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] being absent, in the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], I suggest that they be paired with each other.

Mr. VANCE (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to withdraw my vote. I have been requested to pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina withdraws his vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand from the Senator from Illinois that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]?

Mr. CULLOM. He is, both Senators being absent.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well; let that be understood.

Mr. VANCE. I desire further to announce that if I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vest,
Blodgett,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Butler,	Gray,	Reagan,

NAYS—26.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Teller.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Davis,	Hoar,	Sabin.

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Vance,
Chace,	Hale,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa,
Daniel,	Hearst,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Quay,

So the Senate refused to lay on the table the substitute reported by the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to say that when I voted on the last roll-call I was under the impression that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] had voted in the affirmative. At the last session I had a general pair with him upon all questions where parties substantially divided, and I should not have voted had I not thought I heard the Senator from Alabama vote; but it appears he was not in the Chamber, and in justice to him I wish to state the fact now.

Mr. MORGAN. If my colleague [Mr. PUGH] had been present he would have voted in the affirmative.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the first section of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Committee on Finance, which is as follows:

TOBACCO.

That on and after the 1st day of February, 1889, manufacturers of cigars shall each pay a special tax of $3 annually: Provided, That the bond required to be given in conformity with the provisions of Title XXXV of the Revised Statutes of the United States by every person engaging in the manufacture of cigars in the internal-revenue districts of the United States shall be in such penal sum as the collector of internal revenue may require, not less than $100, with an addition of $10 for each person proposed to be employed by such person in making cigars.

That on and after the 1st day of February, 1889, the internal-revenue taxes on cigars, cheroots, and on all cigarettes weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand, which shall be manufactured and sold or removed for consumption or sale after that date, shall be $1.50 per thousand, and on cigarettes weighing less than 3 pounds to the thousand, 50 cents per thousand, and shall be paid by the manufacturer thereof.

That all laws now in force whereby farmers and producers of tobacco are restricted in the sale and disposition of the same, and all laws and parts of laws so far as the same relate to the internal-revenue taxes on the articles hereinafter specified, whether imported or manufactured in the United States, be, and the same are hereby, repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of February, 1889, namely: The taxes on manufactured tobacco and snuff, and the special taxes required by law to be paid by manufacturers of and dealers in leaf-tobacco, retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, dealers in manufactured tobacco, snuff, and cigars, peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and manufacturers of snuff: Provided, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such repeal or reduction shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be a rebate in favor of said manufacturer or dealer to the full amount and extent of the tax so paid thereon or to the full amount of the tax so reduced, as the case may be; but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within ninety days following the date when such repeal shall take effect; and no claim shall be allowed for a less amount than $10; and any special-tax stamp covering taxes repealed by this act may be redeemed for the portion of the special-tax year unexpired at the time of the repeal when the amount claimed for such stamp shall not be less than $10; and all sums required to satisfy claims under this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

The sum of $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the alteration of dies, plates, and stamps, for furnishing blanks and forms, and for such other expenses as shall be incident to the collection of special taxes at the reduced rates provided in this act.

Mr. VANCE. Are amendments in order now as we proceed with the reading of the sections?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are in order as the reading proceeds.

Mr. VANCE. In section 1 of the amendment, on page 69, line 46, I move to amend by striking out the word "ten" and inserting "five."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 69, in section 1, line 46, it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so as to read:

And no claim shall be allowed for a less amount than $5.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the substitute was resumed and continued to the end of section 11, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all internal-revenue laws limiting, restricting, or regulating the manufacture, sale, or exportation of all tobacco and snuff, except as herein provided, are hereby repealed, to take effect on the 1st day of February, 1889; and that there shall be no drawback allowed upon any such articles which shall be entered for export on or after that date: Provided, That all laws now in force shall remain and have full force and effect in respect to all offenses committed, liabilities incurred, or rights accruing or accrued prior to the date when the repeal of the taxes specified in this act shall take effect.

ALCOHOL IN THE INDUSTRIAL ARTS.

SEC. 3. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and hereby is, authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the filing of such bond as he may prescribe, to establish warehouses, to be designated as bonded alcohol warehouses, to be used exclusively for the storing of distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent. of proof spirit as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and in the distillers' original casks or packages, each of which warehouses shall be in the charge of a storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, to be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner that storekeepers and storekeepers and gaugers for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. Every such warehouse shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such warehouse is located, shall be in the joint custody of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened, or remain open, except in the presence of such storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses. And such warehouses shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. 4. That distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent. of proof spirit as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States may, after having been properly gauged, marked, stamped, and branded in distillery warehouses, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and also stamped as hereinafter provided, be removed in bond from distillery bonded warehouses to a bonded alcohol warehouse, under such regulations and after making such entries, and executing and filing with the collector of the district in which such spirits are manufactured such bonds and bills of lading, and giving such other additional security as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 5. That such distilled spirits, after being deposited in such bonded alcohol warehouse, may, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, be removed to secure store-rooms, and used in manufacturing establishments, as hereinafter provided, without payment of the internal-revenue tax, in the industrial arts, and in the manufacture of articles, preparations, compounds, acetic and other acids, and medicinal drugs, or chemicals made according to the directions of the United States or other national pharmacopœia or according to formulas as published in any of the dispensatories in common use among physicians or apothecaries in the United States. But nothing herein contained shall be held or construed as authorizing the use of any distilled spirits upon which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid in the manufacture of tinctures, proprietory articles, wines, liquors, cordials, bitters, or other alcoholic compounds which are used or sold as beverages, or which, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may be so used or sold. All articles excluded from the provisions of this act, manufactured or stored on any premises to which distilled spirits have been removed free of tax under the provisions of this act, and all articles manufactured or stored in violation of this act shall be forfeited to the United States. Every person desiring to have a bonded alcohol warehouse or store-room established, intending to commence or continue business therein, shall file with the collector of internal revenue of the district in which the building or room to be used as such warehouse or store-room is located a notice in duplicate of his desire and intention, stating the location of the building or room, and such other information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require; and at the time of filing of such notice shall execute a bond in duplicate, in the form prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, conditioned that he will comply with all the provisions of law and regulations made in pursuance thereof pertaining to the business to be carried on by him, and that he will not use, or allow to be used, any distilled spirits entered into or removed from his warehouse or store-room by any person or persons whatsoever for any of the uses not authorized by this act, and that in case any such spirits shall be so used, he shall pay, or cause to be paid, to the United States a sum double the amount of the tax on all such spirits so used, and shall pay all penalties incurred or fines imposed on him for violation of any of the provisions of this act. Said bonds shall each be with at least two sureties, approved by the collector of the district, and for the penal sum of not less than double the amount of the tax on the estimated quantity of such spirits that are intended to be entered in such warehouse or store-room, as the case may be, during a period of sixty days, but in no case shall the penal sum of said warehouse bond be less than $100,000, nor that of the store-room bond be less than $5,000, and the said bonds shall be strengthened and renewed at such times and shall contain such other conditions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may require. The collector may refuse to approve said bond when in his judgment the situation of the warehouse or store-room is such as will enable the warehouse proprietor or the manufacturer to defraud the United States; and in case of such refusal the proprietor or manufacturer may appeal to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, whose decision in the matter shall be final. One copy of the notice and application and bond will be forwarded to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and one of each will be retained by the collector.

SEC. 6. That all distilled spirits intended to be entered for deposit in a bonded alcohol warehouse, before being removed from the distillery warehouse, shall have affixed to each cask or package an engraved stamp indicative of such intention, to be provided and furnished to the several collectors as in the case of other stamps, and to be charged to them and accounted for in the same manner, and for the expense attending the providing and affixing such stamps 10 cents for each stamp shall be paid to the collector of the district on making the entry for such removal.

SEC. 7. That any manufacturer, after having provided, at his own expense, on the premises, and connected with his manufactory, a secure store-room, in which all spirits used in the manufactory shall be exclusively entered and stored, and to be separated by a secure wall from all other parts of such manufactory, and with one door only entering therein, and all other openings secured and fastened, and approved by the collector of the district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, after the filing of the notice and bond as required by this act, may, under such bonds and securities as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, remove distilled spirits of an alcoholic strength of not less than 180 per cent. of proof spirit as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in distillers' original casks or packages, without payment of the internal-revenue tax, from a bonded alcohol warehouse, as defined in this act, to his store-room for use in his manufactory as hereinbefore provided. But such spirits shall remain in the original packages until withdrawn for immediate use. Every such store-room shall be under the control of the collector of internal revenue of the district in which such manufactory is located, and shall be in the charge of a storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and in the joint custody of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and the proprietor thereof, and kept securely locked, and shall at no time be unlocked or opened, or remain open, except in the presence of such storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, or other person who may be designated to act for him, as provided in the case of distillery warehouses, and such storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, shall be appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid in the same manner that storekeepers or storekeepers and gaugers for distillery warehouses are now appointed, assigned, transferred, and paid. And in case the official bond of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger has been approved before the passage of this act, such officer shall file a new official bond, which must be approved by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue before he is assigned to duty under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 8. The storekeeper or storekeeper and gauger assigned to such store-room shall, in addition to keeping such books and making such reports, concerning spirits entered in, and delivered and removed from such store-room, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, have access to every part of such manufactory in which such distilled spirits are used, and make a report each month to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, stating the kind and quantity of distilled spirits used during the month, the purpose for which used, and furnish such other information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may require and prescribe; and such store-rooms shall be under such further regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe.

SEC. 9. That under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, any proprietor of a bonded alcohol warehouse, who has filed with the collector a bond with at least two sureties, and in the form and sum specified in this act, may admix with the distilled spirits entered in his warehouse, in the presence of the storekeeper, methylic alcohol, wood-alcohol, or wood-naphtha, which shall cause such distilled spirits to be unfit for use as a beverage; and such distilled spirits, after being so methylated, and drawn off in the presence of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, and under the supervision of a gauger to be designated by the collector, into packages of a form and material to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and different from those of casks in which distilled spirits are usually contained, such packages to be gauged, marked, stamped, and branded by the gauger as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, may be sold and removed from such warehouse without the payment of the internal-revenue tax. But distilled spirits produced in different months shall not be drawn into the same package, and each package shall not be of less capacity than 5 wine gallons, nor of greater capacity than 25 wine gallons, nor contain more than 39 proof gallons of spirits. Methylated spirits may be used in the arts and manufactures, and for burning, and in the manufacture of articles and compounds, except wines, liquors, cordials, bitters, and other alcoholic compounds used and sold as beverages, or in the opinion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue calculated or intended to be so used or sold. And the methylation of such spirits shall be by the addition of methylic alcohol, wood-alcohol, or wood-naphtha in such quantities, and in such manner, in the presence of the storekeeper, or storekeeper and gauger, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And no methylated spirits shall be permitted on any premises in which the business of a distiller, rectifier, wholesale liquor-dealer, or retail liquor-dealer is carried on, or in premises connected therewith by any private or internal communication. Every person intending to withdraw methylated spirits from any bonded alcohol warehouse shall file with the collector of the district in which the spirits are to be used an application, under oath, setting forth the purpose for which the spirits are to be withdrawn, the estimated quantity to be so withdrawn and used during a period of one year; the place where the spirits are to be stored, and a full description of the premises on which the spirits are to be so used; also, the name and residence of every person interested, or to be interested, in the business to be carried on at said premises; and the application shall be in such form, and shall contain such further information as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, by regulation, require.

Upon the receipt of such application and after making such inquiries as will satisfy him that the statements therein contained are true, the collector shall, upon the applicant filing with him a bond with satisfactory sureties and in a penal sum of not less than double the amount of the tax on the spirits intended to be withdrawn during the period of one year, issue a permit, under seal, for the withdrawal of said spirits for the purpose or purposes to be therein specified; said bond and permit shall be in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and may be renewed, and shall be canceled or revoked at his discretion.

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to have such permits printed from engraved plates and with serial numbers, as in the case of special-tax stamps.

No methylated spirits shall be withdrawn from any bonded alcohol warehouse except upon a permit issued as aforesaid, which permit shall, at the time each withdrawal of spirits is made thereunder, be presented by the person to whom it is issued, or by his duly authorized agent, to the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse, who shall indorse upon the permit the quantity of spirits withdrawn, giving the number of packages, the serial numbers of packages and stamps, the number of proof gallons, the date when tax is due by three years' limit, and the date of withdrawal in each case. But in no case shall the quantity of spirits withdrawn under any permit during the period for which the permit is issued exceed the quantity of spirits specified therein. And the sale, removal, and use of such methylated spirits shall be under such regulations and restrictions as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. And said Commissioner may, in his discretion, exact bonds and returns of persons who purchase or receive, use, or transport methylated spirits. And any internal-revenue officer shall, at all times, have right of access to all premises on which such methylated spirits are received, stored, or used. And the provisions of sections 3276 and 3277 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so far as applicable, are hereby made to apply to such premises and to the proprietors or occupants thereof. And any person who shall demythylate, or separate methylic alcohol, wood-alcohol, or wood-naphtha from any such distilled spirits, or use, or by willful neglect, cause to be used, any such methylated spirits for any of the uses not authorized by this act, or who shall separate or recover, or cause the separation or recovery of any alcohol permitted to be used in the manufacture of any of the articles by the provisions of this act free of tax, shall on conviction pay a penalty of not less than $500, nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. 10. That every proprietor of any such bonded alcohol warehouse who shall have filed the application and bond, and every manufacturer who shall have provided a suitable store-room, which have been approved by the collector of the district and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, shall provide a book to be prepared and kept in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may prescribe, and shall make daily entries therein of all spirits received, with the name of the person from whom the spirits were purchased, and the name of the distiller by whom and the district in which the spirits were produced, and the serial number of each cask or package, and the actual contents of each when received by him. He shall also, in like manner, enter in said book the quantity of spirits removed each day, and the name, occupation, and address of the person to whom the spirits are sold; and if a manufacturer, he shall enter in said book the quantity removed from the store-room, and if less than a cask or package, the actual quantity removed from any cask or package; and he shall also enter the names of all articles in the manufacture of which such spirits have been used as authorized in this act. And every person keeping the book herein required shall, on or before the tenth day of each month, make a full and accurate transcript of all entries made during the preceding month, and shall, after verifying the same by oath, forward the same through the collector of the district to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The book herein required shall be kept on the premises described in the application, and shall at all times be open for the inspection of any revenue officer; and such officer shall at all times have access to said premises for the purpose of inspecting the same, or any stock, utensil, apparatus, or appliances therein, where such spirits are used, and the owner or occupant of said premises shall, on demand of such officer, furnish needful assistance to enable the said officer to make such examination and report. And any person who shall willfully use, or by neglect cause to be used, any distilled spirits entered in his bonded alcohol warehouse or store-room established under this act in any manner except as expressly provided and permitted in this act, shall on conviction pay a penalty of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years.

SEC. 11. That any person who, under the provisions of this act, or under any regulation issued in pursuance hereof, shall neglect or refuse to make or render any entry, bond, or account, or shall make or render any false or fraudulent entry, bond, or account, or shall, in qualifying as a surety to any bond required by this act, make any false or fraudulent statement or representation as to the property owned by him, and any person who shall fail to use any stamp, label, tag, mark, caution-notice, or any other device prescribed by this act, or by any regulation issued in pursuance of this act, or shall fraudulently use or reuse the same, shall for any such offense, on conviction had, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years; and any vessel, package, or other inclosure not stamped, marked, or branded as required by law and this act, all spirits or other materials contained in such vessel, cask, or package, or inclosure shall be forfeited to the United States. Nothing in this act shall be construed as extending the time within which the tax on distilled spirits shall be paid beyond the limit fixed by law within which such spirits must be withdrawn from distillery warehouses upon payment of the tax. And, in case any spirits withdrawn from a distillery warehouse under the provisions of this act are not used as authorized by this act within the time fixed by the distiller's warehousing bond for the payment of the tax, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall assess the tax against the person liable, under bond as warehouse proprietor or manufacturer at the time, for the proper use and custody of the spirits, and such tax shall be collected as in the case of other assessed taxes.

It shall not be lawful for any person to receive, use, or store any methylated distilled spirits free of internal-revenue tax under the provisions of this act on any premises within 600 feet in a direct line from any premises used as a distillery or for rectifying distilled spirits.

Any person who shall receive, or use distilled spirits, free of tax, under the provisions of this act, and shall knowingly or willfully omit, neglect, or refuse to do, or cause to be done, any of the things required to be done by this act, or any regulation made pursuant thereto, or shall do anything by this act prohibited, or declared thereby to be unlawful, if there be no specific penalty or punishment imposed by this act for the neglecting, omitting, or refusing to do the thing required, or for the doing or causing to be done, the thing prohibited, or declared unlawful, he shall, on conviction, pay a penalty at the discretion of the court, not exceeding $5,000. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized to determine the quality and strength of the methylic alcohol, wood-alcohol, or wood-naphtha, that may be used in methylating spirits. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may also, at his discretion, require the maker of methylated spirits to provide a separate store-room and vats, with suitable locks and fastenings, for keeping and storing methylic alcohol, wood-alcohol, or wood-naphtha, used in methylating and mixing, and may require samples to be furnished from such vats, or other receptacles, for chemical analysis and for his approval.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the Senate have heard read the sections which relate to alcohol used in the industrial arts. While I have grave doubts about the practicability of trying these sections without encouraging fraud, at the same time I believe that the object of the sections is a good one—to remove all tax from spirits or alcohol used for the purposes of manufacture or in the arts or as medicines and the like, and to confine the tax on whisky to that which is used for consumption in the ordinary form.

These sections are very harsh and severe; they are necessarily so; but I do not believe that even with all their harshness and severity they will be successfully applied and executed. Still, as I have no objection to the object sought for, the removal of the tax on any article essential to many of the industrial arts and used to the extent of seven or eight million dollars a year, not for consumption in the ordinary way, I am willing to see the experiment tried. I wish simply to enter my caveat for the reasons partially stated by Commissioner Miller in his recent report, and for reasons which I have also previously stated before the Committee on Finance. I fear it will not be a successful experiment, but I am willing to let it pass without any resistance, stating, however, that I may offer one or two amendments in detail in regard to some provisions of these sections to which my attention has been called this morning, but which I have not sufficiently studied to feel authorized now in moving an amendment. I take it that I have a right at any time in the Senate or in the committee stage to offer these amendments to carry out the view I have taken of these sections.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not desire to detain the further reading of the bill. I wish, however, to give notice that when the bill is reported to the Senate I shall probably offer several amendments to the internal-revenue sections, and especially to the sections referred to by the Senator from Ohio; but for the present, as the amendments are not perfected, I will allow the reading of the measure to proceed without offering the amendments at this time, and will, when the bill is reported to the Senate, have them ready and will then offer them.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to offer an amendment as an independent section, to come in at the end of section 10.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section after section 10 the following:

That whenever in any statute denouncing any violation of the internal-revenue laws as a felony, crime, or misdemeanor, there is prescribed in such statute a minimum punishment, less than which minimum no fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment is authorized to be imposed, every such minimum punishment is hereby abolished; and the court or judge in every such case shall have discretion to impose any fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment not exceeding the limit authorized by such statute, whether such fine, penalty, imprisonment, or punishment be less or greater than the said minimum so prescribed.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, that is merely extending the provisions of the law authorizing the judge to exercise his discretion to the whole law relating to internal taxes. The present law, which has just been read as part of the substitute of the Senate Finance Committee, in the preceding section, providing penalties for violations of this provision, which it is admitted affords great chance to the commission of fraud, gives the judge a discretion, merely limiting him to a maximum punishment. This amendment of mine extends that discretion of the court to all violations of the internal-revenue laws. I think it is eminently proper that it should be done.

Mr. VEST. I did not catch all the wording of that amendment, but I suppose the Senator from North Carolina does not mean to extend it to any except violations of internal-revenue laws.

Mr. VANCE. That is all.

Mr. VEST. I ask the Secretary to read it again. It seemed to me to extend to the whole criminal statutes of the United States.

Mr. VANCE. That is not the intention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment of Mr. VANCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. ALDRICH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I will vote "nay," it being understood that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If present, the Senator from Maine would vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], who is absent. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL] is also absent, and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO] is paired with him. I have transferred my pair with the Senator from Louisiana to the Senator from Illinois, so that the Senator from Florida and myself can both vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I was paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], but under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Nebraska I will vote "yea," my pair having been transferred.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I beg to announce that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nevada "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is uncertain whether the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] did not announce some pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON].

Mr. BLAIR. As I understood, my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] was transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. BUTLER. I announced the pair between my colleague and the Senator from Nevada. I was not aware of the fact that the Senator from New Hampshire was paired with him.

Mr. BLAIR. Then I resume my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the least objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws his vote.

Mr. SABIN. I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. VEST (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. As I see he is absent, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], both of whom are necessarily absent from the Chamber.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to announce that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is informed that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has voted.

Mr. FAULKNER. The understanding was that the pair controlled as to those two Senators.

Mr. HARRIS. I will say to the Senator from West Virginia that on the vote on the motion to lay upon the table the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] was absent from the Chamber, and it was arranged on that vote that they should be paired. The Senator from Nevada came in subsequently, and a pair will have to be arranged between that Senator or some other with the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FAULKNER. That pair was arranged with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on this vote.

Mr. HARRIS. I stand corrected, then. That is all right; but the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has voted and is now not in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no power to withdraw the vote of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course not, unless the Senator were present to do it. Probably some Senator who is present will withdraw his vote and pair with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Berry,	Coke,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Ransom,
Blodgett,	Gray,	Reagan,
Butler	Harris,	Turpie,

NAYS—28.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Payne,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	McPherson,	Platt,	Teller.

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Brown,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Vest,
Call,	George,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Hale,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I have another amendment to offer, to come in as an independent section at the end of section 11, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert a new section after section 11, the following:

That no warrant, in any case under the internal-revenue law, shall be issued upon an affidavit making charges upon information and belief, unless such affidavit is made by a collector or deputy collector of internal revenue or by a revenue agent; and, with the exception aforesaid, no warrant shall be issued except upon a sworn complaint, setting forth the facts constituting the offense and alleging them to be within the personal knowledge of the affiant. And the United States shall not be liable to pay any fees to marshals, clerks, commissioners, or other officers for any warrant issued or arrest made in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless there be a conviction or the prosecution has been approved, either before or after such arrest, by the attorney of the United States for the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, or unless the prosecution was commenced by information or indictment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I offer another amendment as an independent section, to come in at the same place, at the end of section 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert a new section after section 11, the following:

That whenever a warrant shall be issued by a commissioner or other judicial officer having jurisdiction for the arrest of any person charged with a criminal offense, such warrant, accompanied by the affidavit on which the same was issued, shall be returnable before some judicial officer named in section 1014 of the Revised Statutes residing in the county of arrest, or, if there be no such judicial officer in that county, before some such judicial officer residing in another county nearest to the place of arrest. And the judicial officer before whom the warrant is made returnable as herein provided shall have exclusive authority to make the preliminary examination of every person arrested as aforesaid, and to discharge him, admit him to bail, or commit him to prison, as the case may require: Provided, That this section shall not apply to the Indian Territory.

Mr. VANCE. There certainly can be no objection to this amendment. It simply requires that when a person is arrested he shall be taken before the United States commissioner in the county of arrest most convenient to him; and, if there be none in that county, then to the commissioner in the nearest county where a commissioner resides. It seems to me that there can be no possible objection to that. It also invests the commissioner with power to discharge the person arrested if there is not a prima facie case against him, instead of binding him over to the court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. Otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON's name was called). I will announce now, and for the last time, the pair of my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). My pair having been transferred under the arrangement announced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], I vote "yea."

Mr. STEWART (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

Mr. ALDRICH. That pair has been transferred.

Mr. STEWART. Then I vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], and therefore refrain from voting. I do not see him in the Chamber. I voted on the former votes without noticing his absence.

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], who is temporarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, he would vote "nay" and I should vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS. I announce for the last time the pair of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH].

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. FARWELL] is paired now with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. BLACKBURN. Noticing the absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], I desire to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. BECK] with the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORGAN. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CHANDLER (after having voted in the negative). I desire to inquire whether the name is checked of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is not recorded.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I withdraw my vote.

Mr. PAYNE (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to inquire whether my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's colleague has not voted.

Mr. PAYNE. That Senator requested me to pair with him; so I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—15.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Berry,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Butler,	Gray,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Ransom,

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stockbridge.
Davis,	Hiscock,	Platt,

ABSENT—42.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Blair,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Morgan,	Teller,
Bowen,	George,	Palmer,	Vance,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Vest,
Call,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Hale,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chandler,	Hampton,	Quay,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Daniel,	Ingalls,	Sabin,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting. The Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Allison,	Cullom,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Bate,	Davis,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Berry,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Morgan	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Morrill,	Teller,
Butler,	Frye,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Call,	Hale,	Pasco,	Vance,
Cameron,	Harris,	Payne,	Vest,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Platt,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Coke,	Hoar,	Ransom,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the roll-call of the Senate 46 Senators have answered to their names. A quorum being present, the roll will be called upon the question of agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr CHACE].

Mr. WALTHALL (when the name of Mr. GEORGE was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I should vote "nay" if he were present, and he would vote "yea."

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but the pair has been transferred to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. I vote "nay."

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. TELLER. With the consent of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], I will transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to my colleague [Mr. BOWEN], and I will vote "nay."

Mr. CALL. Very well. Then I vote "yea."

Mr. VEST. I again announce my pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. BLAIR. I announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], which will continue until he comes.

Mr. CULLOM. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. FARWELL] with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. My colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Berry,	Coke,	Payne,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Butler,	Harris,	Reagan,
Call,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Frye,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Manderson,	Sabin,	Teller.

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Edmunds,	Hampton,	Quay,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Jones of Nevada,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Gibson,	Kenna,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Gray,	Plumb,
Daniel,	Hale,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I offer another amendment, to come in at the same place as those previously moved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section after section 11 the following:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may compromise any civil or criminal case, and may reduce or remit any fine, penalty, forfeiture, or assessment, under the internal-revenue laws.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I have another amendment to offer, to come in as an independent section at the end of section 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina offers an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section after section 11 the following:

That section 3255 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by striking out all after said number and substituting therefor the following:

"And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may exempt distillers of brandy made exclusively from apples, peaches, grapes, or other fruits from any provision of this title relating to the manufacture of spirits, except as to tax thereon, when in his judgment it may seem expedient to do so."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that question is put I ask the Senator from North Carolina what he desires to accomplish by this amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to accomplish by the amendment some exemption to the farmer who distills from fruit and to the small distilleries on their plantations, that they may be exempted from the supervision of storekeepers, gaugers, etc., at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and render an account of their tax according to the capacity of their stills.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the amendment be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. VANCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). I desire to announce for the last time to-day that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN], who is temporarily absent, and withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. I announce my pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—16.

Bate,	Call,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Berry,	Coke,	Ransom,	Vance,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Reagan,	Vest,
Butler,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,	Walthall.

NAYS—30.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sabin,
Allison,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Harris,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Cockrell,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Teller.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Platt,
Davis,	Ingalls,	Plumb,

ABSENT—30.

Beck,	Eustis,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Evarts,	Hearst,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Stockbridge,
Brown,	George,	Kenna,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Gorman,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Daniel,	Gray,	Pugh,
Edmunds,	Hale,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to offer a further amendment, to come in at the end of section 11 as an independent section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section, after section 11, the following:

That section 3332 of the Revised Statutes, and the supplement thereto, shall be amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"When a judgment of forfeiture in any case of seizure is recovered against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits because no bond has been given, or against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of spirits having a registered producing capacity of less than 150 gallons a day, every still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub therein shall be sold, as in case of other forfeited property, without being mutilated or destroyed. And in case of seizure of a still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, fermenting-tub, mash-tub, or other distilling apparatus of any kind whatsoever, for any offense involving forfeiture of the same, it shall be the duty of the seizing officer to remove the same from the place where seized to a place of safe storage; and said property so seized shall be sold as provided by law, but without being mutilated or destroyed."

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the special order for this hour, being Senate bill 3401, the title of which will be reported by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the special order be postponed to one week from to-day, at 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLISON. When that special order was made, of course it was made subject to the consideration of the tariff bill. I suppose that will be understood as applying to it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the special order, being Senate bill 3401, be postponed for one week, the consideration to be resumed on Wednesday, the 12th instant, at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that, subject to the tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. CULLOM. There is an amendment before the Senate, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. VANCE. It seems to me that this is as fair a proposition as I have offered, and I should like, as there has been an interregnum, that it be read again for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. VANCE. I can not see who can object, or why any one should object, to this amendment to prevent the wanton destruction of property that might otherwise be sold for the benefit of the Government or somebody. Under the present law the special hardship is that when a man's distillery is seized, being supposed to have violated the internal-revenue laws, his property is destroyed. Perhaps there is a verdict of not guilty, but his property has been destroyed, and there is a double injury inflicted upon him. This amendment simply provides that the property shall be confiscated and sold without being mutilated or destroyed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "having a registered producing capacity of less than 150 gallons a day."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 7, after the word "spirits," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "day," in line 8, as follows:

Having a registered producing capacity of less than 150 gallons a day.

Mr. CULLOM. Now let us see how it would read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported as proposed to be amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That section 3332 of the Revised Statutes, and the supplement thereto, shall be amended so that said section shall read as follows:

"When a judgment of forfeiture in any case of seizure is recovered against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of distilled spirits, because no bond has been given, or against any distillery used or fit for use in the production of spirits, every still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, mash-tub, and fermenting-tub therein shall be sold as in case of other forfeited property, without being mutilated or destroyed. And in case of seizure of a still, doubler, worm, worm-tub, fermenting-tub, mash-tub, or other distilling apparatus of any kind whatsoever, for any offense involving forfeiture of the same, it shall be the duty of the seizing officer to remove the same from the place where seized to a place of safe storage; and said property so seized shall be sold as provided by law, but without being mutilated or destroyed."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment as amended. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. VANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PAYNE (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], who has been called out of the Senate Chamber and will be back in a few moments.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to announce once for all that my colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa], who is detained from the Senate, is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Call,	Pasco,	Vance,
Berry,	Coke,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Reagan,
Blodgett,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Jones of Arkansas,	Turpie,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Ingalls,	Palmer,
Allison,	Dolph,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Frye,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Davis,	Hoar,	Paddock,	Teller.

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Sherman,
Brown,	George,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Chace,	Gibson,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Colquitt,	Gray,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Daniel,	Hale,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Edmunds,	Hampton,	Quay,

So the amendment as amended was rejected.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I am happy to say that I am nearing the end of my amendments. I beg the indulgence of the Senate to offer only a few more. I offer this as an independent section to come in at the end of section 11.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, after section 11, as a new section:

That whenever it shall be made to appear to the United States court or judge having jurisdiction that the health or life of any person imprisoned for any offense, in a county jail or elsewhere, is endangered by close confinement, the said court or judge is hereby authorized to make such order and provision for the comfort and well-being of the person so imprisoned as shall be deemed reasonable and proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I offer one more amendment, to come in at the end of the one just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as a new section the following:

SEC. —. That all clauses of section 3244 of the Revised Statutes, and all laws amendatory thereof, and all other laws which impose any special taxes upon manufacturers of stills, retail dealers in liquors, and retail dealers in malt liquors, are hereby repealed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BATE. I ask for the reading of that amendment again.

The amendment was read.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], but as I think we agree on this subject I shall vote. I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. Seeing that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is absent, I announce that I am paired with him; but I should vote "nay" if at liberty to vote. My colleague [Mr. FARWELL], if present, would also vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I should vote "nay" but for that.

Mr. MANDERSON. Has the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] voted on this question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with that Senator, and therefore abstain from voting. I should vote "nay" if he were present.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], but believing he would vote "nay" if present, I record my vote in the negative.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 4, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—4.

Call,	Ransom,	Vance,	Vest.

NAYS—30.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Bate,	Frye,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Berry,	Harris,	Palmer,	Teller,
Butler,	Hawley,	Payne,	Turpie,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Coke,	Ingalls,	Reagan,
Davis,	McPherson,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—42.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Quay,
Blackburn,	Edmunds,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Eustis,	Hoar,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Brown,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Cameron,	George,	Manderson,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cockrell,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Gray,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hale,	Pugh,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Allison,	Cullom,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Davis,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Dawes,	Morgan,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Dolph,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Blair,	Eustis,	Paddock,	Stewart,
Blodgett,	Frye,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Butler,	Hale,	Pasco,	Teller,
Call,	Harris,	Payne,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Hawley,	Platt,	Vance,
Chandler,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Pugh,	Walthall.
Coke,	Ingalls,	Ransom,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-one Senators have answered to their names, more than a quorum.

Mr. VANCE. If I can be permitted to do so, to save the time of the Senate I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presence of a quorum having been ascertained, the Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered, to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. VANCE. Now, Mr. President, I desire to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote in the Senate on the third amendment, I think it was, which I offered, forbidding the issuing of warrants upon information and belief except by the regular officers of internal revenue.

Mr. HARRIS. You will offer it in the Senate, you mean?

Mr. VANCE. Yes, I will offer it in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the committee's amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, I had supposed the Secretary had completed the reading of this schedule, but, as I now understood him, he is upon section 12 of this schedule. Am I correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. McPHERSON. After the Secretary has completed the reading of the entire schedule, it is my purpose to ask a separate vote upon eliminating the whole schedule from the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. He has read all of that.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I will ask for it now for the following reasons: In the first place, I call the attention of the committee and of the Senate to the fact that the succeeding schedule in the committee's substitute, known as Schedule A, classed as chemical products——

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from New Jersey indulge me to ask if there is not now pending an amendment to this schedule of internal-revenue taxation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The last amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina was withdrawn by him with the consent of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I was not aware of that. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought that amendment was pending.

Mr. McPHERSON. Schedule A would require very great reconstruction in case the Senate should decide, as I hope it will, to strike out this entire schedule relating to spirits used in the arts; and I call the especial attention of the Senate to the fact that the rates of duty imposed in the chemical schedule are nearly the rates of duty now found in the existing tariff. There is no reduction to correspond with the amount which is remitted in the tax upon spirits. It is claimed by the Finance Committee in their majority report that it will reduce the revenue to the extent of about $7,000,000. Therefore this reduction claimed by them is only an additional bounty given to the manufacturers of chemical products. It will be no particular benefit to consumers. It will not aid in the exportation of our goods so long as the spirits themselves are exported free of duty.

As the bases of almost all of the chemical products are products of importation, nothing could result beneficially to the manufacturer by this remission of duty so far as the export trade is concerned.

But the main cause of my opposition to this schedule is found in this, that, instead of a reduction of revenue to the extent of $7,000,000, there will be a reduction of more than $20,000,000; because, I take it, no member of the committee will assert as a fact or as approximating the truth that there will not be great frauds upon the revenue under this scheme. It will be impossible to prevent them. So says the Treasury Department; so says every foreign government that has ever undertaken to deal with this question in the manner proposed by this committee.

Now, a reduction of, say, $15,000,000 or $20,000,000 of revenue, which gives no benefit to the people on articles of necessity in every-day use, by the reduction of taxes on spirits, is only the first step towards an absolute abrogation or abolition of the whole whisky tax.

I want to compliment the committee on their skill in this first and primal step toward the abrogation of the entire whisky tax, for, just as sure as one day follows another, it will ultimately be found necessary to abolish the whole whisky tax or to repeal this legislation.

For the reason I have stated, and for the additional reason that inasmuch as the bill itself in other schedules is based very largely upon what the Senate may do touching this particular schedule, I desire to ask now a separate vote upon this particular question in order that when we reach Schedule A we may proceed intelligently to revise and amend that, because it will be dependent entirely upon what action the Senate may take respecting this question. Therefore I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of eliminating from this measure all that is found under the title of "Alcohol in the industrial arts," commencing on page 70 and ending on page 86, at Title XXXIII. I think it will expedite the business of the Senate with respect to the consideration of this whole subject.

If it be the purpose of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to take the first and initiatory step towards the continuance of the most oppressive duties upon the necessaries of life, by first interposing a system of legislation of this character, which will make it absolutely necessary to repeal the entire internal-revenue system of the country in regard to whisky, tobacco, and everything else, with all that relates to it, then let the country understand it.

For myself, I am unalterably opposed to this legislation. I am unalterably opposed to any remission of tax upon spirits, and I am opposed to any system which offers a premium for fraud upon the Treasury, and this measure virtually does that; and I am unalterably opposed to giving manufacturers in any particular industry, especially under this chemical schedule, where to-day the profits are very large under existing duties, what the committee confessedly declare to be $7,000,000 more in bounty offered to them upon these products.

If it be the purpose of the Senate to continue this system, then I think the Senate should be careful when it reaches the next schedule to see that the proper reductions be made in that upon the duties levied upon those products.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, there is some force in the suggestion made by the Senator from New Jersey that this is the proper time to test the question as to whether the sections which have been passed over relating to the use of alcohol in the arts shall remain in the bill or be excluded from it. As this measure, so far as the chemical schedule is concerned, is made up on the expectation that the previous provisions will be retained, if these sections are struck out it will be necessary, as suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, for the entire chemical schedule to be revised.

The Senator from New Jersey, however, is laboring under a misapprehension with reference to many things connected with this schedule. In the first place, it was the purpose and intent of the committee to reduce the rate of duty upon all chemicals in which alcohol is a solvent corresponding with the elimination of the internal-revenue tax on distilled spirits. If he will point out as we proceed with the chemical schedule wherein we have failed to make proper allowance for the withdrawal of spirits in bond for these purposes, I, for one, shall be glad to consider any amendment that may by suggested by him on that subject.

The Senator says it is admitted that the effect of these provisions will be to allow the perpetration of frauds upon the revenue. I know there have been doubts expressed on that subject, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has expressed a doubt to-day. I have no doubt myself, as I stated on this floor in October, that these provisions can be enforced so that there will be no fraud upon the revenue. I believe that can be done. It may be that in isolated cases there will be attempts at fraud; I do not say that will not be so. We have had, however, some experience in this country so far as the provisions respecting spirits in bond are concerned. It has been the law, I think since 1866—I may possibly be mistaken as to the date—that manufacturers of chemicals for export have been authorized to have warehouses established wherein their alcohol is placed and withdrawn by them free of tax. So this is not intended to affect one way or the other the export trade, because any chemist under an existing law, which has been in force I think for twenty years, or perhaps twenty-two, can avail himself of free alcohol. It is certain, however, that if for domestic purposes alcohol can be procured without the payment of the tax, it will result in a corresponding reduction in the prices of articles produced by that method. That is all there is in this.

I can see no difficulty in these provisions. They are in force in Germany; they are in force in Great Britain, and have been for many years. They have been in force here as respects articles exported in our own country. There may be some question as to these several provisions respecting methylation, and upon that subject I desire to say a single word.

I will say frankly that I do not attach any great importance to the suggestions made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue upon that subject. In the first place, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is remarkably brief on the subject. If there was any serious danger to this great source of revenue, it seems to me that it would be worth while for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to have elaborated the difficulties in the way. He simply puts in his report a paragraph calling attention to the fact that his chemist in the bureau has been experimenting respecting this matter. I had occasion to state here when this matter was up in October that there was no way of securing the withdrawal of methylic alcohol or wood-alcohol except by redistillation. It turns out now that these experiments show that distinctly; but the experiments made by this chemist in the Bureau of Internal Revenue are experiments which I consider to be of no value whatever as respects the great questions involved here. This experimenter took 10 per cent. of methyl alcohol and inserted it in the ordinary alcohol and then extracted it, and extracted it in every instance, as shown by his own report, at a loss of one-quarter of the whole product. Now, these provisions require the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to say what amount of methyl shall be introduced into these spirits.

I have no doubt, and I say this now in order that this experimenter may go on with his experiments, that if you will introduce 15 per cent. of methyl alcohol, the cost of extracting it or removing it would be so great that it would not be undertaken. But in every instance where he made an experiment he only took 10 per cent. In my judgment, what has been successful in Great Britain, what has been successful in Germany, can be made successful here, even as respects methylation.

But I have not heard, even in the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, a suggestion that the remaining provisions in these sections are not wise and just provisions. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue does not attack the great body of the provisions here, which provide that spirits may be introduced into alcohol warehouses and withdrawn in bond for the purposes of use in the industrial arts. I take it that his entire omission to discuss that question is an indication that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is en rapport with these sections, and that he believes that these sections can be made effective as respects the manufacturing industries of our country. If these provisions being here upon our table threatened the revenue, would not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue have turned his attention to the defects in these bonded provisions that the Senator from New Jersey now proposes to strike out?

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that these bonded provisions are practically invulnerable in the judgment of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The question of methylation is left largely to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the quantity and method of use, and I have no doubt that if a sufficient quantity of this wood-alcohol is inserted in the spirits, even by distillation it could not be withdrawn without an expense greater than the profit of withdrawal.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey is utterly mistaken in his general statement that the effect will not be to reduce to the consumer the difference in cost between the taxed spirits and the untaxed spirits. He is mistaken in another thing, in my judgment, and that is that this will materially affect the revenues from distilled spirits. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue himself in his report of last year only estimates 5,000,000 gallons as the amount used in the arts. I know others estimate it at ten or twelve millions. I have no doubt that if these provisions shall become a part of our statute law the effect will be to largely increase the use of alcohol in the arts. I believe that the effect will be in two or three or five years to increase that use so that from twenty-five to thirty million gallons of proof spirits will be used in the arts, but not to the detriment of the revenue.

Because of the great cost of the use of alcohol now in the arts, alcohol can not be largely used. So, then, although the revenue may only be depleted to the extent of six or seven or eight million dollars, I have no doubt these provisions, taken as a whole, will have the effect to largely increase the use of alcohol in the arts.

Mr. President, I urge the adoption of this portion of the measure because I thus believe, and because I am satisfied also that this is not a step in the direction of an elimination of the tax on distilled spirits, but is really a step which looks to the perpetuation of that tax, because it eliminates from the problem of the removal of the tax one great interest which is now suffering because of the imposition of the tax; and if these provisions shall prove sufficient to prevent any great fraud upon the revenue—and I have no doubt that will be the effect—it will certainly take away the desire on the part of a great number of people who now want this tax removed from asking its removal.

So if this is to be a test question upon these sections I hope that Senators will hesitate before they undertake to strike them from the pending measure.

Mr. McPHERSON. I intended when the measure was presented to the Senate to make no captious opposition in any way, shape, or form to any of its provisions, and I do not intend to do so now.

I still assert that with an absolutely prohibitive tariff on all the chemical products of which alcohol composes a part, with the trusts and combinations that are being formed day after day by the manufacturers and dealers in chemical products, really the public, the consumer, is to get no benefit whatever out of this remission of the tax on spirits used in the arts.

You now propose to reduce the tax upon alcohol that goes into these arts to the extent, as the committee claim, of $7,000,000; as I claim, to an extent of more than three times $7,000,000, owing to the frauds which it will be impossible to prevent under the system; and the general public will receive no benefit whatever from the reduction.

If that is a system which commends itself to the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, in my opinion it is a principle and a policy which will not commend itself to the people of the country; but of that perhaps they are the best judges.

I ask for the yeas and nays upon agreeing to my motion to strike out.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I have long since ceased to be surprised at any attitude the Senator from New Jersey might take upon the tariff question, but I shall be amazed if the motion which he has now made is supported by the Senators on the other side of the Chamber.

The proposition which he makes does not look to the improvement of the machinery by which alcohol may be used in the arts free of tax, but is a declaration on his part and on the part of his party friends that it shall not be so used. After taking the position before the American people that they are in favor of freeing raw materials for manufacturers from unnecessary taxation, the first vote of importance upon this bill is to be upon this question and on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey, that they will not permit materials of this kind to be used free of taxation, while the tax is entirely unnecessary either for the purposes of revenue or of protection.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him what is the tax imposed upon imported alcohol?

Mr. ALDRICH. Two dollars a gallon.

Mr. MORGAN. In this bill?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes; $2 a gallon.

Mr. MORGAN. You do not propose to make it free when it comes in from foreign countries?

Mr. ALDRICH. Not by any means, for the reason that we impose an internal-revenue tax upon domestic producers for other purposes. Does the Senator from Alabama mean to say that he is in favor of removing the duty upon foreign alcohol?

Mr. MORGAN. I am trying to find out what the Senator from Rhode Island is in favor of.

Mr. ALDRICH. I presume the Senator has found out. Has he not?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think I have.

Mr. ALDRICH. I inferred from the nature of the question (I take it for granted that I was mistaken) that the Senator was in favor of removing the duty.

If there is in the whole range of articles taxed by our internal-revenue laws or by our customs laws one article of raw material upon which the tax should be removed it is the tax upon alcohol used in the arts.

Mr. DAWES. Made here.

Mr. ALDRICH. Made here, and where the tax is added to the cost of every article into which it enters. There can be no dispute upon either side of the Chamber but that the only effect is to increase the revenue, and to increase at the same time the cost of articles which are necessaries of life, and which enter into the use of every family in the length and breadth of the United States. It is that principle in the details of the machinery which we have put into our bill, that the Senator from New Jersey is now assaulting. He proposes to strike out the provision entirely.

Let us examine for a moment the arguments by which the Senator supports his proposition, and I shall refer only to some which he used in his closing remarks. He says that the tax upon chemicals is now absolutely prohibitory. The importation of chemicals in 1887 was more than $15,000,000, and in 1888 it was a larger sum still.

The Senator says further that we do not propose to reduce the duties upon articles in which alcohol is used. He shows as little knowledge of the facts in regard to the Senate bill as he does in regard to the importation of chemical products. In the very first paragraph of Schedule A in the Senate bill the duty on acetic acids is reduced from 10 cents a pound to 4 cents a pound, on account of the free use of alcohol in the arts. If he had read the very first sentence in that schedule of the bill, his statement would have been confuted. In the fifth paragraph of the schedule the duty on tannic acid, now $1 a pound, is reduced to 25 cents a pound, a reduction of three-quarters of the present duty, simply and solely on account of the free use of alcohol in the arts. And that is the case throughout the whole length of the chemical schedule. Almost every paragraph in the entire schedule has been largely reduced on account of the free use of alcohol in the arts which we propose.

But that is not all. The domestic production of these articles and of tens of thousands of others will be largely affected by the free use of alcohol. The prices will be reduced, as I have already said, on articles in common use by all the people in the land. The medicines which they use will be largely affected in price by this proposed free use of alcohol; the cost of living will be greatly reduced; and yet from this Democratic party, who in the campaign just closed have been telling the people time and time again that they were anxious to reduce unnecessary and unjust taxation, we have this monstrous proposition to strike from the pending measure the sections which allow the free use of alcohol for the purpose of reducing the cost of living.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to his own confession in a report made by himself and which bears his name. The duties received from the entire importation of chemical products in 1887 amounted to $4,386,674. Under the present law the rate of duty is 30.78 per cent. Under the proposed scheme the duty is 29.70 per cent. With that amount of duty, and with only 1 per cent. of reduction, taking the whole chemical schedule together, how does he expect that he is to make a compensating reduction of $7,000,000, which he himself admits to be the amount reduced on the whisky tax alone?

Mr. DAWES. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands that the tax taken off our alcohol here, entering into our arts, is also to enter into the articles which are imported?

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know what is intended to be done. I only know that if you were to continue the tax on spirits, if you were to leave the Senate bill exactly as it stands to-day in the chemical schedule without an increase of duty at all—Senators say that they have reduced the duty in the chemical schedule as the compensation for the amount of tax reduction on the spirits—I say if you were to leave the chemical schedule as left in the bill and continue the tax on spirits, the profits would be large and the duties would then be absolutely prohibitory upon the importation of chemical products. What more can the most grasping chemical-manufacturing monopolist want, and why force upon him the $7,000,000 of additional bounty in remission of taxes upon his materials?

Mr. ALDRICH. After the experience of the Senator's political friends in undertaking to prove to the people of the country that an average ad valorem rate fixes the character of a tariff bill or of any part of it, I am surprised that the Senator from New Jersey should have used the illustration which he has now used in undertaking to prove that we have only reduced the duties a fraction of 1 per cent. upon this schedule. As I had occasion to show to the Senate near the close of the last session, while the House bill pretended or claimed to put lumber upon the free-list and did put it upon the free-list, it had by this same method of computation increased the average ad valorem rate upon the whole lumber schedule.

I do not think that the Senator from New Jersey is serious or in earnest in undertaking to prove that we have not reduced the duties upon chemicals, because if he will read the measure through he will find that we have in every instance reduced the duties upon articles into which alcohol enters in the arts. If we have not reduced them to the extent which we ought, the acting chairman of the committee has already said that we are willing to listen to the suggestions of the Senator from New Jersey, and we shall certainly conform our action to any intelligent fact which we may receive.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from Rhode Island is certainly entitled to my sympathy, as are those who think with him, and I freely give it to him. I am aware of the fact that the convention, called a Republican convention, which assembled in Chicago last June, announcing the faith and policy of the Republican party, declared in express terms that if it were necessary to continue the protective system in this country, in a manner, as a matter of course, which commended itself to the judgment of the manufacturers of the country, they would abolish the whole whisky tax. I know it was——

Mr. DAWES. I wish to inquire if the Senator knows of any——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will not the Senator wait a moment? I decline to yield to the Senator in the middle of a sentence. I know the committee have been very anxious to straddle the question. They have gone as far as they could with any degree of consistency, and they have attempted to compromise the matter between the Republican convention and the Republican people. They have taken off the tax on spirits used in the arts. They have reduced the revenue, as they declare, $7,000,000 by reason of that provision. As I say and as I prophesy, and as I believe I prophesy correctly, there will be an absolute reduction of more than $20,000,000 arising out of the fraud which will be of necessity perpetrated under this bill, and as I say again, without any corresponding reduction, without any corresponding benefit to the purchasers and consumers of chemical products, because of the fact that the duty is left prohibitory in itself. This in itself is a gigantic stride towards free whisky for all purposes, and ought to satisfy for the present at least every demand of the Republican party and people.

If it be the purpose of the other side of the Chamber to maintain the high rates of duty upon all the necessary articles of life, upon articles of clothing and things of that character, and to make these reductions on spirits to meet the demand made by the Republican convention as its idea of what should be the true faith and policy of the party, then I say to the committee that they have my sympathy, and I really think they have proposed a very ingenious adjustment of the matter in dispute between the Republican politicians, who run the convention, and the Republican voters, who do not seem to be in sympathy with any such policy.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator answer my question now?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will listen to the Senator's question.

Mr. DAWES. The question I wished to put to the Senator was, if the alternative were presented to him of the entire abolition of the protective system or of the internal-revenue system, which would he take?

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator wants an answer, and he is entitled to it. For one, I shall never consent to the abolition of custom-houses. I believe in collecting the revenue needed by this Government for legitimate governmental purposes through the custom-houses, after the manner of the fathers. I do not believe in direct taxes, because that is the alternative of the abolition of the custom-houses.

In this country, under our constitutional method, there can be no such thing as the levying and collection of direct taxes. Take, if you please, the State of Alabama and the State of New Jersey, each having about an equal population. The ratables in New Jersey are five times more than the ratables or the assessed values in the State of Alabama. Under a direct-tax system as provided by the Constitution of the country the State of Alabama would be required to pay 5 per cent. tax, while the State of New Jersey would only be required to pay 1 per cent. upon her ratables. No people fit to be free would stand such a system of taxation for a single day. And until you adopt a system of direct taxation based upon property instead of population, there can be no free-traders in this country—all must be protectionists of greater or less degree.

The Senator asks another question: Would I propose to do away with the protective system? I would not. The measure of protection which I demand, all I have ever asked for and all I shall ever take, is that measure of protection which measures the difference between the rates of wages paid in this country and the rates paid in foreign countries on the same product. That I believe is due; that I believe would be legitimate, would be healthful; but when you undertake, as in the woolen schedule, to impose a rate of duty which is more than double the entire labor-cost found in the goods, then let me ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who receives the greatest benefit? Does it not go to the manufacturer? If he will show me any way in the world by which labor employed in that factory can get the full benefit of the duty levied and the protection given, then I think I will gladly vote with him for it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator do me the favor to condense that answer into a simple yes or no? Will you abolish the protective system or abolish the internal-revenue system when the alternative is presented to you—yes or no?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am not in the habit of jumping before I reach the stile. When any such question in a legitimate way comes before the Senate as a matter of legislation, I shall take the matter under prayerful consideration, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. Will you not let other people do the same?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. I state distinctly, and I should like to see the Republican who differs from me, that when that alternative is presented to me I shall vote for the abolition of the internal-revenue system against the abolition of the protective system; and I should like to get as direct an answer from the Senator from New Jersey if I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title "Alcohol in the industrial arts," being sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, and 11 of the committee amendment, has been amended on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] by adding section 12. The Chair understands the Senator from New Jersey now to move to strike out the entire title as amended, upon which he asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. SABIN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], but I have transferred that pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER], and I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. I will transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], so that I may be able to vote, and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT], who is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], may vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT. I vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. MANDERSON (after having voted in the negative). Through an inadvertence I voted, not noticing the absence of the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I suggest to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PASCO], who announced a pair between my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] and himself, that we can transfer our pairs and both vote.

Mr. PASCO. Very well.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. PADDOCK] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], and I will let my vote stand "nay."

Mr. PASCO. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 17, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Pasco,	Vest,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Call,	Harris,	Reagan,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	McPherson,	Vance,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Payne,	Spooner,
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt,	Stewart,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Plumb,	Stockbridge,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sabin,	Teller.

ABSENT—35.

Beck,	Chandler,	Gray,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Daniel,	Hale,	Quay,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Hearst,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Turpie,
Brown,	Farwell,	Kenna,	Voorhees.
Butler,	George,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Gorman,	Palmer,

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I shall reserve my right to move the amendment again in the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I rose to give the same notice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The enumeration of the sections will be changed to correspond with the amendment made on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. Section 13 will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. That on and after the 1st day of February, 1889, the following sections shall constitute and be a substitute for Title XXXIII of the Revised Statutes of the United States:

TITLE XXXIII.

DUTIES UPON IMPORTS.

SEC. 2502. That there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from foreign countries, and mentioned in the schedules herein contained, the rates of duty which are, by the schedules and paragraphs, respectively prescribed, namely:

SCHEDULE A.—CHEMICAL PRODUCTS.

1. Acids.—Acetic or pyroligneous acid, not exceeding the specific gravity of 1.047, 1½ cents per pound; exceeding the specific gravity of 1.047, 4 cents per pound.
2. Boracic acid, 5 cents per pound.
3. Chromic acid, 10 cents per pound.
4. Citric acid, 10 cents per pound.
5. Tannic acid or tannin, 25 cents per pound.
6. Tartaric acid, 10 cents per pound.
7. Alcoholic perfumery, including cologne-water and other toilet waters and all alcoholic compounds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $2 per gallon and 25 per cent. ad valorem.
8. Alizarine assistant, or soluble oil, or oleate of soda, or Turkey-red oil, 3 cents per pound.
9. Alumina, alum, alum cake, patent alum, sulphate of alumina, and aluminous cake, and alum in crystals or ground, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.
10. Ammonia.—Carbonate of ammonia, 1½ cents per pound.
11. Muriate of ammonia, or sal-ammoniac, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.
12. Sulphate of ammonia, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
13. Amylic alcohol, or fusel oil, 10 per cent. ad valorem.
14. Blacking of all kinds, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
15. Blue vitriol, or sulphate of copper, 2 cents per pound.
16. Bone-char, suitable for use in decolorizing sugars, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
17. Borax.—Crude borax, or borate of soda or borate of lime, 3 cents per pound; refined borax, 5 cents per pound.
18. Camphor, refined, 4 cents per pound.
19. Cement.—Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic cement, in barrels, sacks, or other packages, 8 cents per 100 pounds; in bulk, 7 cents per 100 pounds; other cement, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
20. Chalk.—Prepared, precipitated, French, and red chalk, 1 cent per pound; all other chalk preparations not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
21. Clays or earths.—Unwrought or unmanufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $1.50 per ton; wrought or manufactured, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, $3 per ton; china clay, or kaolin, $3 per ton.
22. Chloroform, 30 cents per pound.
23. Cobalt, oxide of, 40 cents per pound.
24. Collodion and all compounds of pyroxyline, by whatever name known, 30 cents per pound; rolled or in sheets, but not made up into articles, 40 cents per pound; if in finished or partly finished articles, 40 cents per pound and 25 per cent. ad valorem.
25. Coloring for brandy, wine, beer, or other liquors, 50 per cent. ad valorem.
26. Copperas or sulphate of iron, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound.
27. Dextrine, burnt starch, gum substitute, or British gum, 1 cent per pound.
28. Drugs, such as barks, beans, berries, balsams, buds, bulbs, and bulbous roots, and excrescences, such as nutgalls, fruits, flowers, dried fibers, grains, gums, and gum resins, herbs, leaves, lichens, mosses, nuts, roots and stems, spices, vegetables, seeds (aromatic, not garden seeds), and seeds of morbid growth, weeds, woods used expressly for dyeing, and dried insects, any of the foregoing which are not edible, but which have been advanced in value or condition by refining or grinding, or by other process of manufacture, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 10 per cent. ad valorem.
29. Coal-tar preparations.—All coal-tar colors or dyes, by whatever name known, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 35 per cent. ad valorem.
30. All preparations of coal-tar, not colors or dyes, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
31. Ethers.—Sulphuric ether and spirits of nitrous ether, 30 cents per pound.
32. Butyric ether and other fruit ether, oils, or essences, $1.25 per pound.
33. Ethers of all kinds not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 75 cents per pound.
34. Extracts and decoctions of logwood and other dye-woods, extract of sumac, and extracts of hemlock and other barks, such as are commonly used for dyeing or tanning, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1 cent per pound.
35. Gelatine, glue, and isinglass or fish-glue, valued at not above 7 cents per pound, 1½ cents per pound; valued above 7 cents per pound, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
36. Glycerine.—Unrefined, of the specific gravity of 1.25 or less at a temperature of 60° Fahrenheit, 1 cent per pound; refined, 4½ cents per pound.
37. Indigo.—Extracts of or pastes of, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound; carmined, 10 cents per pound.
38. Ink.—Writing-ink in casks, or in bottles or jugs holding 1 pint or more, 40 cents per gallon; in bottles or jugs holding less than 1 pint, 50 cents per gallon; otherwise than in casks, bottles, or jugs, 60 cents per gallon.
39. Ink-powders, printers' ink, and all other ink, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.
40. Iodine, resublimed, 30 cents per pound.
41. Iodoform, $1.20 per pound.
42. Lead products.—Acetate of lead, white, 5½ cents per pound; acetate of lead, brown, 3½ cents per pound.
43. Litharge, 3 cents per pound.
44. Nitrate of lead, 3 cents per pound.
45. Orange mineral, 3½ cents per pound.
46. Red lead, 3 cents per pound.
47. White lead, dry or in pulp, or ground or mixed with oil, 3 cents per pound.
48. Licorice, extracts of, in paste, rolls, or other forms, 5 cents per pound.
49. Magnesia.—Carbonate of magnesia, medicinal, 4 cents per pound.
50. Calcined magnesia, 8 cents per pound.
51. Sulphate of magnesia, or Epsom salts, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
52. Morphia, or morphine, and all salts thereof, 50 cents per ounce.
53. Oils.—Castor oil, 50 cents per gallon.
54. Cod-liver oil, 15 cents per gallon.
55. Croton oil, 30 cents per pound.
56. Flaxseed or linseed oil, 25 cents per gallon of 7½ pounds weight.
57. Cotton-seed oil, 10 cents per gallon of 7½ pounds weight.
58. Hemp-seed oil and rape-seed oil, 10 cents per gallon.
59. Olive oil, fit for salad purposes, 35 cents per gallon.
60. Seal, whale, and other fish oil not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 8 cents per gallon.
61. Opium, aqueous extract of, for medicinal uses, and tincture of, as laudanum, and all other liquid preparations of opium, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 per cent. ad valorem.
62. Paints and colors.—Baryta, sulphate of, or barytes, manufactured, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.
63. Blues, such as Berlin, Prussian, Chinese, and all others, containing ferrocyanide of iron, dry or ground in water or oil, 6 cents per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee to allow us to finish the chemical schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that the chief reason which controlled my motion was the fact that the Finance Committee are having a hearing, and will complete it this evening, upon the subject that we have just reached, and I thought perhaps we had as well complete that hearing before we proceeded further.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose there will be a number of amendments to be offered to the schedule.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not insist on the motion if the Senator from Iowa prefers to proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. When we finish the reading of Schedule A, I shall yield to the Senator from Tennessee for a motion to go into executive session or to adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of Schedule A, as follows:

64. Blanc-fixe, or satin white, or artificial sulphate of barytes, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.
65. Black, made from bone, ivory, or vegetable, under whatever name known, including bone-black and lamp-black, dry or ground in oil or water, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
66. Chrome yellow, chrome green, and all other chromium colors in which lead and bichromate of potash or soda are component parts, dry or ground in water or oil, 4½ cents per pound.
67. Ocher and ochery earths, sienna and sienna earths, umber and umber earths, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, dry, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; ground in oil, 1½ cents per pound.
68. Ultramarine blue, 4½ cents per pound.
69. Wash blue, containing ultramarine, 3 cents per pound.
70. Vermilion red, or colors containing quicksilver, dry or ground in oil or water, 12 cents per pound.
71. Whiting and Paris white, dry, one-half of 1 cent per pound; ground in oil, or putty, 1 cent per pound.
72. Zinc, oxide of, dry, 1½ cents per pound; ground in oil, 1¾ cents per pound.
73. All other paints and colors, whether dry or mixed, or ground with water or oil, including lakes, crayons, smalts, and frostings, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, and artists' colors of all kinds, in tubes or otherwise, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
74. Phosphorus, 10 cents per pound.
75. Plaster of Paris, ground or calcined, $1.50 per ton.
76. Potash.—Bichronate and chromate of potash, 3 cents per pound.
77. Hydriodate, iodite, and iodate of potash, 50 cents per pound.
78. Nitrate of potash, or saltpeter, refined, 1 cent per pound.
79. Prussiate of potash, red, 10 cents per pound; prussiate of potash, yellow, 5 cents per pound.
80. Preparations.—All medicinal preparations, known as essences, ethers (solid or fluid extracts), mixtures, spirits, tinctures, and medicated wines, including medicinal proprietary preparations, of which alcohol is a component part, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 40 cents per pound.
81. All medicinal preparations, including medicinal proprietary preparations, such as anodynes, cerates, conserves, cordials, decoctions, drops, emulsions, essences, extracts (solid or fluid), infusions, juices, liniments, lozenges, mixtures, mucilages, oils, ointments, oleoresins, pastes, pastilles, pills, plasters, powders, resins, salves, sirups, suppositories, tonics, troches, vinegars, wafers, or waters, of any of which alcohol is not a component part, and not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
82. Preparations known as alkalies, alkaloids, distilled oils, essential oils, expressed oils, rendered oils, and all combinations of the foregoing, and all chemical compounds and salts, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 25 per cent. ad valorem.
83. Preparations used as applications to the hair, mouth, teeth, or skin, such as cosmetics, dentifrices, pastes, pomades, powders, and tonics, including all known as toilet preparations, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.
84. Santonine, $1 per pound.
85. Soap.—Castile-soap, 1½ cents per pound; fancy, perfumed, and all descriptions of toilet soap, 15 cents per pound; all other soaps, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
86. Soda.—Bicarbonate of soda or supercarbonate of soda or saleratus, 1½ cents per pound.
87. Hydrate or caustic soda, 1 cent per pound.
88. Bichromate and chromate of soda, 3 cents per pound.
89. Sal-soda, or soda-crystals, and soda-ash, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound.
90. Silicate of soda, or other alkaline silicate, one-half of 1 cent per pound.
91. Sulphate of soda, or salt-cake or niter-cake, 20 per cent. ad valorem.
92. Strychnia, or strichnine, and all salts thereof, 50 cents per ounce.
93. Sulphur.—Refined, in rolls, $8 per ton; sublimed, or flowers of, $10 per ton.
94. Sumac, ground, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound.
95. Tartar, cream of, and patent tartar, 6 cents per pound.
96. Tartars and lees crystals, partly refined, 4 cents per pound.
97. Tartrate of soda and potassa, or Rochelle salts, 3 cents per pound.
98. Varnishes, including so-called gold size or japan, 40 per cent. ad valorem; and on spirit varnishes for the alcohol contained therein, $2 per gallon additional.

Mr. HARRIS. I now renew my motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope the Senator from Tennessee will withdraw it for a second.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to make an inquiry of the Senator from Iowa, who has the bill in charge. I notice that there are ad valorem rates and specific rates upon various articles in the schedule that has just been read. I desire to ask the Senator what is the average ad valorem rate imposed by the schedule upon the various articles therein contained and forming it.

Mr. ALLISON. We have a table in our report showing that rate. It is 29.70 per cent.

Mr. MORGAN. That is the average ad valorem rate upon the chemical schedule?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. That is what I desired to ascertain.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee has already submitted that motion.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 6, 1888, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 5, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. J. N. BURNES, of Missouri.
Mr. J. S. COTHRAN, of South Carolina.
Mr. IRA DAVENPORT, of New York.
Mr. E. H. FUNSTON, of Kansas.
Mr. P. T. GLASS, of Tennessee.
Mr. J. J. HEMPHILL, of South Carolina.
Mr. THOMAS J. HENDERSON, of Illinois.
Mr. E. N. MORRILL, of Kansas.
Mr. C. W. MCCLAMMY, of North Carolina.
Mr. W. D. OWEN, of Indiana.
Mr. B. W. PERKINS, of Kansas.
Mr. CHARLES STEWART, of Texas.
Mr. E. B. TAYLOR, of Ohio.

ACCOUNTS OF DISBURSING OFFICERS, WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspection of money accounts of disbursing officers, to accompany the annual report of the Inspector-General of the Army for the year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

SUPPLIES FOR THE USE OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of supplies purchased by the Quartermaster's Department for the use of the Army for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House two letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of fact and of law in certain spoliation claims; which were referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the States and Territories be called for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before that request is granted, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the House adjourned yesterday, the previous question had been ordered upon the third reading of the bill then pending, providing for the erection of a monument to the memory of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox. The House adjourned before the order for the previous question could be executed. Rule XVII provides that the previous question, if ordered—

Shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered.

Now, my inquiry is, what is the parliamentary effect where the previous question has been ordered on the third reading of a bill and an adjournment has taken place before the execution of that order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that if the bill to which the gentleman refers had been reached for consideration in its regular order on the Calendar, it would have come over this morning as unfinished business, because it was the business under consideration at the time of adjournment; and the House would not only have proceeded to dispose of the questions to which the previous question applied, but would have continued to consider the bill until its completion. But the bill to which the gentleman refers was made a special order for yesterday—for the one day only. The previous question was ordered upon the pending amendments and on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

It has always been held heretofore that when at an adjournment the previous question has been ordered upon the passage of a bill or resolution it comes up for consideration on the succeeding legislative day, even though it may have been set specially for a particular day; and the Chair can see no logical reason why the same rule should not apply to a bill when the previous question has been ordered at any stage of it, when the execution of that order is pending at the adjournment. But such has not been the late practice of the House. Why the distinction was made the Chair is not able to state; but it has for some time been held that when a measure is set for consideration for one day and the previous question is not ordered on that day upon its passage, its consideration falls with the expiration of the day, and the bill resumes its place on the Calendar and does not come up for consideration as unfinished business. The Chair thinks it was held, perhaps, at one time that under such circumstances the bill would come up the next day for consideration so far as to dispose of the questions on which the previous question had been ordered, and that it would then drop and go back to its place on the Calendar. But the later practice has been the other way; and to avoid the effect of this practice it has been usual in the House, when it was desired that a measure should occupy the time of the House until entirely disposed of, to provide in the order that its consideration be continued from day to day until disposed of. But that was not done in this case. The Chair thinks, therefore, that this bill resumes its place on the Calendar where it was before.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask the Chair whether the language of the rule is not peremptory.

The SPEAKER. It is; but if the House by its own order has limited the consideration of the measure to a particular day, it has itself prevented the vote from being taken on the next day.

Mr. DINGLEY. I understand the Chair to say that if the previous question had been ordered on the passage of this bill, it would have come up to-day.

The SPEAKER. It would under the practice; and the Chair has already stated that he can see no difference logically between the two cases; but nevertheless the practice of the House has been as stated by the Chair.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am aware, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a difference of practice in respect to this matter, and the latest decisions have been, I understand, as the Chair states.

The SPEAKER. That has been the practice for several years.

Mr. DINGLEY. I have raised the question simply that the point might be decided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART] asks unanimous consent that the States and Territories may be called for the introduction of bills and resolutions for reference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HOOKER. It is understood that it is for that purpose, and that alone.

The SPEAKER. That is all which can be done under the rule.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

"IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 3, 1888.

"Resolved, That there be printed —— thousand copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the House."

The Committee on Printing have considered the resolution introduced by Mr. MILLS to print —— thousand copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the members of the House, and report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with an amendment filling the blank therein with the words "twenty-five." The estimated cost of printing the said 25,000 copies thereof, with paper covers, is $196.25.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. CHEADLE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days.

CALL OF STATES FOR THE INTRODUCTION OF BILLS, ETC.

Mr. OATES introduced a bill (H. R. 11633) to regulate immigration; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee to Investigate Immigration, and ordered to be printed.

ALLOTMENT IN SEVERALTY TO UNITED PEORIAS AND MIAMIES.

Mr. PEEL introduced a bill (H. R. 11634) to provide for allotment of land in severalty to United Peorias and Miamies in the Indian Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

DIVISION OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. VANDEVER introduced a bill (H. R. 11635) to divide the State of California into two States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONSTRUCTION OF REVENUE-CUTTER FOR SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Mr. MORROW introduced a bill (H. R. 11636) for the construction of a revenue-cutter for San Francisco, Cal.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF OF WRECKED AMERICAN WHALING AND FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. MORROW submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House what, if any, relief can be furnished by the Revenue-Cutter Service and the Life-Saving Service to American whaling and fishing vessels wrecked in Bering Sea or the Arctic Ocean, and what, if any, legislation is necessary to make such relief available and effective.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia, introduced a bill (H. R. 11637) to establish a graduated income tax, the proceeds of which to be applied to the payment of pensions; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

TERM OF COURT AT QUINCY, ILL.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 11638) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for a term of court at Quincy, Ill.," approved August 8, 1888; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

RALPH T. MOSES.

Mr. HOLMES (by request) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be authorized to employ Ralph T. Moses as assistant folder in the seal-room of the House at a compensation of $2.50 per diem for the present session, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, compensation to take effect December 3, 1888.

FORT LEAVENWORTH MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (H. R. 11639) to authorize the sale of a tract of land in the Fort Leavenworth military reservation, Kansas; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING, SALINA, KANS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 11640) for the erection of a public building at Salina, Kans.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby requested to inform the House at the earliest practicable date, and after prompt and due investigation, in what ways and to what extent railway companies carrying interstate traffic may be or are evading, or, by a "clearing-house" or other form of combination, may be seeking to evade, those provisions of the interstate-commerce act which were intended to secure to the people the benefit of low freight rates as the result of competition among carriers, and also to recommend such practical legislation as, in the judgment of the Commission, shall most effectively prevent any combination of such carriers for the purpose of fixing or maintaining agreed or uniform freight rates.

The Commission is further requested to transmit to the House a stenographic report of its proceedings and of the testimony taken during said investigation.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT LAW.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Wednesday, December 19, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of the Senate bill 554 (known as the international copyright bill), not to interfere with the consideration of revenue or general appropriation bills; but this shall be a continuing order until said bill shall have been disposed of.

GOVERNMENT POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. RAYNER introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Friday, December 14, be set apart for the consideration of the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce entitled "A bill to provide for the construction of a Government postal telegraph."

NEW STEEL CRUISERS.

Mr. CUMMINGS introduced a bill (H. R. 11641) authorizing the construction of two steel cruisers, to be armed with dynamite guns and torpedo-throwers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NEW STEEL RAM.

Mr. CUMMINGS also introduced a bill (H. R. 11642) authorizing the construction of two steel rams, to be armed with heavy rifled dynamite guns and pneumatic torpedo-throwers, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LIFE-SAVING STATION IN OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN introduced a bill (H. R. 11643) providing for the establishment of a life-saving station and life-saving crew at the mouth of Coquille River, Oregon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REFRACTING TELESCOPE.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (H. R. 11644) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to construct a refracting telescope under the direction of Theodore Ruggles Timby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SIOUX RESERVATION IN DAKOTA.

Mr. GIFFORD introduced a bill (H. R. 11645) to amend chapter 206 of the laws of 1888, approved April 30, 1888, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of States and Territories.

NEW STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to offer, for immediate consideration, the following resolution. I ask that it first be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8466, a bill to enable the people of Dakota, Montana, Washington, and New Mexico to form constitutions and State governments, and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and that said bill be a special order immediately after the morning hour on this day and from day to day until disposed of, and be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire the Clerk to change the resolution, making it read "after the consideration hour," instead of "after the morning hour." I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not object, but that we may go on with it until it is disposed of.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I was ready all last session to admit Dakota, but the gentleman from Illinois was not anxious for it at that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will allow the members representing his party friends on the Committee on Territories to dispose of this matter.

REPRINT OF BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has objected, and declines to withdraw his objection. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] asks that the bill (H. R. 11601) for the relief of the Roman Catholic Church of St. Peter's, at Jackson, Miss., be reprinted, stating that there is an error in the original print. If there is no objection, the order will be made. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NEW STATES.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Ohio will indicate a time when he would allow this matter to be considered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman knows how to get a day.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, he does.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is a Committee on Rules. Let this proposition go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The inquiry I desire to make is whether if this resolution be adopted an amendment would be in order to substitute the Senate bill providing for the admission of South Dakota?

The SPEAKER. The adoption of this resolution would not preclude the offering of amendments under the rules of the House if the bill comes up. While the Chair does not desire to decide in advance, the Chair does not see any reason why an amendment to the bill to provide for the admission of South Dakota would not be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would state to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] that it would be in order, and that the reason why I ask for the disposition of the resolution now is that he may have an opportunity to offer that resolution and get a vote upon it in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has objected, and the matter is not now before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew my request and ask if he would set a day next week.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, is it not possible for us to have the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The Chair was proceeding with the regular order.

Mr. REED. I hope the Chair will.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

CHRISTIAN HEURICH.

Mr. BLAND, from the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, reported back adversely the following resolution, with the recommendation that it lie on the table:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 14, 1888.

Whereas Christian Heurich, a citizen of the United States and of the District of Columbia, and a brewer in the city of Washington, in said District, in a petition to both Houses of Congress makes complaint of and asks redress for certain alleged injury to his business interests arising from the last report of the Department of Agriculture on food and food adulterants, in which report it is stated that certain samples of beer brewed in said city of Washington were analyzed by the said Department, and that some were found to be pure and free from deleterious substances, but without stating the names of the brewers who manufactured them, and thus placing under suspicion the pure and wholesome as well as the impure and unwholesome articles; and

Whereas said Heurich alleges that samples of his beer were analyzed by said Department and published in said report as beer manufactured in Washington with others manufactured there, and that the Commissioner refuses him information as to the result of the analysis of the samples of his beer, so that he might free himself from said suspicion of manufacturing impure articles: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Agriculture be, and hereby is, requested to inform this House on what grounds, if any, he refuses said Heurich the information demanded by him.

There being no objection, the resolution was laid on the table.

ADJUSTMENT OF ACCOUNTS UNDER THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at eighteen minutes before 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Labor, which has occupied one hour, and has under consideration an unfinished bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of Senate bill No. 405.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman inform the Chair whether the Senate bill to which he now refers is the one that was under consideration when the Committee on Labor last occupied the floor?

Mr. TARSNEY. I understand that it is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will investigate the matter and will not deduct from the hour the time so consumed. The Chair asks the question because, under the rules of the House, the Committee on Labor can not now call up another bill, but must proceed with the consideration of the bill which was left unfinished.

Mr. TARSNEY. I refer the Chair to page 10326 of the daily RECORD, of October 11, 1888.

The SPEAKER (after examining the RECORD). The gentleman is correct. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill No. 405, providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill which will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever, as a laborer, workman, or mechanic, has been employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States since the 25th day of June, 1868, the date of the act constituting eight hours a day's work, shall be paid for each eight hours he has been employed as for a full day's work, whether engaged at a price per day, or upon piece work, or task work, without any reduction of pay on account of the reduction of the hours of labor.

SEC. 2. That all claims for labor so performed in excess of eight hours per day are hereby referred to the Court of Claims, to be adjudicated upon the basis that eight hours constitute a day's work, and are to be paid for at the price per day as provided for in the first section of this act, and judgment given against the United States in favor of each claimant for the amount found due, to be paid as other judgments of the Court of Claims against the United States; and no statute of limitation, or payment made or receipt given for a less sum per day than the full price of a day's work, as provided in the first section of this act, shall bar the right of recovery: Provided, That all suits under this act shall be commenced within two years from and after its passage; and any number of said claimants may join in the same suit: And provided further, That any sum allowed or found to be due to any claimant under this act shall only be paid to such claimant in person or by warrant sent to him by mail, if living, and if dead, to his personal representatives.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to know what the status of this bill is as to general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that no limit to the debate has been fixed by the House.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that the bill is in the morning hour.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in the morning hour, and there is one hour remaining for the consideration of the bill, an hour having been already occupied.

Mr. TARSNEY. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it may be as well to briefly state here the condition of this bill as we understand it. The bill is the same as House bill No. 1539, with some slight modification. That bill was reported unanimously by the Committee on Labor. It has been debated on the floor of this House, and, so far as I am concerned, I have said upon its merits about all I want to say; perhaps all that the House wishes me to say. But, be that as it may, the bill in like form, with two amendments, passed the Senate, and it comes here now as a Senate bill. The only change made from the House bill is the insertion of the word "agreement" and the insertion of a proviso, as follows:

Provided further, That any sum allowed or found to be due to any claimant under this act shall only be paid to such claimant in person or by warrant sent to him by mail, if living, and if dead, to his personal representatives.

When we had the bill under consideration in the House three months ago a good many persons objected to it because they thought that there were some lobbyists about here, or some lawyers, who might be interested in it. I had not thought of that, but I had thought of this: that if the Government of the United States has incurred an obligation it is in honor bound to pay it. The Government has incurred this obligation. It has broken faith with its employés, and we merely ask now that they be permitted to go to the Court of Claims and have a legal adjudication of their case. That is all that we are proposing. There is no appropriation of money in the bill. It simply provides for a legal construction of the contract between the Government and these parties. The claimants get nothing unless the Court of Claims decides that they should be paid, and in that case I suppose it will have to pass the Appropriations Committee. That is all there is in the bill. The proviso which I have read was inserted in order to obviate one of the serious objections made to the bill when it was under consideration here before. The Senate inserted that proviso. The only other amendment is the insertion of the word "agreement."

Those are the only differences between the House bill and the Senate bill. Now, Mr. Chairman, knowing that our time is limited, I do not care to occupy the attention of the House further on this occasion except to make this remark, that in my humble judgment the Government of the United States is solemnly pledged to the claims of these men. They ought to be paid, and we can not afford to go home leaving these broken promises behind us. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman from the State of Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] explain in what way the Government of the United States has failed to observe its contracts with its employés?

Mr. TARSNEY. Yes, sir. I have pointed it out.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is it anything more than this? There was a law upon the statute-book providing that——

Mr. TARSNEY. Please make an inquiry and not an argument.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I stop with the inquiry I have already made.

Mr. TARSNEY. I will answer the gentleman. On the 25th day of June, 1868, Congress passed an act providing as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed, or who may be hereafter employed, by or on behalf of the Government of the United States.

That is all there is in the law. For ten months and twenty-three days it was evidently forgotten or disregarded; but the attention of the then President, General Grant, was called to the matter, and on the 19th of May, 1869, he issued a proclamation directing the enforcement of the law; in other words, directing that eight hours should be taken as eight hours; and during his entire administration that law was regarded. Afterwards, in 1877, there was a change of administration. President Hayes came in, and on June 30, 1877, his Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Thompson, issued an order, a copy of which I have here, which reads as follows:

Under this construction of the law regulating public labor, given by the Supreme Court of the United States, the Department has fixed the rate of labor for mechanics, foremen, leading-men, and laborers on the basis of ten hours a day. All workmen electing to labor only eight hours per day will receive a proportionate reduction of their wages.

Now, there is no decision of the Supreme Court which reaches the question under consideration here.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me a question? He says there is no decision of the Supreme Court which reaches the question raised in this bill. I hope the gentleman will state whether the Supreme Court has made any decision upon the eight-hour law, and, if so, what that decision is. If he has the decision at hand, I trust he will read it, in order that the Committee of the Whole may determine whether or not the conclusion which the gentleman has reached is correct.

Mr. TARSNEY. The decision, I repeat, does not reach the case now before this House. We have had this question under consideration before. I do not want to occupy the attention of the House unnecessarily, because we have now only one hour. I simply wish to make this plain statement——

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman be kind enough to give me a reference to that decision?

Mr. TARSNEY. I will get it for the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] will not interrupt the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] while he is answering my inquiry.

Mr. BLOUNT. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman from Michigan has stated that there is a law on this subject which has been willfully and persistently violated. I desire to know in what way it has been violated.

Mr. TARSNEY. By the officers of the Government disregarding it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The gentleman assumes that if the law fixes a day's labor at eight hours, and an employé voluntarily consents to labor ten hours for ten hours' pay, the Government thereby incurs an obligation to pay the employé for the difference between eight hours and ten hours.

Mr. TARSNEY. Ah! you use the word "voluntarily." Go to your navy-yards; go to your arsenals; go to your other Government establishments——

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will you answer the question as I put it?

Mr. TARSNEY. I am answering you, if you will comprehend what I say. There were those Government employés with starvation staring them and their children in their faces, and they were forced to accept the terms offered to them; they did so under protest. That is what I mean to say.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I have heard the "starvation" story once or twice before——

Mr. TARSNEY. If you had experienced a little more "starvation" than your appearance would indicate, you would realize the situation better. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I think I realize the situation; for I happen to know that the employés in the Government service are better paid than any other class of employés in the United States engaged in corresponding labor. They are paid higher wages and are paid more promptly.

Mr. TARSNEY. I hope the gentleman will not abuse the privilege he has been granted.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan permit another suggestion?

Mr. TARSNEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] for an inquiry.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I merely wish to make a suggestion in connection with the inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]. My suggestion is this: In compliance with the terms of the law, the Secretary of the Navy, on March 21, 1878, did direct the employment of these men for eight hours daily, and also directed that where they elected to work ten hours per day, they should receive a proportionate increase of pay. Under that order the men did work for ten hours per day, but did not receive the increase of pay.

Mr. TARSNEY. That is the fact.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Secretary of the Navy ordered that they should receive the increase of pay, but his orders were nullified by a lot of brass-mounted martinets.

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Does the gentleman from New Jersey maintain that the Government has incurred a legal obligation in this matter?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I so stated on this floor on the 21st of March last. I repeat the statement; it is correct.

Mr. TARSNEY. I am not here now to discuss the equity or justice or propriety of the so-called eight-hour law; but I am here as an American citizen and as a representative of a constituency, to say that when the Government of the United States makes its contract, it is in honor bound to carry it out; and in this case the contract of the Government has been actually nullified—not by the Government itself, but by some officers over here at the other end of the avenue, who assume to know more than the entire House of Representatives.

Mr. SOWDEN. I would like the gentleman to inform the House whether any estimate has been made as to the probable amount of money involved in this bill.

Mr. TARSNEY. Only one, as I remember; and that was embodied in a report of the Secretary of the Navy some time ago; for this is not a new measure. It has been favorably reported in the Senate and in the House three or four times. It has been estimated that as to the navy-yards of the country the cost would be about $3,000,000.

Mr. SOWDEN. How as to the other Departments of the Government?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not know, nor do I care. I simply say that if we have incurred an obligation, we should, as honorable men, carry it out.

Mr. SOWDEN. As I understand, the obligation exists only so far as the Navy Department is concerned?

Mr. TARSNEY. Oh, no; it exists wherever the law applies. What we propose is that these parties be authorized to go to the Court of Claims and obtain from it a judicial construction of the law. Let that tribunal declare what the liability of the United States is. Then it will come back to you gentlemen who will be here after I retire, and it will go to your Appropriations Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARSNEY. I do not yield, but reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the attention of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] in regard to a particular feature of this bill which seems to be relied on by them by the statements they have made. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] seems to understand that this bill intends to do nothing, and will have the effect to do nothing, except to enforce the obligations of the Government. In other words, the Government is required by this bill to pay its employés according to the contract it made with them when it employed them to do the work. And the gentleman from New Jersey states, if I understood him correctly, and if I do not I wish to be corrected——

Mr. TARSNEY. I rise to a point of order. I am not aware that I have yielded the floor. I expressly reserved my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to yield the floor, and to reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. TARSNEY. I beg the Chair's pardon, but I did not yield the floor. I yielded to an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], and intended to yield for the same purpose to the gentleman from New Jersey, and regret I did not do so. Now I want to know by what right the gentleman from Georgia stands on the floor claiming to have the right to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Michigan to yield the floor, at the same time reserving the balance of his time, whereupon the gentleman from Georgia claimed the floor, and was recognized by the Chair in his own right.

Mr. TARSNEY. The Chair is mistaken in that regard, or else I certainly am, for I did not intend to yield the floor and do not think that I did.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know what the gentleman from Michigan thought he did, but I am quite sure he said that he reserved the balance of his time and went off, and I was then recognized by the Chair and yielded to the gentleman from Kentucky, who was proceeding to address the House. After proceeding to that extent, I inquire whether it is not now too late for the gentleman to insist upon not having yielded the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair certainly understood the gentleman from Michigan to yield the floor and reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. TARSNEY. How much time does the gentleman from Georgia ask?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have an hour, and do not want any more.

Mr. TARSNEY. I beg your pardon, you have not an hour, unless the Chair directs otherwise in taking me off the floor when I have not yielded it.

Mr. BLOUNT. We will see.

Mr. TAULBEE. I am ready to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan insists that he did not yield the floor——

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. If the gentleman from Michigan did not intend to yield the floor what did he mean by saying that he reserved the balance of his time?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Michigan is entitled to an hour in the hour for present consideration. Whatever mistake may have been made it lies with him to hold his hour and give such time to the opponents of the bill and those in favor of it as he may choose. Would the Chair rule that the gentleman from Georgia now claiming the floor is entitled to the hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia took the floor with the understanding that the gentleman from Michigan had yielded it, reserving the balance of his time, and having been recognized is entitled to an hour.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And consequently he controls that hour.

The CHAIRMAN. He controls the hour, but the Chair would be indisposed to give the hour to the gentleman from Georgia if the gentleman from Michigan insists, as a matter of fact, he did not yield the floor. The Chair is quite positive, however, that the gentleman yielded the floor and reserved the balance of his time.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Then he is entitled to his hour.

The CHAIRMAN. It becomes solely a question of fact.

Mr. TARSNEY. There is no misunderstanding on my part with reference to the matter at all.

The CHAIRMAN. It is solely a question of fact. If the gentleman from Michigan insists that he did not yield the floor and did not reserve the balance of his time, the Chair will be compelled to accept his statements.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the record be read as made by the Reporters, and the fact will appear, I think, as it has been stated by the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. This does not come out of my time, I trust. [Laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman has no time.

Mr. BLOUNT. He has the time I yielded to him.

Mr. TARSNEY. The gentleman had no time to yield. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist that he did not yield the floor and reserve the remainder of his time?

Mr. TARSNEY. If this body will be in order a moment I desire to frankly state to the Chair and to the committee that it was not my purpose to yield the time that I had on this subject. It may be possible that some language that I have used has led the Chair into that impression——

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is right.

Mr. TARSNEY. But my purpose was clearly to hold the floor and to pass this bill if possible. I wish to make that statement frankly to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the notes of the Official Reporter conform to the statement the Chair has made, and to the understanding of the Chair——

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope that record will be read.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair still hopes that gentlemen will adjust this matter among themselves and divide the time amicably and satisfactorily.

Mr. BLOUNT. The best way to adjust it is to have the facts set before the committee, and I ask to have the Official Reporter's notes read. I do not want anything but my rights under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause the notes of the Official Reporter to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?
Mr. TARSNEY. I do not yield, but reserve the remainder of my time.
Mr. BLOUNT was then recognized by the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do I now proceed? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the statement just read clearly entitles the gentleman from Georgia to the floor under the rules and practice of the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman from Michigan ten minutes if he so desires. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TARSNEY. I thank the gentleman from Georgia, and if in order move that the committee do now rise and report this bill favorably to the House.

Mr. TAULBEE. That is not in order, because I have a speech to put in on the subject. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Michigan is not in order, unless the gentleman from Georgia yields for that purpose.

Mr. BLOUNT. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for ten minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. To facilitate matters, will the gentleman from Georgia answer a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. Not now.

Mr. TAULBEE. The gentleman from Georgia has not the floor to answer a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then will you answer a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly, if you make it short and easy. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Very short and very easy. Is it the purpose of the opposition to this bill to consume the remainder of the hour?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am not the "opposition" to the bill, and can not answer the gentleman's question. I am only responsible for my own actions here, and I propose to take in good faith the ten minutes to which I am entitled to explain my position on this question, if the gentleman from New Jersey will content himself, be patient, and listen.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the inquiry in entire good faith; for if it is the purpose of the opponents of the bill to consume the remainder of the time, we might as well let the committee rise now and dispose of the matter and go on with something else, as we have but about thirty minutes of the hour remaining.

Mr. TAULBEE. I believe I have the floor, and will now proceed, with the gentleman's consent.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say this to gentlemen on both sides of the House: That evidently the gentleman from Michigan did make a slip of the tongue when he reserved the rest of his hour. I know that he did not intend to give it up. He could not give it away, for it belonged to the committee, and he supposed when he said he reserved the rest of the time that he could rise up at any moment during the discussion and resume the floor again in his own right.

Now, in view of that fact, and in view of the superior parliamentary knowledge of my friend from Georgia and my friend from Kentucky, I propose to gentlemen to divide the time in such manner that my friend from Michigan will have the closing of the debate, as the rule and good faith prescribe.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And custom also.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may be permitted to express the hope that the suggestion of the gentleman from New York will be acquiesced in because of the misunderstanding that has taken place.

Mr. TAULBEE. For my own part I have no time to divide, having but ten minutes yielded to me, a portion of which has been already consumed by the gentleman from New York in discussing a matter without reference to the merits of the bill under consideration and only relating to a suggestion of a compromise. So far as I am individually concerned, I am entirely willing that there shall be a vote on the bill, and I desire to consume the time in my own way to which I am entitled.

If I understood the statement of the gentleman from New Jersey clearly, it is to the effect that this bill has grown out of the transaction had between the officers of the Government and the laborers in the employ of the Government, which transaction was in substance that under the operation of what is known as the eight-hour law an order was issued by the Secretary of War limiting the hours of labor in that Department to eight hours in any day; that the employés in that Department were permitted to labor beyond the period of eight hours, but with the understanding that they should receive additional compensation for the extra labor, and that they have failed to receive the money which they had a right to expect in view of their understanding with the managers and the superintendents of these public works. I want to state in response to that, that I have had occasion to investigate this question on its merits. A similar bill to this was introduced and referred to the Committee on Claims, and to a subcommittee, of which I have the honor to be chairman. I listened to arguments of the ablest claim agents from day to day on this subject, and I read every brief and document submitted to me by them, and I have never discovered in any statement made by the agents of these employés anything in the nature and to the effect of the statement just made by the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, I had it from the mechanics themselves.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not believe that such a condition has ever existed; I do not believe that any of these employés have made a claim in good faith based upon such a condition. The purpose and effect of the bill is reached by a proper understanding of the amendment in the Senate bill, which attempts to vitiate a contract made by the managers of these public works and the employés themselves. It is by the insertion of the word "agreement" in the bill which entitles them, if carried out, to collect from the Treasury of the Government an amount equivalent to the difference of compensation they had received for ten hours' labor under their contract, based upon labor of eight hours, and the additional time so employed and occupied by them in labor.

It is going beyond the contract. It is changing the conditions of the contract, and allowing them to receive eight hours' pay for eight hours' work, and two hours' pay for two additional hours so employed and occupied; and, in addition to that, a sum bearing the ratio to the compensation for ten hours a day which two bears to eight. It is simply a gratuity attempted to be given to these employés of the General Government beyond that which the law recognizes, and which their contract implied and expressed.

Now, if this is not the fact, I want the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] or the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TARSNEY] to explain the effect of the amendment in this bill by inserting the word "agreement," in giving the conditions upon which this money is to be paid. If I have improperly understood that, I am willing for the gentleman from New Jersey or the gentleman from Michigan to correct me now in my time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What do you desire to know? I spoke of the officers of the Navy Department, and you are speaking of the action of the Secretary of War.

Mr. TAULBEE. The same principle applies to both the Navy and the War Department; and, in addition to that, if this bill shall be passed, it will give to every employé of this Government in every Department, no difference where he is employed, if for more than eight hours, additional pay beyond his contract.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, while I have been a firm friend of the eight-hour law from the time when the matter first became a prominent question in State and national politics, in 1866 and 1868, I do not think it was the intention of those who passed the eight-hour law to fix the rate of wages or to influence the rate of wages otherwise than as the rate of wages will necessarily be increased by shortening the hours for labor and thereby increasing the opportunities for improvement of the intelligence and character of the laboring men; and I understand it has been decided by the Supreme Court that the eight-hour law was not intended to fix the rate of wages.

I have little doubt that the Government employés along the seacoast who with their agents are anxious for the passage of this bill received fully as much for their services as laborers in other occupations during the time they were employed, and that they have been paid as much as the Government agents agreed to pay them, and that the object of this bill is to give them a legal standing that they would not have under their contracts of employment.

It should have been the policy of the real friends of the eight-hour law to refrain from the performance of extra hours of labor, and those who did so made themselves the active opposers of a system that would, if enforced, be attended with benefits to the laborers of the country; and having been instrumental in setting aside the policy and having received all they expected to receive when they entered on their work, they should not by legislation be given advantages that were denied to other men and higher rates of wages than prevailed in other employments at the time. If the bill should be so modified as to remove all question that it is simply intended as a gratuity to a class of employés along the seacoast it might be less objectionable, but if so modified it would be found to contain only a barren right to present a claim that equity and justice would be compelled to reject, for I have no doubt the Government paid these claimants all they were entitled to under heir contracts of employment.

Mr. COBB withholds his remarks for revision. [See APPENDIX.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] will suspend his remarks. The hour allowed for the consideration of this business has expired, and the Committee of the Whole will rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 405) providing for the adjustment of accounts of laborers, workmen, and mechanics arising under the eight-hour law, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD my remarks on the bill just under consideration in Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, leave was granted. The remarks are as follows:

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, during the last session I had the honor to present to the House a petition signed by several thousand workmen, living in about seventy localities throughout the Union, asking for the passage of a bill providing for the adjustment of the accounts of laborers arising under "the eight-hour law." In the RECORD of June 28, 1884, in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, will be found my views upon the general subject of readjusting the accounts of laborers arising under the eight-hour law as then expressed in debate. (Volume 69, page 5752.)

The Committee on Labor at first reported the Long bill (H. R. 1539) with certain amendments. Those amendments allowed, among others, the men employed at the arsenals and armories of the country to have their claims adjusted. The workmen employed in these institutions stand in a peculiar position. A brief statement of the facts concerning the workmen at the national armory will show this.

On the 25th of June, 1868, Congress passed an act (15 Statutes, 77) declaring—

That eight hours shall constitute a day's work for all laborers, workmen, and mechanics now employed, or who may hereafter be employed, by or on behalf of the Government of the United States. (Revised Statutes, section 3738.)

The eight-hour law first went into effect at the national armory on July 13, 1868. It was continued in force until August 20, 1868, each man receiving a full day's pay for eight hours' work. From August 20, 1868, until May 22, 1869, the men were reduced one-fifth of their former pay per day, but were allowed to make full pay by working ten hours a day. Subsequently, by act of May 18, 1872 (United States Statutes at Large, volume 17, page 134), money was appropriated and they were paid for the extra two hours' service. Under that act the men at the national armory received $40,438.48. Thus the men were settled with in full up to May 22, 1869, being allowed extra pay for the time worked over eight hours. This act of 1872 was an acknowledgment by Congress of the intention and meaning of the eight-hour law.

On May 22, 1869, an order was published requiring all the men to work but eight hours a day pursuant to a proclamation of the President, May 19, 1869 (16 Statutes at Large, 1127). The men received the full benefit of the law until June 9, 1877.

Thus it appears that for a period of nearly nine years the men were recompensed on the basis of eight hours constituting a day's labor. Up to June 9, 1877, their accounts have been properly adjusted. They make no claim prior to that time, as I am now informed.

On March 27, 1877, there was issued from the "Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office," General Orders No. 25, for the information of the Army, a copy of the decision in the case of the United States vs. Arthur Martin (No. 401, October term, 1876, United States Reports Supreme Court, 94 (Otto, IV), page 400)—a case arising under the eight-hour law on an appeal from the Court of Claims. Evidently relying upon the court's expressed opinion in that case, namely—

We are of the opinion, therefore, that contracts fixing or giving a different length of time as the day's work are legal and binding upon the parties making them—the Department required the men at the national armory to sign a contract agreeing to work ten hours a day for a day's wages. This contract reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, employed at the national armory, Springfield, Mass., on behalf of the United States, hereby agree to work ten hours each calendar day, or at the rate thereof, for the sums set opposite our respective names. This contract is made in conformity to General Orders No. 53, Headquarters of the Army, Adjutant-General's Office, June 1, 1877, and can be terminated at the pleasure of the United States or the subscribing party.

Name.	Occupation.	Wages per ten hours.	Witness.

This contract the men were obliged to sign, and to work under until March 1, 1884, when they were again given the full benefit of the law which they now have. Thus their claim is for the two extra hours they were obliged to work under this contract each day for six years, eight months, and nineteen days.

This statement shows a curious state of affairs. After the eight-hour law was passed the workmen at the armory had the benefit of its provisions for a little over one month. Then for about nine months their pay was reduced one-fifth, but they were allowed full pay provided they worked ten hours. Then came the proclamation of President Grant, May 19, 1869, and they had the full benefit of the law for about eight years. Also under the act of 1872 they at length received pay for the extra hours they had been compelled to work. Then came the Martin case, and the Department made them sign the contract to work ten hours. Under this they worked for six years, eight months, and nineteen days. Then came another proclamation, by President Arthur, and since March 1, 1884, they have had the full benefit of the eight-hour law.

In view of the decision of the court it may be claimed that the contract was a legal one, and that they have no remedy. Let us see if they have not an equitable claim on us, however, under all the circumtances. Let us see from the decision of the court how they looked upon the statute in reference to the eight-hour law. I quote further from the opinion:

We regard the statute chiefly as in the nature of a direction from a principal to his agent, that eight hours is deemed to be a proper length of time for a day's labor, and that his contract shall be based upon that theory. It is a matter between the principal and his agent, in which a third party has no interest. The proclamation of the President and the act of 1872 are in harmony with this view of the statute.

Now, then, Congress as the principal directs its agent (in this instance the War Department) to make its contracts on the theory that eight hours shall be a day's labor. The agent deliberately makes the contract upon the theory that ten hours shall be deemed a day's labor. The decision of the court would give the agent the legal power to do so. When, however, the principal, the Government itself, has declared its direction in a formal enactment and is appealed to as against the act of its agent, the Department, can Congress equitably deny the appeal until it has repealed the statute? In other words, the workmen come to Congress and ask that its own direction shall be carried out, that the Department shall not nullify the direction of Congress.

For over six years the Department failed to obey the direction of Congress. Every one knew of the direction upon the statute-book. The workmen knew of it. They knew that at first the difection had been obeyed; that when it had been disregarded and they had been forced to work two hours overtime, that Congress, by the act of 1872, had recognized the justness of their claim, and had paid them for the overtime. They knew that the President had issued a proclamation for the enforcement of the direction of Congress when they had appealed to him. They knew that the President and Congress had, by their action, practically sustained the theory of the eight-hour law for nearly nine years after its passage. When the law was placed on the statute-book they rejoiced with the workmen throughout the country. They could not believe it would be a mockery and a sham. They had a right to expect that the various Departments would follow the direction of Congress.

The direction of Congress since 1868, the date of the passage of the law, has been followed in this instance twelve out of nearly twenty years. When the Department issued an order that the armorers should sign in 1877 a contract to work ten hours a day, although it was contrary to the direction of Congress as expressed in the eight-hour law, there was nothing left for the armorers but to sign it. Here was an order issued by a military department. Sign it or leave. There was no chance for expostulation or a hearing in such a case. The arsenal grounds are a military reservation. The order was to be obeyed. The men were skilled in a single line of labor. The Department said, sign this contract or seek employment elsewhere. The men, relying on the good faith of Congress, signed the contract, believing that as the President had once befriended them, as Congress itself had once compensated them, so again they would be protected. They believed the principal was a higher power than the agent, and they looked to the principal for final justice. As long as the eight-hour law remains on the statute-book it should be enforced. I am not familiar with other claims arising under the proposed bill, but under all the circumstances of this case ought not these workmen at the national armory to be heard and their claims adjudicated?

If the eight-hour law is wrong, repeal it. If it is right, let its directions be followed, its spirit be put into practice. Place not upon the statute-book laws which deceive above all the workingmen of the United States. If you make promises to them, keep them. They are the bone and sinew of the Republic. Their daily toil makes the country more desirable to live in. Gathered from the world or native-born, they are our defense in war, our glory in peace. Loyal to our institutions and our common flag, they ask simply to earn an honest livelihood for themselves and families, fair pay for a fair day's toil. Congress made the original statute. It can enforce it. It can make it up to the workmen where it has not been enforced. The Government, all powerful as it is, must set the example of fair dealing. There is no escape. We either say to the workmen the direction of Congress in the statute was a hollow mockery, or we must provide some way to pay honest claims.

Mr. TARSNEY. I ask unanimous consent that another hour be allowed to continue the consideration of this bill. There are several gentlemen who desire to say something.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the time for the consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union be extended for one hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

SETTLERS ON DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report back the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I ask for the reading of the bill and amendments.

Mr. ROWELL. Is that a privileged report? Has not that, on the contrary, been decided to be not a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. It was so decided by the gentleman occupying the chair at the time, but subsequently the report was presented and the point of order again made and reserved by the Chair. The report was ordered to be printed. The gentleman from Illinois now presents the report again, and if the question is made, of course the Chair will consider it.

Mr. ROWELL. I raise the point that this is not a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point that this is not a privileged report under the rules of the House. The Clerk will read the bill, after which the Chair will hear the gentleman on the question of order.

The bill and amendments were read.

The amendments are as follows:

Strike out the preamble.

Strike out the word "or," in the seventeenth line of the first section, and insert the word "and."

Insert the word "or" before the word "their," in the twentieth line, and strike out the words "or their proper assigns," next after the word "heirs," in the twentieth line.

In line 2, section 2, after the word "General," insert "as soon as practicable and."

The bill as introduced is as follows:

"Whereas it is alleged that all the lands along the Des Moines River above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork, in the State of Iowa, referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861 (12 Statutes, page 251), as certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior, as under the grant of August 8, 1846, and which were treated in the Harvey settlement, of May 20, 1866, as having been sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States, as mentioned or provided in the act of July 12, 1862 (12 Statutes, page 543), to extend the grant of 1846, and for which lands the State, in the Harvey settlement, received and accepted indemnity lands, as provided she might do by the act of 1862, which settlement was fully accepted by the State Legislature March 31, 1868, and confirmed by Congress March 3, 1871, are public lands, as held by the Department of the Interior after Secretary Browning's decision of May 9, 1868, and that by such settlement Iowa, in accepting the indemnity lands as referred to, is estopped from all claim to the lands in place that were improperly certified as river land, or under the act of 1846; and

"Whereas there are many settlers who, believing that the said lands were public lands, entered upon the same in good faith, and with the consent of the Department of the Interior, as pre-emptions and homesteads, and since so doing, and after receiving patents, have been held by the courts as trespassers, or that the lands were reserved from settlement: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, That all lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States: Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and made valid: Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, their heirs or their proper assigns, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fee, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent: Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claims under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

"SEC. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands and remove all clouds from its title thereto; and until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale except as hereinbefore provided. And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits."

The bill as amended will read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States: Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed and made valid: Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered and remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them or their heirs, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fee, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent: Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants, under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

SEC. 2. That it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General, as soon as practicable, and within three years after the passage of this act, to institute, or cause to be instituted, such suit or suits, either in law or equity, or both, as may be necessary and proper to assert and protect the title of the United States to said lands, and remove all clouds from its title thereto; and until such suits shall be determined, and Congress shall so provide, no part of said lands shall be open for settlement or sale, except as hereinbefore provided. And in any suits so instituted any person or persons in possession of or claiming title to any tract or tracts of land under the United States involved in such suits may, at his or their expense, unite with the United States in the prosecution of such suits.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that this is not a privileged report under the rules.

Mr. HOLMES. I raise the point of order that that point of order is not in order, the same point having been raised at the preceding session and having been fully argued. My recollection is that the Speaker took the question under consideration, and the point is in that condition now, where it rests with the Speaker, it having been argued at the last session on the same point now raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois renews the point of order, and the Chair desires to hear what he wishes to say.

Mr. ROWELL. I desire to say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not wish to add anything to the argument made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR], but to renew the objection made by him, and further to state that he is fully prepared to discuss this question both on the point of order and on the merits of the bill. I know of no other member who is prepared to discuss the merits of the bill; but he is not here, and I suggest, therefore, this question of order be withheld until the gentleman from New York is present.

Mr. HOLMES. I desire to say that I telegraphed to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] yesterday that this bill would be called up to-day, or an attempt made to call it up this morning, and if he desired to be heard he had full notice. I do not know any argument which can be made in addition, and unless gentlemen desire further information, the point having been fully argued at the last session, I think we ought now to have the decision of the Speaker.

DIRECT TAX.

Mr. MILLS. I ask, by unanimous consent, only for a moment to have an order entered. It will pass without objection, and it is important that it should be done to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Thursday, December 6, Saturday, December 8, and Tuesday, December 11, 1888, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be, and are hereby, set apart for the consideration of Senate bill No. 139, entitled "An act to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all the moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress, approved August 5, 1861," now in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and at 4 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, December 11, the same shall be reported to the House with such amendments as may have been agreed upon in the committee, and the previous question shall then be considered as ordered upon all such amendments, and upon ordering the said bill to be read a third time and upon the passage of the same; and the votes thereon shall then be taken in the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMES. If this is a matter that will take up time in discussion, I would ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The order has been made.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to consume any of the time of the House in the discussion of the question of order unless the Chair shall indicate a desire on his part to hear argument upon the question; for it seems to me, if I may say so without the slightest disrespect to gentlemen who differ with me in regard to the point here presented, that clause 50 of Rule XI is so plain and so explicit that this bill comes as clearly within the question of privilege therein embodied as anything possibly can come. Unless, therefore, the Chair desires argument or entertains any doubt, I have no desire to consume the time in debating the question of order.

The SPEAKER. As this question is one that has been already decided by a gentleman of long experience in the House, and who was then temporarily occupying the chair, the present occupant of the chair would be very glad of course to hear the views of gentlemen on both sides upon the question of order, as the Chair is now asked to review a decision heretofore made. Hence, if any gentleman has suggestions to offer, the Chair will be very glad to hear them upon the question.

Mr. PAYSON. The first suggestion, then, should come from that side which makes the point of order; and I have nothing to say except in response to what may come from gentlemen who present their objections to receiving this report.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, when this matter came up in the House during the last session of Congress I was temporarily occupying your place. When my friend from Illinois made the point that this bill, which has just been read, presented a question of privilege under the rules, he called upon the Chair to decide that question eo instanti. I was about to decide it promptly on a statement made by the gentleman to the effect that the matter had been already considered by the Speaker of the House, and that it was really a question res adjudicata; but on reflection, and upon a suggestion made by my colleague from New York [Mr. PARKER], who I am sorry is now absent, I asked the House, and the gentleman from Illinois very cordially concurred in that request, to defer insisting upon the presentation of the matter as a question of privilege until the next day.

That having been done, I gave what time I could to an investigation of the question of privilege in the interim. In the course of that investigation I was led to the conclusion, irrespective of the merits of the question presented, that it was not properly a question of privilege under the rules of the House.

I did not give my reasons for the ruling at length. I only gave such reasons as I thought were pertinent at the time. They were very brief; but afterwards, when the gentleman informed me that he was about to renew the question for your decision, I did make a memorandum of certain points for presentation on the point of privilege.

This, sir, is a matter which involves the fate of every bill introduced in the House. We know that the member who secures the privileged occupancy of the floor in the midst of our multitudinous bills and business has a great advantage.

With fifteen thousand bills introduced and on the Calendar, it is a matter of great advantage under the rules to have a privilege of this kind. Many members have found that to be true, and to their discomfort sometimes.

Considering the greatness of the privilege and the interest of the question, I presume to give to the House my imperfect study on this subject after it had been intimated that the question was to be renewed.

It is with reluctance that I undertake to inform the Speaker of the House in relation to a matter of order under our rules. I but voice the general sentiment of the House when I state that no man has a more judicial and analytic mind than the Speaker, or can better interpret the rules and their meaning and effect. Nevertheless the Speaker who is temporarily in the chair must decide such questions on the moment. He may decide wrong. I asked the gentleman from Illinois, at the time this question was presented and after the decision had been made, to submit this matter to the House; but he declined to do it out of courtesy, though I wish it had been done, for then we would not, perhaps, have been called upon to review a decision of a pro tempore Speaker many months after the decision was rendered.

Mr. Speaker, the first point to be considered is whether the point of order should be considered at all. Inasmuch as the question of privilege has once been ruled upon, however imperfectly, is it not too late to revive it? If it can be raised once, it can beraised twice, and ad infinitum. Therefore, the business of this body is dependent, not only upon the changeable quality of the Chair, from permanent Speaker to pro tempore, and vice versa, but upon the change of opinion in the mind of the Chair itself at various phases of its ratiocination, both as permanent and temporary judge of the rules.

Are there any analogies bearing upon this question of new trial or infinite new trials? If so, Mr. Speaker, you will find them in the practice of the courts. I submit that in their proceedings one judge will not review a decision (interlocutory in its nature) which has been before made in the same case by a judge then rightfully holding the same court, even if he thinks it erroneous.

This rule is absolutely uniform among judges, and I instance the following extreme case:

The cause of White vs. Miners' National Bank, reported in 102 United States, page 658, was tried in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Colorado by Judge Hallett, judge of the district court of the United States for that district. At that time Hon. S. F. Miller, of the Supreme Court, was assigned to that circuit, and Hon. John F. Dillon was circuit judge. A ruling was made on the trial evidently erroneous, and on which the Supreme Court reversed it, the opinion being rendered by Mr. Justice Miller.

Before appeal under section 987 of the Revised Statutes application was made to Judge Miller, as senior justice of the court, to grant a new trial of this cause for the error in the record. He ruled that in that case, under the comity between judges, he had no more right to overrule Judge Hallett, the district judge, than Judge Hallett had to overrule him, and that in an analogous case he could disregard the ruling, but in that case it was res adjudicata.

This would seem to be a close and conclusive analogy, unless the particular rights of parties in court and the relation of Speaker and Legislature are aloof from all analogy. I believe the rights of parties—litigant parties—are the very gravamen of this measure now sought after many months of sleeping to be aroused. Substantially the same care of such rights should obtain whether in the law-making or law-interpreting branch. In the absence of adverse authority on the point, either judicial or parliamentary, it would seem to be conclusive.

If it were otherwise what confusion would ensue. Any Speaker pro tempore called in could be so called to rule adversely to the Speaker, and if the Speaker or House were careless, absent, or corrupt he or they could have rulings at pleasure, as varied as Proteus and as unconscionable as Satan.

This is not a matter of small importance, inasmuch as this privilege involves the superior position of this bill over all other bills not so privileged. If, therefore, we have some fifteen thousand bills in a session it is not unlikely that all except a few hundred of them can be tabooed to let this bill forge ahead. This would imply such a dominance by this committee on this class of bills that the large remainder of the bills are thrust aside for this privileged measure. It is not, therefore, a transient matter of inconsequence. As our business does not consummate several thousand bills a session, and as this bill would likely be lost but for the "privilege" claimed, it is by no means a matter of indifference to the other committees of the House and the 324 other members who have bills equally as just in their eyes as this one in the judgment of its promoter.

Suppose you hold, sir—as doubtless you will—that the matter can be reopened for your own opinion, what should that opinion be? I am not vain enough to expect to influence the Speaker, and I speak rather to rescue ad interim my hasty judgment from too much disparagement.

Is this bill for the "reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers?" Admitting this to be such a bill, is it, from its nature, such a bill as to require a strict or a loose construction of the rule? Or since its privilege of "report at any time," is it of such a superior quality that the thousands of other bills shall be set aside till this is considered?

I maintain that Rule XI contemplated the meaning attached to the phraseology used as well by the administration as by the legislation for our landed system.

What is a reservation? It is public land reserved from settlement for schools, Indians, etc. This meaning the preamble of the bill recognized—till the preamble was stricken out. There were many vicissitudes in the titles recited in the lost preamble. But the preamble illustrates the meaning of the measure. It gives the interpretation of the author of the bill. Why was it stricken out?

The preamble states that many settlers believed the lands were public; that they entered on them in good faith; and that then they found out in the courts that they were trespassers.

Now, how can these lands be a reservation of public lands for the benefit of actual settlers if this preamble were true?

Oh! but the bill—this bill itself—declares them to be public lands, but it also shows that they were not. It lacked this very legislation to give them such a status! And how? To gain a "privilege" by writing words in the bill which give a quasi jurisdiction.

Then, the bill ratifies the titles of settlers—titles either from Iowa or the United States.

Is there in this relation such a reservation of public lands for settlers as Rule XI meant? No. It gives title to others not in conflict. In conflict with what and with whom? Why, with pre-emption and homestead claimants; and then it proceeds to quiet title under pre-emption.

Again, the bill provides that the Attorney-General should bring suits—suits for what? For actual settlers? Yes; and something more. It joins other persons in the suits. Thus it takes away the privilege, for the lack of "privilege" in one substantial regard destroys the "privilege" altogether. This proposition is well settled.

The last section of the bill is fatal to the "privilege;" for it is not even of remote kindred to the rule. The rule provides only for the reservation of public lands, and not in behalf of those claiming under the United States against private parties. It forces others to the worry and expense of further litigation, so as to conclude these other private parties and quiet title against them after judicial determination.

This is the unostentatious but main object of the bill. It is the essence, the sine qua non, the "end-all and be-all" of the legislation sought. This is not privileged.

The Germans say: "If the devil gets hold of a hair he will drag in the whole body."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This bill wants to get hold of the devil's hair.

Mr. COX. That is not a legal argument, and hardly a good illustration.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, it is a sound one.

Mr. COX. So here, the devil, who always works best by the aid of "cunning old lawyers" and statutes, seizes a privileged hair or so. Then he grips them. It is his "privilege" to grip them, but he should not pull in the body with them.

The gentleman from Illinois in a former debate called the first section the "germ" of the bill. What is a germ? It is a first principle or seed out of which grows something else. So that if the first section is a germ, it is but the seed or origin out of which is to grow the litigation, which is the paramount object, but it is not the same in substance as the pretended and privileged object. It may be that a forest of oaks has its germ in an acorn, but who would think of dragging into a bill as to a "privileged" acorn questions as to all other objects of the vegetable kingdom? How attach to such a bill a code of forest-culture? Why not, by a parity of reasoning, tack on to such a bill a tariff on dye-stuffs since they are made out of acorns?

The gentleman argued (page 1945)—after quoting a bill prohibiting unlawful inclosures for the benefit of those who sought (not those who had, but who sought) to acquire homes upon public lands—that the litigation provided in this bill "cut no figure," as it was subsidiary and subordinate to the main proposition. If it cuts no figure it has no privilege.

Will it be said that the litigation proposed, if isolated, would be privileged under Rule XI? No. Certainly not, if the litigation has no reference to reservations. Then how can it be dragged into the matter so as to pass on it, by the vigor of certain recitals and provisos? It is because the courts say these settlers are not bona fide, that the bill seeks litigation to give them a quality not their own. Can a committee, by using terms in their bill or report, change the relation of those litigants or parties so as to make their bill privileged? There is no fair way of making this bill privileged except by striking out the unprivileged part; and then the bill would be worthless for the objects it seeks; and that is the touchstone of its privilege.

Is it not within the Speaker's province, on a question of this nature, to examine all the published records, so as to ascertain whether the lands involved are reservations, or whether they have another quality? If this be so, can it not be ascertained whether or not the recitals in the bill or report of this committee are correct?

If such recitals are to govern, why may not a committee, at any moment, become privileged by simply declaring any area of land to be public domain. The declaration of the committee does not make the fact; but it would seem to create the privilege, in the opinion of the gentleman.

A recital of certain land in Long Island or in Galveston, in which the Government never had any title, coupled with the statement that it is a part of the public domain, would that bring it within the question of privilege?

The question of privilege must be decided, therefore, by referring to the records of the country. It must be a matter of history.

If the lands in question ever belonged to the public domain, I assert that the record will show that they have been taken away from that category by acts of Congress. The record of this House will show it. It shows the record of the original grant and of subsequent grants. The records of the executive department show the same thing. The records in the judiciary of the United States show the same thing.

No man can, be he ever so good a lawyer, examine these records without being satisfied thoroughly that these lands are not a part of the public domain. If this bill should become a law it could not relate to public lands, however much, on a superficial glance from the bill itself, the same may seem.

The rule which gives this privilege was intended to affect a class of settlers who are special beneficiaries of the Government with respect to the public lands. It was never intended to go beyond that and assist remote litigation.

So far as any personal bias is concerned, I could have had none in relation to bona fide settlers; for I believe I am the only one in this House left, except, perhaps, my honored friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who voted for the homestead law. I never voted to despoil for railroad purposes the public domain. I have a uniform record in favor of the settlement of our domain by those who desire to improve it, to make it their home.

When I made the decision in this case I had no idea of the merits, if any were involved in the bill. The only reference to it during the first debate of a significant character was that made by the introducer of the bill, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES], who declared that it was a bill to reserve the rights of settlers and protect the public lands against this corporation, which has already robbed the United States of several hundred thousand acres of land.

For this he was called to order by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER], who insisted on stating that the company obtained the land without one dollar of compensation, and, he added further, that the settlers were held in the courts to be trespassers. This is all that was developed as to the merits in the debate on the point of order.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that although these remarks may lack in cogency, and although they may not influence your judgment, yet they may in some future possibly serve some good purpose when a case is presented lacking the argumentum ad misericordam on behalf of those evicted squatters. That purpose may be to prohibit under the rules important and menacing matters not privileged, because some subordinate matters are privileged, so that thus the predominating feature of a measure which is unprivileged may have advantages to which neither by the rule nor the sympathetic and humane reason of the rule are they entitled.

Hence it is that I ask to print with these remarks some other points to which I have not fully adverted.

Mr. HOLMES. I trust that the suggestion of the gentleman from New York as to printing on the point of order will be made general, so that all members may avail themselves of that privilege.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, all gentlemen who desire to print on this question of order will be permitted to do so.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. I think I can make myself understood, Mr. Speaker, in less time than has been consumed by the gentleman from New York in reading so much of his carefully prepared argument as he has read.

Two questions only are presented by the gentleman from New York in reference to the pending matter. The first one is, whether under the facts he has stated, and as to which I concur, it is within the province of the Speaker to reconsider or review a decision made by the distinguished gentleman from New York when he occupied the position of Speaker pro tempore. I do not regard it as essential, Mr. Speaker, to consume a single moment's time in discussing that question. If it shall be held to be the law that whenever a decision is once made by any occupant of the position which you hold, that it can never be revoked, then no matter how absurd the decision which shall have been rendered upon any question, it stands, like the laws of the Medes and Persians, for all time to come, or so long as the rules which were in existence at the time the decision was made shall be operative in this body.

I think it is not necessary to do more than state the facts, and that it is needless to argue a proposition so absurd as that.

The report was presented, and the gentleman from New York, as Speaker pro tempore, sustained a point of order as to the question of privilege, and the report was withdrawn, as it may be properly done at this time; so it is in precisely the same condition now as if it had not been presented. That is all there is of that. It is now presented de novo, with, of course, this condition staring us in the face, that the gentleman from New York had decided adversely on the question of privilege when he occupied the chair.

Now, the first question is as to whether it is a privileged question. It seems to me that is clear. Section 49 of Rule XI reads:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated.

And coming down to the Committee on Public Lands it reads:

The Committee on Public Lands, * * * bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

That is the language of the rule, and the question is whether this bill comes within that rule. I assume for the purposes of this argument, Mr. Speaker, that it is utterly immaterial what the individual judgment of members of the House, or of the Speaker himself, may be as to the decisions of the courts or any judicial tribunals of the country upon any question connected with the subject-matter of this bill. The bill must be examined, and the decision of the Chair must be based upon the bill as it is presented. The bill as presented recites the fact that there are certain pieces of land in the State of Iowa which are thereby declared to be public lands, and that the lands that are thus declared to be public lands shall be opened for settlement in the hands of homestead or pre-emption settlers.

Perhaps I had better read the bill, so as to get the language exactly correct:

That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby declared to be, public lands of the United States.

There is the germ of this bill. The preamble to which the gentleman from New York refers has been stricken from it; but if it were retained, it only recites a state of facts in its different clauses so as to show why this land is thus declared to be public lands.

Because by improper action on the part of certain officers of the Interior Department these lands were placed in what is known under the public-land laws as a state of technical reservation, so that no valid settlement could be initiated, and because such reservation has never been rescinded, therefore the attempts to effect settlement under the homestead and pre-emption laws and to make valid settlements have been inoperative.

Therefore this bill recites that in view of the fact that this said reservation was erratic, it is revoked or removed, and the lands are declared to be public lands, and parties who are themselves in possession as homestead or pre-emption settlers may claim their rights and interests are validated under this law. There is a provision in this bill on which the gentleman dwells, which is the permission to institute suits under section 2. That is only incident to and in connection with the principal portion of the bill. After the bill declares, as it does, that the lands are public lands, it provides how they shall get adjudication in reference to it, and it is only incident to the main provision contained in the bill. Section 2 provides that suit shall be instituted by the Attorney-General of the United States to enforce the provisions of the law, and that is only incident to the main provision.

Now, the gentleman from New York says that it will be and that it would be a question of ingrafting upon a bill that was privileged a system of forestry for the United States. True, and that was done in regard to a bill coming from the Public Lands Committee last Congress; and I am not so certain but that the gentleman from New York was occupying the chair when it was passed by this House and sent to the Senate. This is a bill to preserve "in reservation for the benefit of all actual settlers" these lands. It is to be decided whether it is a privileged question, and as to whether certain lands in the State of Iowa are public lands and are to be so held. The second point is that those who are in possession of them as homestead or pre-emption claimants can hold them, and I may say in passing that everybody knows, as well as I do, that under the homestead law and under the pre-emption law no one can make a claim to public lands except by actual settlement on the land itself, and that it comes within the law of this House to make this a privileged question, it seems to me the statement of the proposition is the strongest argument that can be made in its favor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Speaker, the first position taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is that a point decided heretofore by a presiding officer of the House or of the Committee of the Whole ought to be regarded as res adjudicata. My colleague [Mr. PAYSON] thinks that that position is untenable and does not deserve consideration. I agree that it is untenable, but I think the eminence and acknowledged ability of the gentleman from New York render it important to take special notice of the doctrine he advances. It is dangerous doctrine, fraught with serious inconvenience to this House. It is all the more dangerous because of the distinguished source from which it comes.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that in deciding the pending question of order you will expressly disapprove of the doctrine of res adjudicata as announced by the distinguished gentleman from New York. During the last two Congresses we have suffered great inconvenience on several occasions because Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole have been unwilling to go into the principles of the rulings they made, but have contented themselves with relying on some previous decision of some previous Chairman.

The analogy which the gentleman from New York finds between the decision of a presiding officer of this House and the decision of a judicial tribunal is entirely fallacious. There is no real analogy between the two cases. Even courts sometimes overrule their own decisions. They are reluctant to do so, I admit. The reason is this: When a decision has been made by a court, private parties may make, and are presumed to make, the decision a guide for their own conduct. They enter into contracts on the faith of it. It would not be fair to change the ruling without very solid reason. But what analogy is there between that case and this?

No contracts are made by individuals on the faith of the ruling of a chairman on a point of order under the rules of the House. The question of private right does not intervene; and, therefore, the doctrine of res adjudicata, or rather the underlying reason of that doctrine, does not apply.

I believe that from the very beginning of the Forty-ninth Congress, when we made some radical changes in the rules, which gave rise to much discussion, it would have been far better if every Chairman of the Committee of the Whole had examined the principle of every ruling that he made, instead of relying on precedent.

I distinctly remember that one or two decisions hastily made soon after the change in the rules involved the business of this House in confusion for almost a year. I most earnestly hope, Mr. Speaker, that if you decide in this case to affirm the former decision of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] it will be because you believe in the soundness of his decision, and not merely because a former presiding officer has made a ruling in the same or in an analogous case, which, however erroneous it may in fact be, must stand as res adjudicata merely because it has been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a few words on this subject. I dissent entirely from the view expressed by my friend from New York [Mr. COX]. I hold that the doctrine of res adjudicata of the courts is wholly inapplicable to current discussions on questions of order in a legislative body. That doctrine is one of positive law, recognized in judicial proceedings, for the protection of private rights and for the purpose of securing definite and final results. It is a final determination of specific issues; it can not apply in a legislative body, for the manifest reason that it belongs to a judicial proceeding. It is the outgrowth of a legal controversy between specific parties, and is the final result of judicial deliberation.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And upon issues joined.

Mr. HOLMAN. And upon issues joined.

Mr. WEAVER. And it applies only to that case.

Mr. HOLMAN. But in a legislative body judicial deliberation is scarcely possible; points of order must be decided upon the spur of the moment and not upon deliberation. My friend from New York [Mr. COX] had no opportunity for investigating the provisions and the scope of this bill as would be necessary to enable him to bring into play that judicial power which he possesses in a very eminent degree. But, Mr. Speaker, I call the attention of my friend from New York to this fact. The question involved here is res adjudicata. It had already been finally adjudicated by this House under the present rule, and if the decision pronounced by my distinguished friend is to stand as the law of the House, then what? Why, a leading decision where the same question of order was raised, under the same rule of the House, upon substantially the same facts, would be overruled, the general current of decision of the House under this rule overthrown. For the purpose of securing harmony in the records of the House it is highly important, as I think, that the decision upon this point of order should be made in harmony with the general current of decisions of the House.

I refer especially, Mr. Speaker, to the decision made by the Chair on the question of order raised on the general land bill at the last session. The general purpose of that bill, the general scope of it, was to secure the public lands to actual settlers, but it necessarily involved a vast amount of other matters: protection of coal fields from monopoly, protection of water courses from monopoly, protection of forests from destruction, and a multitude of other incidental matter. That bill bristled with legislative provisions which are prominent and yet only incidental, and, in some cases, only remotely incidental, to the general purpose of protecting to the actual settlers the public lands, yet the point of order was overruled; whereas this bill contains but a single subject-matter and the provisions directly necessary to secure the purpose sought to be attained, namely, that certain lands heretofore granted by Congress to a corporation shall be restored to the public domain and secured for the benefit of actual settlers.

My friend says that the main object of this bill is to give these settlers a standing in court, but that is a mere incident, and it is a remote incident and yet a necessary incident. My friend misapprehends the object of the bill entirely. I can readily see the grounds upon which that decision of my friend was made; it was a misapprehension on the spur of the moment of the purpose of the bill. My friend says that the Supreme Court held that these settlers had no standing in court, that they were trespassers, and that the object of the bill was to give them such standing. And it is true that the object of the bill is to give them a standing in court. Why? For the purpose of securing these lands to the benefit of the settlers upon them.

The incident of giving them by the second section of the bill a standing in court is designed simply to carry out and accomplish the main purpose of the bill—to secure these lands for the benefit of actual settlers as against the corporation to which the grant was made. The bill contains just three provisions—one declaring the forfeiture; another providing that the lands occupied shall remain the property of the persons in possession; and thirdly, a provision to carry that second proposition into effect. So that the application of the rule of the House to this bill is free from any trouble. The misfortune was that my distinguished friend from New York had not the time necessary for a careful consideration of the scope and purpose of the rule of the House and the purpose sought to be accomplished by the bill. I think the House and the country are fortunate in the fact that the question of the construction of this particular rule has been so often before the Speaker of the House that he has had occasion to consider it carefully in all its details as well as purpose of its adaptation. I think my friend from New York will see that it is far better the regular course of decision should be maintained and the records of the House made perfect than that an incidental decision, made upon the spur of the moment, should unsettle the current ruling and leave the subject open for future controversy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that questions of order which affect merely the proceedings in the House and do not, like judgments of courts, conclude the rights of parties, are always open for re-examination and decision; and therefore the present occupant of the chair has never hesitated to overrule his own decisions when convinced that they were wrong.

The point made by the gentleman from New York is that this is not a bill for the reservation of public lands for the benefit of actual settlers. That is a question which has arisen very frequently under the fiftieth clause of Rule XI of the House, and the Chair has invariably placed a very liberal construction upon that rule. In view of the object which the rule was intended to accomplish, the Chair thought that was the proper policy to be pursued, leaving to the House at all times the right to pass or reject any bill upon which the question might arise. Of course it is not the province of the Chair to express any opinion as to the merits of this bill or as to whether, if passed, it will accomplish the object contemplated by it.

It is sufficient, in the judgment of the Chair, if the bill shows upon its face that its purpose is to reserve public lands for the benefit of actual settlers. The bill refers to, and if passed can affect only, those lands which were "improperly certified" by the Secretary of the Interior to the State of Iowa. Even if the Chair were called upon to decide whether the lands affected by the bill are public lands or not, it appears it would affect none except those, as the Chair has already said, which were improperly certified; and of course if they were improperly certified, they are still public lands of the United States.

The second section, which directs the Attorney-General to institute suits, provides simply a means for the accomplishment of the object which the bill contemplates; and the Chair thinks that the point raised by the gentleman from New York, that non-privileged matter can not be connected with privileged matter in a bill, does not arise in this instance. The Chair has always held, and will continue to hold, that non-privileged matter can not be connected with privileged matter, unless it be something which is essential to the accomplishment of that part of the bill which is privileged; and the Chair thinks that is the case here. With great respect for the opinion of the gentleman from New York who presided when this question was presented before, the Chair feels constrained to hold that this is a matter of privilege, and so decides. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is entitled to the floor.

PRINTING BILL FOR ADMISSION OF SOUTH DAKOTA, ETC.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] proceeds, I want to ask unanimous consent for an order to print the Senate bill for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and the organization of the Territory of North Dakota. This bill as passed by the Senate has never been printed. I desire to ask that the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be printed, and recommitted to the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that request? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now I ask also that an order be adopted in regard to the consideration of that subject.

Mr. PAYSON. Let the proposed order be read.

The SPEAKER. The order will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 185, being a bill to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota; and that said bill be made a special order, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, immediately after the hour for the consideration of bills on to-morrow, and from day to day until disposed of, with leave to offer as a substitute therefor, House bill No. 8466; and that thereafter the bills relating to the admission of Montana, Washington, and New Mexico shall be in order in the House in like manner until disposed of.

Mr. PAYSON. This has been read simply for information?

The SPEAKER. That is all.

Mr. PAYSON. I object to its consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is not before the House. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is entitled to the floor.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the report which has been made on the bill, which comes from the Committee on Public Lands, embraces some thirty-six printed pages. I do not intend at this time to do more than state the substance of it. I assume the subject-matter of the bill is familiar to most of the members of the House, and especially to those not serving their first term in this Congress, from the fact this bill and the relief which is proposed under it have been in one form or other pending in one or both Houses of Congress for the last sixteen years.

Beginning with the Forty-third Congress and coming down to this time there has not been a time in the history of Congress that a bill looking to the relief of the beneficiaries of this bill has not been pending in one House or the other.

More than that, there has been, as I recollect it, but one adverse report to the proposition to extend some relief to those who are to be benefited by this bill.

I do not take time to go into a detailed history of the legislation in the two Houses, but the bill has passed first in one House and then in the other, until in the Forty-ninth Congress it passed this House by a substantially unanimous vote. It passed the Senate, I believe, with only four dissenting votes, went to the President of the United States, and by him, after a casual examination of less than two days, was vetoed. It came back to Congress, passed the Senate, notwithstanding the veto, and on reconsideration in this body received a vote of one hundred and sixty-odd to ninety; failing, however, to receive the necessary vote of two-thirds, it did not become a law notwithstanding the veto.

But the point I make now is, there never has been a time in the history of this legislation that measures proposed in the bill have not had substantially the unanimous support of both sides in both Houses of Congress.

I content myself, therefore, Mr. Speaker, at this time with giving an epitome barely upon which this important bill is based, and then, unless something is offered in opposition to it, will ask a vote of the House on it after some observations from gentlemen from the State in which citizens live who are directly affected by the provisions of the bill.

I may say I have an earnest desire this bill shall speedily pass, from the fact those who are to be benefited by it, because of technical conditions in the public-land law, and in the situation in which they are placed, are placed in such a position that at this very hour, as I am advised by members from Iowa—men who, some of them, twenty years ago, on the invitation of the officers of the Interior Department of this Government, went in good faith on these lands, paid their money into the Treasury of the United States, where it now remains, and who have had for almost an entire generation a patent for the lands on which their homes have been made, are to-day being evicted from them and turned out into the highway at this inclement season of the year, enduring hardships which awaken the deepest sympathy from me. And I am in receipt, and have been since I have been in attendance in this Congress, of letters that purport to be written by citizens of the United States who are in this condition, of whom I never heard until I received these letters, and who make these pitiful statements to me; and the statements they have made to me are confirmed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HOLMES], who have some personal knowledge of the condition of affairs there.

Briefly, the situation out of which the necessity for this bill has arisen is this: In 1846 a grant of public land was made by the Congress in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa, and it was provided in the bill that alternate sections of the public land on either side of the river for 5 miles in width, to be selected by a commission jointly appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and the governor of Iowa, should be granted to aid in the improvement of the navigation of that river by a system of dams and locks.

Without stopping to read the bill, it is enough to state here, in substance, that the grant so made is what is known in the public-land law as a grant in præsenti, and it was provided in the bill that as the work progressed the lands would be certified to the State to be sold, and the proceeds of the sale to be applied to the further prosecution of this work of improvement of the river. The land which was thus granted in contemplation of law, and in the judgment of men who framed and passed the bill, was limited to lands lying upon either side of the river and south of the forks of what is called the Raccoon River, or, as it is commonly called there, the "Forks of the Coon." The State of Iowa commenced the prosecution of the work of improvement by establishing a board of public works, and was proceeding to construct the improvement in its own way and through its own agencies.

A year or two later, for some reason, that plan of improvement was abandoned, and a contract was let to a corporation called the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company, by which the company agreed, in consideration of the grant of land made by Congress to the State, that it would itself proceed to construct the works and improve the river, as was then in contemplation. They commenced the work upon the river. A certain amount of money was spent in this direction, and I may say in passing that there is some dispute as to the amount, but only a commencement was made, and the work was barely commenced when a question was raised as to the proper construction of the law by which the grant was made.

It was contended on the one side that the grant was limited by the forks of the Coon, the point at which the city of Des Moines is located, and which is about the center of the State, from the mouth of the river to the northwest corner of the State—that this point was the limit of the grant; while it was claimed by the navigation company that the grant extended to this extreme northwestern corner of the State, and that they were entitled, in accordance with their contract under the grant, to about double the amount of land in contemplation when the bill passed Congress. Finally, the officers of the Interior Department were called upon to decide the question, and it was decided by the Secretary of the Interior that the grant carried no land further north than the forks of the Coon, and that all of the lands further north than this, involving some 270,000 acres, were still public lands.

But in the mean time, under the assumption which the people of Iowa entertained that the grant did extend further north and west, the State opened a land office and sold a portion of the lands beyond the point I have indicated to the extent of some 55,000 acres; that is to say, lands lying north of the point at which the Interior Department held that the grant terminated. When the Interior Department decided that the grant extended no further north the improvement company, which had expended a certain amount of money—the amount being immaterial, and which, as I have said, has been disputed, for they had practically done nothing in the way of substantial improvements; they had put in some dams, etc., preliminary to the work, and had a plant provided for the prosecution, but no substantial improvement of the river had been made—they threw up their contract and refused to go on unless they were assured that they would get the lands on either side of the river, not only adjacent to the river north of the forks of the Coon but the lands lying along this same line to the extreme northern boundary of the State. As the Interior Department had already decided that the grant did not extend further north, the work was abandoned, and it has not been prosecuted since.

Then came a question as to the settlement between the navigation company and the State of Iowa; and the State of Iowa, on the 18th day of May, 1856, by its Legislature, provided for the making and executing by the governor of the State of a deed of all the lands to the navigation company that it got under the act of Congress, and for the settlement and adjustment of all claims between the navigation company and the State of Iowa arising under the contract to which I have referred. A copy of these papers is set out in full in the report and substantially in the exact words I have quoted here. The deed which was executed by authority of the State of Iowa purported to convey only the lands "granted by the act of Congress approved August 8, 1846." So that upon the face of the deed itself, and under the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, as well as under the accepted understanding by the authorities of the State of Iowa, all the lands which could pass by that deed were those lands lying between the forks of the Coon and the mouth of the river. That deed was executed and delivered.

But, Mr. Speaker, remembering what I said awhile ago, that upon the assumption that the grant to the State did extend farther north, the State of Iowa had sold some 55,000 acres of land to citizens of the State, assuming that it had the right to sell. Now, by the decision of the Interior Department and by the accepted interpretation of the statutes, the titles to lands thus sold were invalid.

About that time a case got into the courts, and the Supreme Court of the United States decided—the decision being quoted here in the report, and what is commonly known as the Litchfield case—that the decision of the Interior Department was the correct interpretation of the law, and that the State took nothing by its grant except lands lying on either side and between the forks of the Coon and the mouth of the river.

Then came the necessity for further legislation to protect the people who had purchased the 55,000 acres from the State of Iowa, and so an appeal was made to Congress by some member of the Iowa delegation—I do not now remember his name, because it is a matter of the earlier history of legislation upon this subject; but the result was the passage in 1862 of a joint resolution by Congress, cited in the report, providing for the validation of the rights of all "bona fide purchasers" of these lands from the State of Iowa, and the only persons who were beneficiaries of that legislation, or who were contemplated in the legislation when it passed, were the citizens of the State of Iowa who had purchased a part and parcel of the 55,000 acres from the State. This is clear from the records and the action of the State officials.

A while later there came a dispute between the State of Iowa and the United States as to how much land in acreage, indemnity or otherwise, the State was entitled to under this grant, and another made under another bill for the benefit of certain railroad companies; and there was also another act passed prior to the act to which I have just referred, donating certain lands for educational purposes, and some of these identical lands covered by the pending bill were lands which had been selected for that purpose by the State of Iowa. In order to provide a general adjudication of the whole matter of difference an act was passed by the Iowa Legislature providing for what is known as the "Harvey settlement," that is for the adjudication between Iowa and the United States of all these questions, and a claim was presented by the representatives of the Des Moines Company for some of the lands north of the fork of the Coon under the old contract. This claim, however, was rejected by the authorities of Iowa and by the officers of the Interior Department as well as by Congress, because when the Harvey settlement was made it was a settlement in regard only to lands falling to the State under the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, and the act of July 12, 1862. It was a complete adjustment of the disputes between Iowa and the United States growing out of these several grants, and the navigation company was not regarded as coming within the provisions of the resolution of 1861 as a purchaser.

So things were going along smoothly, but in the mean time it was held out by the Department that this land was public land. And because of the decision in the Litchfield case, and because the Secretary of the Interior had invited settlers to come upon it, very many people—the gentleman from Iowa sitting near me can tell better than I how many, but at any rate a large number of families—went upon this land and initiated homestead and pre-emption settlements. They made their settlements at that time under the pre-emption law. They paid their money into the Treasury, and, after a lapse of six months, patents issued to many of them, and many of them have been in possession of them from that day to this.

A little later on came another question. The navigation company was disrupted, and all of its assets passed into the hands of those who bought them at the sale of its assets. These gentlemen who succeeded to the assets of the bankrupt concern set up a claim that, under a certain condition of the law in Iowa, they were entitled to be treated as the bona fide purchasers under the legislation of 1862, to which I have referred. So suit was initiated in the State of Iowa, and it went to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court decided in the case, which is known in the history of this transaction as the Wolcott case—a full copy of which I have inserted in this report—holding in that case that the claimants in any lands under the navigation company, not only south of the fork of the Raccoon but north of it, held valid title, and that they were entitled to be treated as purchasers of the State of Iowa; and this case has been treated as a precedent from the time of this decision down to now. It has been insisted, and is insisted to-day in the courts, that this is a rule of property that we can not go behind.

The difficulty in the situation is this: I have insisted, time and time again, and I have asserted it upon this floor for many years, that the Wolcott case was a collusive case, gotten up between holders of the navigation company's title and dummy defendants, so that the case could be adjudicated in some of the courts of this country, and upon such decision they could base their claims as holders of adverse title, and that statement is based upon the record of that case.

Here is the statement of the agreed case between the attorneys for Wolcott and attorneys for the defendant:

The lot in question is one section of land, which is selected and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and duly certified by the governor of the State to the President, according to the second section of the act, and was duly sold and conveyed, among other parcels of lands, by the State to the defendants.

There is the agreement in the record upon which the Supreme Court decided that the navigation company had good title; and there is not the first sentence in that admission that is true in fact.

In addition, it was never before contended that there was an acre of land above the forks duly certified under the act of 1846 by the governor of the State to the President, or that there ever was an acre of this land in dispute that had been duly sold and conveyed to the navigation company or anybody claiming by, through, or under it.

And need I say to lawyers who are giving me the honor of their attention that where an agreed case is made, and the case made by the plaintiff against himself, the court can do nothing else than give judgment for the defendant? And that has been the condition of that Wolcott case down to this time.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. HERBERT. If the facts are not as stated in that agreement, how is it that the Wolcott case has been treated as a precedent for every other case?

Mr. PAYSON. I will come to that presently. It has been decided and the decision remains. To show that it was a collusive case I will state that the cost of the litigation was paid by the successful party, as appears by the records here almost within the sound of my voice. The costs were paid by the party that won the suit. "A trumped-up case," as suggested by my friend, Governor GEAR, who has had very much to do with this matter. There are other cases of the same character that have got into the courts, and in every case but one it has the car-mark upon it of being collusive litigation that the parties manufactured to bolster up the claim of title.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Was not the question that this was a collusive case made in the subsequent cases before the Supreme Court of the United States, and did not the court decide that there was no basis for the charge?

Mr. PAYSON. Not in my knowledge or observation.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. As you assert it so distinctly, I take your word for it.

Mr. PAYSON. I speak with some caution as to that point. I have been examining this question for four different sessions of Congress, and I have never heard from any one at any time until the question was made by the gentleman from Minnesota that such a decision had been made, if the question implies that it had been made.

I have asserted this frequently, and have asserted it in the presence of the lawyers of the navigation company time after time, and never had them dispute it. I have asserted it in the room of the Committee on Public Lands. The question may have been so presented, but I do not recall it, and feel sure it was never decided that the Wolcott case was not collusive. But resuming, this certification of lands which was made by the General Government to the State of Iowa was made by the Secretary of the Interior about 1848 or 1849. He doubted his right to make the certification, and made a "conditional certification" to the State of Iowa, simply making and signing a list of reservations of rights under the certification; and the difficulty, as I assert, of those who have gone in and attempted to initiate settlements upon these lands occurs because the courts have uniformly held, and I think correctly, that this conditional certification by Mr. Secretary Stuart was a technical "reservation" of those public lands from settlement, and that no valid settlement could be initiated upon these lands until that "reservation" was revoked either by Congress or by the Interior Department.

If I make myself understood I will try to get this in a nutshell. The public lands were there. By this certification, conditional as it was, according to the decisions of the court (and I repeat myself to say that I think that decision was correct), there was virtually a reservation of those public lands as against the rights of settlers until, either by the action of the Interior Department or paramount action by Congress, such as is sought by this bill, that reservation should be revoked. It has never been done by the Interior Department, and now it is asked here. Whenever a settler undertakes to go into court upon the certificate of an entry that he made before the decision that these lands were in a state of reservation he is met by the statement, "That land was reserved at the time the land officers took your money and gave you a certificate of entry, and for that reason you have no standing in court upon which we can determine whether you have a valid right to the land or not."

There have been hundreds of instances, as the records of our committee show, where applications were received and afterwards repudiated on the part of the Land Office; instances where settlers sought to make, initiate, and perfect claims, and the action of the Land Office was based upon the ground that the courts had decided that until the condition of reservation was revoked no settler could make a valid entry upon those lands.

There is another question which has never been presented in any of this litigation in the cases in the courts which I think decisive for the settler. The constitution of the State of Iowa—the old constitution first, and the same provision which was carried into the constitution of 1851—provides in express terms that the State of Iowa shall not accept from the General Government for any purpose any grant of public land upon which there is a settler claiming a settlement right; and in defiance of that constitutional provision, or rather without any regard to the right of settlers who were upon these lands, the State of Iowa assumed to take title to one half of the lands, and the claims made to the other half are under the State of Iowa as the grantee of the United States in disregard of that provision of the constitution of the State. That question, I say, has never been presented in any litigation in connection with this matter. Whenever the settler would undertake to set it up the case would not get that far, because, as lawyers will readily understand, when the court decided that the land being in a state of "reservation," no settlement right could be initiated upon it, that ended the question as to the settler, without reference to the merits of his claim.

Now, what does this bill propose to do? It is a bill of peace. It proposes to recognize what is the fact, that there are three classes of claims to all these lands:

First, the claims of the settlers under the general land law, as against which this state of reservation exists, which prevents them from having a standing in court. They are beneficiaries in this bill. It proposes in terms to declare these lands public lands as to them. When that is done by this bill, the state of reservation will be wiped out and the lands will be placed, in so far as Congress can place them, in precisely the condition in which they would have been if they had never been certified by the Interior Department. The bill declares that they are public lands and that those parties who attempted to initiate pre-emption or homestead rights upon them prior to the 1st day of January, 1880 (that condition being made to prevent persons from coming in and acquiring a speculative interest since the matter has been recently pending in Congress), shall be protected.

Second. Another class of claimants are the holders in good faith of the navigation company's title in possession. To remove the blight of uncertainty of title we agree that persons in possession claiming under the navigation company, whose claims do not conflict with the rights of bona fide settlers under the general land law, shall have their claims validated.

Third. We agree that the claims of those who hold the navigation company's title in good faith of lands not in possession, and the rights of parties who are claiming in any way under the State of Iowa, shall be validated.

Therefore this bill concludes and settles, without any chance for further legislation or litigation, the title of all lands that are not in the actual possession of bona fide settlers under the general land law; and as to those settlers we simply give them a standing in court and allow them to litigate with the holders and the claimants of the navigation company's title adverse to them the questions which I have briefly referred to here, in order that they may have a rehearing in the courts.

This bill does not pretend to divest anybody of any vested right. We could not do that if we sought to do it. We recognize the condition in which we are and validate everything as to which this unfortunate controversy has attached, except the title to tracts of lands in actual possession of settlers in good faith under the public-land laws by entries made prior to June 1, 1880; and as to them we give them the poor boon of going into the courts of the United States to enforce their claims, free from any technical obstruction by reason of the state of reservation which has existed during all these years. That is all.

Now, as to the wrongs that have been perpetrated, as to the evils that have resulted, as to the inconvenience and the distress which are at this very hour being inflicted upon citizens of the State of Iowa by the holders of these speculative titles, some of which have been purchased, to my certain knowledge, as I have it from the men who bought them, at less than $3 an acre, upon which they are trying to-day to extort $10, $15, and $20 an acre for a compromise with the farmers who have been in possession of the lands for a generation—as to these matters we simply say, "You may go to the courts;" and the only inconvenience that this bill imposes upon anybody is the inconvenience of a lawsuit with a settler to determine these questions free from embarrassment by other issues. That is all there is about it.

The second section of the bill provides, as in justice it ought, that the Attorney-General shall take the initiative in this matter; that as soon as practicable, but within the two years, the Attorney-General shall begin a suit to test the validity of this matter with reference to some of these titles which are thus held by actual settlers in possession; and the parties may join in the suit if they choose and be represented by their own counsel.

This measure does not involve the United States in the expenditure of a single dollar. It imposes an additional duty upon gentlemen connected with the Department of Justice, many of whom, I think, could perhaps take this added duty without very much interference either with their comfort or their pleasure.

This is a matter of simple justice in behalf of poor men in whose interest the doors of Congress have been opened time and time again; but the necessary legislation has not heretofore been had because of the great amount of public business pending in one House or the other, except in the last Congress, when the President vetoed the bill upon grounds which I regard as not very substantial, but which I do not care now to discuss, as this bill meets the point that the President made, that a simple bill allowing action where action can not be had would not be objectionable. This bill does this.

I have agreed, Mr. Speaker, to yield a few minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], and his colleague [Mr. HOLMES], who desire to make statements with reference to some matters of which they have personal cognizance. I take pleasure in yielding to those gentlemen.

But I venture the confident hope that before this session to-day shall end this bill will pass without any substantial amendment, by a substantially unanimous vote, and tidings of joy be carried to the humble homes of the poor people in Iowa who will be benefited by our action.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] has twenty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. PAYSON. I reserve that time, and yield first to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] so much time as he may desire.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, after the very clear and fair statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], I do not think it proper for me to delay the vote upon this bill. I know from personal observation and from the history of the neighborhood affected by this bill that a very great hardship is now being perpetrated upon people occupying the land in dispute. The law and the facts as stated by the gentleman from Illinois can not be gainsaid or disputed. I decline to occupy further time, trusting that the bill may pass, and pass unanimously. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] reserve the rest of his time?

Mr. PAYSON. I do.

Mr. McRAE. I ask the Clerk to read an amendment which I desire to offer to this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the word "settlers," in lines 10 and 11, and insert the following:

"To not exceeding one quarter-section to each is hereby confirmed and made valid, and upon due proof of the entry, settlement, and cultivation, and the payment of the usual price or fee when the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent."

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to so much of the bill as provides for a forfeiture of the grant, nor do I take issue with my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] as to any of the main facts stated. There is doubt as to whether the bill if passed will accomplish what appears to be desired or not, but as far as I am concerned I am willing to pass it and to leave the legal questions to be settled by the courts.

If with a legislative declaration of forfeiture the courts will reverse their decisions against the settlers, then we ought not to hesitate to make it. It is about the only way to settle the matter as long as the settlers will be satisfied with nothing else. The grant ought not to have been made, and I think ought to be forfeited if it can be, and I would make it broad and emphatic as far as the original beneficiaries are concerned. As between them and the Government there are no equities at all. But I do not desire in making such declaration to do an injustice to a class of settlers now upon some of the land in question by reason of bona fide purchases. To prevent this I have offered this amendment. I ask the careful attention of the friends of the bill to the language of the provisos to the first section.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will read the first proviso, he will see that there can not be any conflict, because there is this express declaration:

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified.

Mr. McRAE. That is just what I object to, and intended to read it. I want the gentleman's attention. Mark the words, "which do not come in conflict with homestead or pre-emption claimants." Now, Mr. Speaker, there are honest settlers upon some of this land who have bought and paid for it, whose title does come in conflict with homestead and pre-emption claimants who are not on it and have never been. The effect of the bill will be to confirm the title in claimants under the public-land laws against actual settlers if they hold by purchase.

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, no; that is not the intention; that is not the proper construction of the language.

Mr. McRAE. It may not be the intention, but it is what the language means, and that will be the effect if it becomes law.

Mr. PAYSON. My friend will agree that under the homestead law a homestead claim can not be valid after the expiration of six months without actual occupancy of the land; and if a person is in actual occupancy as a claimant under the homestead law, this provision would protect him as against a claimant under the State of Iowa.

Mr. McRAE. The fault of this proviso is that it does not require the claim to be valid in the beginning, nor does it require occupancy, but seeks to confirm the title of every person who has made a claim under the pre-emption or homestead law even against actual settlers who reside upon the land. The language has that effect. If such is not the intention, why not accept the amendment? All I want is to protect all the settlers residing upon the land. It should make no difference whether they have purchased from the navigation company or claim as pre-emptors. I would drive none from their homes. If there be such settlers upon the land, they ought to be protected. If there be none, the amendment is harmless.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will not the object of my friend be accomplished by inserting the word "prior" in the thirteenth line before the word "pre-emption?"

Mr. McRAE. That will accomplish my purpose in part only. No man who wants to protect the settlers can object to the amendment I propose, because I seek to make no discrimination in favor of or against anybody.

Mr. PAYSON. Suppose that out of the 55,000 acres sold by the State of Iowa when it was assumed that it had title, somebody, twenty-five or thirty years ago, bought in good faith 320 acres of land, and went into possession of it. Your amendment would cut such a person out of one quarter-section.

Mr. McRAE. Certainly not. I am proceeding upon the theory of the bill that the land is public land and was in fact improperly certified. The policy of our homestead law is to give one quarter-section to each settler, and no more. I would confirm no sales except to settlers, and to them only what they are entitled to as such. In the case you state the purchaser would lose the whole 320 acres if claimed by persons under the homestead and pre-emption laws if the bill remains as you have it. My amendment would give him 160 acres.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I misunderstood what the gentleman proposes. Let it be read again.

Mr. McRAE. It confirms it to the settlers without distinction.

Mr. PAYSON. Perhaps I did not catch it accurately. Let it be read again.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, let it be read again so we can understand it.

Mr. McRAE's amendment was again read.

Mr. PAYSON. That cuts out every purchaser from the State of Iowa.

Mr. McRAE. It cuts out no purchaser who is a settler.

Mr. PAYSON. And compels them to pay again.

Mr. HOLMES. And under it they can not get 160 acres——

Mr. McRAE. One at a time. It compels no one to pay again, and of course the confirmation extends to less than 160 acres if the purchase was for less. But if the land is public land, and there should be other land unoccupied adjoining, such a settler could easily take such quantity as when added to the tract purchased would not exceed 160 acres. There appears to be more anxiety about the confirmation than the forfeiture.

Mr. HOLMES. It would not mend the matter, even under the gentleman's own idea. The amendment gives them, and they could only get under it what they have.

Mr. McRAE. Then what objection have you to it? Should they not have that which they have bought, paid for, and occupy?

Mr. HOLMES. Why, it is mere surplusage.

Mr. McRAE. If the amendment is surplusage, then there is much more in the provisos proposed to be stricken out. Suppose we strike them all out as surpluslage and leave a clean, simple forfeiture.

Mr. HOLMES. Not at all.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have investigated this case closely, and I know there are some settlers who purchased from the navigation company and those holding under it who, with their families, are upon the land as actual settlers; and I believe that under the bill as it is it will be possible for claimants to their homes not in possession to dispossess them and drive them off. The friends of the bill will avow no such purpose and do not expect such result, but such will be the result.

Now, if the gentlemen from Iowa, with this statement of the matter on my part, are willing to take the risk, I shall not complain. I call your attention to the danger and warn you against the injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not insert the words "prior and bona fide" before the word "pre-emption?" By so doing it would avoid that trouble entirely.

Mr. McRAE. I am willing to do that and have such an amendment, but I want to go further still. Even if the claim under these laws was prior and the claimants were not on the land when those who are purchased it, I would still protect the man who actually makes his home on the land. I am for the actual settler everywhere, and against the world, as far as the public domain is concerned. Why have you used the word "claimant" in reference to homesteaders and the word "settlers" in reference to purchasers?

Mr. PAYSON. It is simply, if the gentleman will permit me, that purchasers of title from the State of Iowa, when the State assumes to have title, did not have to go into possession under any law whatever. They could be purchasers from the State of Iowa without being settlers upon the land, which could not be the case under the pre-emption and homestead laws, as there can be, as the gentleman knows, no valid pre-emption or homestead claim except accompanied by settlement within a certain time.

Mr. McRAE. Your language is in conflict with the bill itself, and confirms the statement and the point I have already made.

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all.

Mr. McRAE. Let us see. The point I make on you is this——

Mr. PAYSON. Perhaps a better answer to the gentleman from Arkansas could not be made than the statement that this is the same bill presented by the Senators from Iowa in the United States Senate, and by the members of the House representing the people directly in interest, and after careful examination by the best lawyers in the State of Iowa, and they are all very well satisfied with the phraseology of the bill.

Mr. WEAVER. And the settlers themselves are satisfied with it.

Mr. PAYSON. As my friend, General WEAVER, has stated, the settlers themselves will indorse it.

Mr. WEAVER. It has been indorsed by the Settlers' Union.

Mr. McRAE. I do not know anything about the Settlers' Union, and I do not know anything about the prior bill; but I do know that the settlers who have gone upon these lands and settled in good faith, under the language contained in the bill are liable to be driven from their homes.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman in that respect differs from all those gentlemen who represent the settlers who are interested in this matter.

Mr. GEAR. Every one of them.

Mr. PAYSON. What objection has the gentleman from Arkansas to offer when the citizens of Iowa, the Iowa delegation, and the settlers upon the lands are themselves satisfied?

Mr. McRAE. It does not make any difference to me what may be the opinion of other gentlemen. In dealing with public lands and settlers' rights I prefer to act on my own judgment. The friends of the bill in the presentation of the question appear to forget that there are two classes of settlers, whose interests may conflict.

Mr. GEAR. But the settlers are willing to take the risk that the gentleman thinks will be taken.

Mr. McRAE. But there are two classes of settlers, one who hold their lands by reason of purchase, and another class who are claimants under the homestead or pre-emption law. The latter class is amply protected by the bill, but I fancy that the former, resting on his purchase and possession, has had but little to do with the Settlers' Union, and knows nothing about the effect of the proposed legislation upon him. When this bill becomes a law, he will wake up with a lawsuit.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Arkansas will submit the motion to insert before the word "pre-emption," in line 13, the words "prior bona fide," so that it will read, "which do not come in conflict with prior bona fide pre-emption or homestead claimants."

Mr. McRAE. Certainly. I think that proper, but not at this time.

Mr. PAYSON. I am content with that.

Mr. McRAE. I have that prepared already, and I will move it after the pending amendment is determined, if it should fail. If it is adopted, that is unnecessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I only suggest that, because it is usual to perfect the text of the bill first before moving to strike out.

Mr. McRAE. I am entirely indifferent as to that. But the amendment would not meet the objection I make to the provisos. Let us examine the words of the first proviso:

That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa.

Now, that does not refer to homesteaders and pre-emptors, but to purchasers who are not homesteaders.

Mr. HOLMAN. But there could not be bona fide homestead claimants.

Mr. McRAE. Let me read the proviso:

That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa, and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed and made valid.

Mr. PAYSON. Read the whole proviso.

Mr. McRAE. Here are these settlers who are now upon the lands, having paid their money for them, must yield under this provision to any "claimant" who has a right or conceives he has a right to it under the homestead or pre-emption law, although he may not have been upon the lands for years. No proof of occupancy is required; nothing but a claim. The further language of the provision is this:

Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered and remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, or their heirs, and upon due proof thereof and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

Now, it does not matter how long he remained upon the lands or whether he was qualified or not. If he was upon the lands and made a claim prior to the 1st of January, 1880, under this he has a claim, and the actual bona fide settler and purchaser who had been invited by the acts of Congress and by the State of Iowa and the decisions of the courts to so purchase must yield to a class of claimants who are not even in possession.

Then it goes on:

Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States.

So we see that down to the end preference is given to claimants under the public-land laws, no matter whether they have made a settlement or not. If they make their claims, they are paramount to the rights of the actual settler who has paid his money for the lands and is in actual occupancy.

Mr. PAYSON. But will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. McRAE. Certainly.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman will read a little further down, he will find that this only includes those who settled upon the lands prior to January, 1880.

Mr. McRAE. I have read that. The bill is so much the worse for that language. It does not require the settlement to be continuous. If he made a claim at all prior to January, 1880, and another man came along and made the purchase from the navigation company under the laws of the State and under the authority of Congress, and has gone upon the lands and made his settlement there, the claimant who made the prior claim and abandoned it will take the lands, to the exclusion of the man who has paid his money and improved the lands and who has been upon them all the time. The bill as you have it does not require continuous settlement, and that is one of the main objections I have to it.

Now, it is only to prevent discriminations of one class against the other that I have said anything. All the amendment means, and all it seeks to accomplish, is to prevent such discrimination. If there be no purpose to give preference to one class against the other, whence the objection to the amendment? I have nothing more to say. [Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, in the twenty years that this matter has been under discussion I have never heard an equitable presentation of the case made in behalf of the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, and I do not expect to.

The gist of the case is this: There was a grant made to this company conditioned upon its performance of certain acts therein named. These acts have not been performed. It has been the habit heretofore to forfeit grants of land to railroad companies or corporations where they have not performed the conditions on which the grant was made; and I desire to say that the Des Moines company never received a patent to an acre of these lands. If they had complied with the conditions of the grant they would have received the patent.

The governor of Iowa, it is claimed, made a deed of the lands to the company; but the governor of Iowa had no such right, because the certificates have never been issued which preliminarily conveyed title by a compliance with the grant. He had no such right—first, because the condition had not been complied with; and, second, because section 7 of article 11 of the constitution of Iowa renders it impossible that any such conveyance should be made; and I wish to call the attention of the House to that clause of the constitution for a moment. Article 11 of the Iowa constitution provides that—

> The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been taken or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given by the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without consent of the occupant. The extent of the claim to such occupant so exempted shall not exceed 160 acres.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these lands have been held by a system of chicanery from the time this law was passed in 1846 to the present time. Judge Black very properly characterized it in the case of Litchfield against the Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad Company, 23 Howard, U. S. There never has been an equity in this case; there never has been any performance of the conditions; and yet gentlemen argue against the passage of this bill upon simply no equities whatever.

Now, I presume that the gentleman from Arkansas desires his amendment shall obtain; but his amendment disintegrates this bill entirely. There is not a redeeming clause in that amendment that has not been discussed by these settlers, and it is not what they desire. They are being evicted by United States marshals in the dead of winter. Their crops are being taken and appropriated by these parties who claim these lands.

Mr. Snell, one of these owners, who purchased a large quantity of these lands from the Burroughs estate, is attended by United States marshals and posses, who are walking arsenals, with their pockets full of ejectment writs; they are ejecting these claimants while the snow is on the ground in the middle of winter. I tell you there has been no cruelty, even in Ireland, to excel that practiced in these evictions. It would require the eloquence of Edmund Burke and such a voice as denounced the cruelties of Warren Hastings adequately to portray the wrongs these settlers have suffered at the hands of these men. We had a report by a committee of the Legislature that investigated this subject and made a report as to the condition of these lands, showing that whereas they had voted themselves $1,000,000 worth of stock at that time, but $167,000 had been raised in actual cash.

On the contrary, there has been more damage done to mill-sites and permanent improvements on the river than any benefit that has been received, even if the improvements had been completed by the expenditures of this company. And besides, this company had already received land below the Raccoon Fork to more than three times the amount they had expended. This grant, in 1862, when it was made, projecting the grant above the Raccoon Fork, expressly provided that it should only be earned when that improvement was made to the Raccoon Fork, and that it was made as provided in the act of 1846. Why, in connection with this very bill, when it passed this House, there were one or two members expelled on the ground of corruption, and I have never listened to or read touching all the proceedings of Congress a matter more redolent with corruption than that which attended the passage of this bill through Congress. I could particularize, but do not think it necessary to do so.

These lands are held by honest settlers who have lived upon them for years. The Government has their money in its Treasury, and I know there is enough statesmanship in this House to give these men their just dues in connection with this bill. This bill is somewhat different, as reported by the Committee on Public Lands, from the bill that was vetoed by the President during the Forty-ninth Congress, and materially different. I regret to say that the word "assigns" is stricken out. I would prefer that it should have remained, but we are satisfied with this bill, if it is deemed wise in the opinion of the House to amend it so as to conform with the Senate bill. And as I would much rather that the bill should pass than listen to my own voice I now yield the floor. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WHEELER withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WHEELER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by substituting the bill which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McCREARY). An amendment is not now in order. The committee amendments are pending, and there is also an amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]. The question first is upon the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that motion is put, I move to insert before the word "pre-emption" the words "prior bona fide." Why not insert also "settlers" instead of "claimants?"

Mr. PAYSON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McRAE. Will the gentleman consent to strike out "claimants" wherever it occurs in the bill and insert "settlers?"

Mr. PAYSON. No, I will not agree to do that all the way through, but in this one case I do not object.

Mr. HOLMES. Some of these people have been driven off and are temporarily absent, so that "claimants" is the proper word to use.

Mr. McRAE. Not where it comes in conflict with "settler."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order of proceeding is to take the vote first upon the amendments proposed by the committee. If there be no objection, those amendments will be voted upon in gross.

The question being taken, the amendments reported by the Committee on the Public Lands were agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. I presume it is proper to perfect the text of the bill before voting on my main amendment. I have some amendments which I would like to offer with that view.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Insert, before the word "pre-emption," in line 13, the words "prior bona fide;" so as to read: "which do not come in conflict with prior bona fide pre-emption or homestead claimants."

The amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. McRAE. I now desire to move to amend——

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, is there not already one amendment pending offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. McRAE]?

Mr. McRAE. There is; but I desire now to offer an amendment to perfect the text, in view of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I ask that my amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out the words "prior to January 1, 1880" wherever they occur in the bill.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Speaker, since the adoption of the amendment moved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] there can be no objection, it seems to me, to the amendment I have just submitted. As the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana limits it to prior pre-emption or homestead claimants, there is no necessity for fixing this arbitrary date, January 1, 1880.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me appeal to the gentleman from Arkansas. Does he not remember the claim was made before the Public Lands Committee that since this measure had been recently agitated in Congress many persons, for speculative purposes, have been making pretended entries or claims which ought not to be recognized? By striking out the language to which the gentleman refers we only run the risk of letting those people in to keep up still further the agitation of this question without doing anybody any good. I hope the gentleman's amendment, if insisted upon, will be voted down.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman shakes his head impatiently, but I insist that since the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana allowing preferences to prior pre-emptors and homesteaders there should be, I submit, no objection to this proposition.

Mr. PAYSON. Let us have a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. McRAE, it was rejected; there being—ayes 16, noes 78.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the next amendment in order, being one offered some time since by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MCRAE].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the word "settlers," in lines 10 and 11, and insert "to not exceeding one quarter-section to each is hereby confirmed and made valid, and upon due proof of the entry, settlement, and cultivation, and the payment of the usual price or fee, when the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent."

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected; there being—ayes 18, noes 79.

Mr. PAYSON. I now move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] will allow me five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the motion for the previous question?

Mr. PAYSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York five minutes of my time.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, if the proposition were to make it the duty of the Attorney-General, waiving the question of the statute of limitations, to bring a bill in equity by which action the Wolcott case should be tried upon a question of fraud and as having been obtained by collusion, I should most gladly support the bill. This is not a new question to me. I was in Iowa at the time all these early decisions were being made. I had knowledge of the course of the litigation from beginning to end; and with all deference to my esteemed friend from Illinois, I think that the report of the committee does not fully meet the points which should have been met. One of those points is that Secretary of the Interior Ewing, in 1850, expressly withdrew all these lands from settlement under either the homestead or pre-emption law, which order has been continued from time to time until now, as is expressly stated by Mr. Justice Miller in a case recently decided by him, in which he reviewed this matter. So that the settlers claiming to have gone upon these lands under the homestead or pre-emption law have done so without color of authority from the General Government.

Mr. HOLMES. That being the case, why did the land officers of the Government take those men's money and permit them to make those entries?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I believe the equities in many cases are with the settler. If you will bring this case up properly, I am in favor of a measure which shall test the question, and if any ground can be obtained by which the courts can arrive at a result different from what has been the decision of the United States Supreme Court for twenty years, I should rejoice at it.

Mr. PAYSON. That is just what this bill proposes to do.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The committee, then, has been very unfortunate in the selection of the terms to accomplish the object, for the provision of the first section is that—

The title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed and made valid.

Not a bill of peace, as the gentleman said, but a decree rendered by a legislative body against the decisions and the decrees and the judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States, which had been continued uniformly from the time the act of Congress of 1861 was passed, which was passed in view of the decisions made in 1860 in the Leitchfield case, 23 Howard, 66.

Mr. HOLMAN. In favor of whom? In favor of the corporations' grantees? They are against the settlers so far as they have been made on the ground mentioned, that pre-emption and homestead settlers had no standing except on land which had been reserved by order of the Secretary of the Interior. Is not that so?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That is one of the grounds.

Mr. PAYSON. Is the language of the proviso which the gentleman from New York has read that to which he refers and which he thinks is unfortunate?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I refer to the different provisos in the first section of the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the proviso in the succeeding section, and ask him whether that is not what he refers to and not the proviso which he has read?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I will come to that. I was about to say the next proviso is barred by the decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. PAYSON. But it would not be barred if the proviso in the first section were to become the law in reference to the public lands. That removes the bar, and they could be properly recognized by the courts.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. The mistake of my friend is this: During the time they were withdrawn by the Secretary of the Interior there could be no rights initiated.

Mr. PAYSON. That is what I wish to say.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. But you wish to give them the right.

Mr. PAYSON. We recognize them as public lands as if all the time they had been public lands.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I do not suppose my objection will make much difference in the vote, but I wish to say that this bill undertakes to do what no legislative body can do as between two contending third parties. It undertakes to declare valid the title in one litigating party against another litigating party.

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all. The gentleman is wrong. I know he means to be right, and generally is, but all this bill proposes is to declare the title valid as between the United States on the one side and the State of Iowa and this corporation on the other. And we let them law it out notwithstanding. That is what the gentleman is in favor of, as I understand.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I am not in favor of attacking a decree otherwise than for fraud. I do not know whether there was fraud here or not. The gentleman's statement would have great weight with me if he says there was fraud. But he is in error when he asserts that the Supreme Court has not had that question before them. In Williams vs. Baker, 17 Wallace, 144, the court passed on the proposition far enough to hold that all questions were presented by parties in interest other than the parties to the record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I have been so much interrupted that I have not been able to finish the statement I desired to make.

Mr. PAYSON. I will yield to the gentleman one minute longer, or two, if he desires it.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. One minute will be enough. I desire to say if you are to adhere to the principle of stare decisis then we should adhere to the decision made in 1886 in the case of Ballard against the Des Moines Railroad Company, which was passed upon by a man who saw the first shovelful of dirt thrown up by that navigation company when it attempted to improve the navigation of the Des Moines River, a man who has been familiar with the entire grants made by the Congress of the United States, a man who has taken part in the decisions of the Supreme Court in every case decided after the time of the Litchfield case, decided in 1860.

It is the duty of every court and every legislature to bow to that decision until that decision is attacked for fraud. It is the duty of everybody in the United States to bow to the decision of that court, and that decision runs through eight cases, made in each case as it arose through a period of twenty years.

I object to the terms of this bill, because it usurps judicial functions and undertakes by legislative decree to overthrow the decisions of the courts of the United States, which is obnoxious to the genius of our laws and repugnant to the Constitution.

Mr. GEAR. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. GEAR. You say these questions were decided by a gentleman who saw the first shovelful of earth thrown on that improvement?

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Yes, he was in Iowa almost at the very beginning of this work, in 1846, I believe. I refer to Justice Miller.

Mr. GEAR. I beg pardon; he was not there until eight years later.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. It is immaterial as to the exact date, and you may call that a figure of speech if you will. [Laughter.] There is no doubt that since this litigation sprang up he has been an honored citizen of Iowa as well as an honored member of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We are not trying Justice Miller now.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I wish, in this connection, to insert an extract from the opinion of the Supreme Court in the case of Bullard vs. The Des Moines Railroad, from 122 United States Reports, page 170, et seq.:

On April 6, 1850, Secretary Ewing, while concurring with Attorney-General Crittenden in his opinion that the grant of 1846 did not extend above the Raccoon Fork, issued an order withholding all the lands then in controversy from market "until the close of the then session of Congress," which order has been continued ever since, in order to give the State the opportunity of petitioning for an extension of the grant by Congress. This court has decided in a number of cases in regard to these lands that this withdrawal operated to exclude from sale, purchase, or pre-emption all the lands in controversy, and unless the case we are about to consider constitutes an exception, it has never been revoked.

In 1856 Congress granted to the State of Iowa for the purpose of aiding in the construction of several railroads across that State from the Mississippi to the Missouri River every alternate section, as shown by odd numbers, of the lands on each side of said roads, each of which when the line was fixed crossed the Des Moines River and ran through the lands which the State claimed had been granted to it for the purpose of improving the navigation of that stream.

Pending this controversy between the State of Iowa and the authorities of the United States as to the extent of the grant, a suit was brought by one of these railroad companies that the question might be decided by this court. The case is reported as the Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield (23 How., 66), decided in 1860, and it was held that the grant did not extend above the Raccoon Fork.

As soon as this decision was made, the State, through its Congressional delegation, sought the action of the Congress of the United States to obtain the passage of an act which would secure the grant to the State and its grantees in the full extent which they believed Congress had originally intended by the act of 1846. That the propriety of some action by Congress and the demand for it was pressing is obvious, when we consider that the Des Moines Navigation Company, under contract with the State, had spent large sums of money beyond what they had received from the State, and beyond the value of the lands certified to the State by the Secretary. The work, with all the materials and implements on hand, was suspended; and the danger of the works being swept away and ruined by floods in the river was imminent. The whole subject was before Congress; but without waiting to dispose of it entirely that body, by way of immediate relief, passed the following joint resolution, approved March 2, 1861 (12 Statutes, page 251):

"That all the title which the United States still retain in the tracts of land along the Des Moines River and above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork thereof, in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior, as part of the grant by act of Congress, approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa."

At the next session of Congress a statute was passed, approved July 12, 1862, which provided as follows:

"That the grants of lands to the then Territory of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines River, made by the act of August 8, 1846, is hereby extended so as to include the alternate sections (designated by odd numbers) lying within 5 miles of said river, between the Raccoon Fork and the northern boundary of said State; such lands are to be held and applied in accordance with the provisions of the original grant, except that the consent of Congress is hereby given to the application of a portion thereof to aid in the construction of the Keokuk, Fort Des Moines and Minnesota Railroad, in accordance with the provisions of the act of the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, approved March 22, 1858." (12 Stat., 543.)

By this joint resolution and this act of Congress, the United States relieved so far as it could the misfortune of the construction of the grant to the Territory of Iowa of 1846, made by this court, and ratified the construction which had always been claimed by the State.

During all this controversy there remained the order of the Department having control of the matter, withdrawing all the lands in dispute from public sale, settlement, or pre-emption. This withdrawal was held to be effectual against the grant made by Congress to the railroad companies in 1856, because that act contained the following proviso:

"That any and all lands heretofore reserved to the United States, by any act of Congress, or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever, be, and the same are hereby, reserved to the United States from the operation of this act, except so far as it may be found necessary to locate the routes of said railroads through such reserved lands, in which case the right of way only shall be granted, subject to the approval of the President of the United States." (11 Stat., 9.)

See Wolcott vs. Des Moines Company (5 Wall., 681), and Williams vs. Baker (17 Wall., 144) in which cases is also to be found a very full and clear recital of the history of the Des Moines grant controversy.

In May, 1860, the Commissioner of the General Land Office sent to the registers and receivers of that office at Des Moines and Fort Dodge the following printed notice:

"Notice is hereby given that the land along the Des Moines River, in Iowa, within the claimed limits of the Des Moines grant, in that State, above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork of said river, which has been reserved from sale heretofore on account of the claim of the State thereto, will continue reserved, for the time being, from sale or from location, by any species of scrip or warrants, notwithstanding the recent decision of the Supreme Court against the claim. This action is deemed necessary to afford time for Congress to consider, upon memorial or otherwise, the case of actual bona fide settlers holding under titles from the State, and to make such provision, by confirmation or adjustment of the claims of such settlers, as may appear to be right and proper.

"JOHN S. WILSON,
"Commissioner of the General Land Office.

"GENERAL LAND OFFICE, May 18, 1860."

It will thus be seen that, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the winter of 1860, the Land Office determined that the reservation of these lands should continue, for the purpose of securing the very action by Congress which the State of Iowa was soliciting, and it is not disputed by counsel for the appellant in this case that this was a valid continuation of such reservation, and that during its continuance the pre-emptions under which the plaintiff claims could not have been made. But it is argued that the joint resolution of 1861 terminated this condition of suspense, and in and of itself ended the withdrawal of these lands which had been established and continued since the controversy originated between the State and the Federal Government as to the extent of the grant. This is the only foundation on which plaintiff's title to the land in controversy in this case rests.

We do not think the joint resolution had the effect to end the reservation of these lands from public entry. Whether we consider the purpose of the original order, its long continuance, and that it has been held, in the face of an act of Congress granting lands for public purposes to the railroads already mentioned, to constitute such a withdrawal as that act excepts from the operations of the grant, and that up to the present time no pre-emptions or sales have been finally recognized as valid by the Department or by the courts, it would be very extraordinary if the joint resolution should have that effect. It does not purport to act upon all the matters which were in controversy between the State and the General Government. It certainly did not act upon all the claims and matters in question then pending before Congress in regard to these lands. It was indeed a very limited disposition of a part of the matter which Congress supposed might then be acted upon with safety without further investigation.

It was simply the recognition of the title which had passed to the grantees of the State of Iowa in regard to the lands which had been certified by the proper authorities of the General Government to the State under the act of 1846, and which, by the decision in Dubuque and Pacific Railway vs. Litchfield, had been held to be unwarranted by the statute. Congress, urgently pressed by parties who were innocent purchasers under the State, passed the resolution to this extent in the last days of the session, securing to such purchasers, so far as the United States could do so, their title to the lands that they had bought under the sanction of this action of the Department.

The broader and larger question of the title to the lands within 5 miles of the Des Moines River above Raccoon Fork which had not been certified to the State, and which were declared by the decision of Dubuque and Pacific Railroad vs. Litchfield not to be included within the grant of 1846, Congress retained for further consideration, and at its next session, after this joint resolution was passed, it completely disposed of the whole subject, so far as it was within its power to do so, by validating the grant of 1846 to the full extent of the construction claimed by the State of Iowa. If the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of May 18, 1860, was in force up to the passage of the joint resolution, it is not possible to perceive why it terminated then. It was declared by the Commissioner that the order or notice was made to protect these lands from location by any species of scrip or warrant, notwithstanding the decision of the Supreme Court, to afford time for Congress to further consider the case.

This is not the way in which a reservation from sale or pre-emption of public lands is removed. In almost every instance in which such a reservation is terminated, there has been a proclamation by the President that the lands are open for entry or sale, and in most instances they have first been offered for sale at public auction. It can not be seen from anything in the joint resolution that Congress either considered the controversy ended or intended to remove the reservation instituted by the Department. Its immediate procedure, at the next session, to the full consideration of the whole subject, shows that it had ceased to deal with it; that the reason for this withdrawal or reservation continued as strongly as before, and it can not be doubted that the subject was before Congress as well as before its committees; and that the act of July 12, 1862, was, for the first time, a conclusion and end of the matter so far as Congress was concerned.

The title of the plaintiff therefore rests upon settlements upon odd sections of land within 5 miles of the Des Moines River, which were reserved from sale or pre-emption at the time the settlements were made. Two of the settlements, which are the foundation of plaintiff's title, were made in May, 1862, only a few days before the passage of the act of July in the same year, and one of the settlements under which the plaintiff claims was made after the passage of that act. The title was transferred by that act to the State of Iowa for the original purpose of the grant of 1846.

The object of this bill is to have a declaration of the court that the title of the plaintiff under these settlements and pre-emptions is superior to the title conferred by Congress on the State of Iowa and her grantees under the act of July 12, 1862. If the lands were, at the time of these settlements and pre-emption declarations, effectually withdrawn from settlement, sale, or pre-emption by the orders of the Department which we have considered, there is an end of the plaintiff's title, for by that withdrawal or reservation the lands were reserved for another purpose, to which they were ultimately appropriated by the act of 1862, and no title could be initiated or established because the Land Department had no right to grant it. This proposition, which we have fully discussed, will be found supported by the following decisions, which are decisive of the whole controversy: Dubuque and Pacific Railroad vs. Litchfield, 23 How., 66; Wolcott vs. Des Moines Co., 5 Wall., 681; Homestead Co. vs. Valley Railroad, 17 Wall., 153; Williams vs. Baker, and Cedar Rapids Railroad vs. Des Moines Navigation Company, 17 Wall., 144; Wolsey vs. Chapman, 101 U. S., 755; Dubuque and Sioux City Railroad vs. Des Moines Valley Railroad, 109 U. S., 329, 334.

The judgment of the supreme court of the State of Iowa, founded on the same view of the subject as above set forth, is therefore affirmed.

Mr. PAYSON. I now move the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to offer a further amendment, and the gentleman will probably save time by hearing it.

Mr. PAYSON. I will allow the amendment to be read for information, and withdraw the demand for the previous question for that purpose.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "and remained," in the seventeenth and eighteenth lines of the first section, and insert after the word "across," in the nineteenth line, the following: "And remained continuously thereon."

Mr. PAYSON. Let us have a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. McRAE. I wish to be heard for a moment upon it.

Mr. HOLMES. I trust it will be voted down.

Mr. McRAE. I desire to say that the effect of the amendment would be simply this: that instead of only requiring the homestead settler or pre-emptor to have entered the land prior to 1880, it will require him to have entered upon it prior to that time and have remained upon it continuously until the time for the filing of his claim. That is the effect of it. It has been said that that was the purpose of the original proposition. I only want to give the language such shape as to protect the people upon the lands and exclude people who present claims but who are not occupants and have not been occupants of the land. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 29, noes 73.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PAYSON. I move the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title to settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. PAYSON. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I sent an amendment to the desk which I understood was to be voted upon.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair three times distinctly stated the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], and nothing was said about the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama. The question now is upon the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], which is the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before that vote is taken I wish to make this suggestion. I understood the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] sent up a proposed substitute, and the chairman made the remark that it would be pending, but that the vote would not be taken then.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair stated when the gentleman sent up his amendment that it was not in order, and when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] moved the engrossment and third reading of the bill the Chair stated three times what the motion was, so as to give sufficient notice to the gentleman from Alabama and other members.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it seems it would be but proper and fair to have a vote upon this. What does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] say to this?

Mr. PAYSON. I am the best-natured man in the world, and would be glad, if possible, to grant the request of the gentleman from Alabama, but I shall have to insist upon my motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I now move to recommit the bill, with instructions to the Committee on the Public Lands to report it back with the substitute as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I understand the previous question is ordered, and that this can not be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. It can when the previous question is pending, or before.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, which is to recommit the bill with instructions.

Mr. WHEELER. Should it not be read?

Mr. McMILLIN. Certainly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States will indemnify and pay to the original settlers or their heirs and legal representatives who, prior to January 1, 1880, in good faith, for the purpose of purchasing, pre-empting, or securing homesteads, entered upon any lands lying along the river Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, above and north of the Raccoon Fork, which were listed and certified to the State of Iowa under an act approved August 8, 1846, entitled "An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa in aid of the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said Territory," and which said lands were afterward, namely, on the 18th day of May, 1858, sold and conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company by an indenture of that date signed by Ralph P. Low, governor, and attested by Elijah Sells, secretary of state, by John Davis, his deputy; and said indemnity shall be determined, ascertained, and paid as follows:

First. To every settler who in good faith entered upon any of said lands as aforesaid, and who after judgment of eviction against him in favor of the title emanating from the State of Iowa under said indenture of May 18, 1858, was compelled to or did buy in the outstanding title to protect himself, there shall be paid the amount of the consideration actually paid by him therefor, not to exceed the sum of $5 per acre of said land.

Second. To every settler who in good faith entered upon any of said lands as aforesaid, and who after judgment of eviction against him in favor of the title emanating from the State of Iowa under said indenture of May 18, 1858, being unable or unwilling to buy in said outstanding title, accepted the sum adjudged him by the court, under the occupying claimants law of the State of Iowa, for the value of his improvements, and surrendered the lands, there shall be paid the difference between the sum so paid and accepted by him for his improvements and the value of such lands at $5 per acre.

Third. To every settler who in good faith entered upon any of said lands as aforesaid, and who has had judgment of eviction against him, but has not been put out of possession nor accepted in payment for his improvements the value thereof as established by the courts under the said occupying claimants law, there shall be paid the amount of the consideration he shall have actually paid to buy in the said outstanding title emanating from the State under said indenture of May 18, 1858, not to exceed the sum of $5 per acre, when he shall have in good faith purchased the same by a valid executed instrument in writing. But when such settler is unable or unwilling to buy in the outstanding title and prefers to accept the amount established by the courts as the value of his improvements and abandon said land occupied by him, he shall be paid the difference between the value of his improvements so established by the courts under the occupying claimants law of the State of Iowa and the value of the land at the rate of $5 per acre, upon his executing a valid release of said lands to the plaintiff in the judgment of eviction: Provided further, That the limitation of $5 per acre, where it is mentioned in paragraphs first, second, and third of the first section of this act, shall not apply to those settlers who occupied said land prior to the publication of the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Wolcott vs. Des Moines Company, published in 5 Wallace Reports, page 681 et sequentes; but all persons who settled upon said lands prior to the publication of said decision shall be entitled to full compensation for all losses they sustained by their acceptance of the invitation of Secretary Browning to settle upon said lands.

SEC. 2. The circuit and district courts of the United States within the State of Iowa shall have jurisdiction of all such claims for indemnity by said settlers. Said claims may be presented, duly verified, and prosecuted in said courts as demands at law against the United States. No bond for costs shall be required, and no docket fee, continuance, judgment, or other fee shall be charged or entered against any person presenting a claim under this act unless the court is satisfied the claim was presented in bad faith and without probable cause. Said petition shall take precedence of all other civil causes and shall be heard and disposed of by the court without delay. The filing of the petition in the office of the clerk of the court shall be sufficient notice to the United States, and the district attorney for the district shall take notice thereof and at once appear. The petition shall contain a description of the tract of land involved and a statement of all the facts on which the claim to indemnity is based. If the court adjudges the petitioner to be entitled to indemnity it shall set forth, in its judgment, the facts found by it on which such judgment is founded. A duly authenticated transcript of the record in said case shall be sent to the Secretary of the Interior, who, upon receipt thereof, shall forthwith ascertain if the land described therein was part of the land listed and certified to the State of Iowa under said act of August 8, 1846, and if so, a certificate of said fact by the Secretary shall be attached to said transcript; and thereupon the Secretary shall forward said transcript to the Secretary of the Treasury to be filed there, and shall draw a warrant upon the Secretary of the Treasury for the amount of the indemnity and payable to the person shown in said transcript, and deliver the same to the person entitled, which said warrant shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any funds not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon the judgment in said court shall be satisfied.

All demands for indemnity under the provisions of this act must be filed in court within three years from and after the date of the approval of the act, and if not so presented and filed they will be and are hereby barred. In case of minority or disability, said petition may be presented and prosecuted by guardians, next friends, and so forth, in accordance with the practice in Iowa, but such minority or disability will not avoid the limitation stated herein.

During the reading,

Mr. HOLMAN said: I ask to dispense with the reading of the proposed substitute.

Mr. McMILLIN. I think if it is to be voted upon it ought to be read.

Mr. WHEELER. I want it read.

Mr. PAYSON. The request is that by unanimous consent the reading be dispensed with, and it can be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the gentleman consent to have the bill recommitted?

Mr. McMILLIN. I think that so important a matter should be read before it is acted upon.

The reading of the proposed substitute was concluded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, which is to recommit the bill with instructions to report the bill back with this amendment.

The question was put; and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. WHEELER. Division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 113.

Mr. WHEELER. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is a subject which can come up to-morrow morning for discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to say but one word. I feel it is my duty, as a matter of courtesy to Mr. PARKER, that this bill should go over until to-morrow, and that he should be heard. That is my purpose in making this request.

Mr. PAYSON. What earthly good would that do?

Mr. WHEELER. I think it is a courtesy due to Mr. PARKER.

Mr. PAYSON. I telegraphed the gentleman from New York yesterday, and he was fully advised at our expense. [After a pause.] I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. McMILLIN (to Mr. PAYSON). Withdraw the call for the yeas and nays and let the vote be taken by tellers.

Mr. PAYSON. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON].

The tellers took their places.

Mr. PAYSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the question is on ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No, sir. It is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] to recommit the bill with instructions to the Committee on Public Lands to report it back with the amendment offered by him.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 5, noes 160.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF BILLS.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. 139) to refund the direct tax, with the report thereon, was ordered to be reprinted.

Also, the bill (H. R. 10614) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma, with the report thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Attorney-General, transmitting his annual report; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KILGORE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2040) to establish a land office at Folsom, in the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (S. 3475) granting the use of certain lands in Pierce County, Washington Territory, to the city of Tacoma, for the purpose of a public park.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE NAVIGATION OF THE CUMBERLAND.

Mr. WASHINGTON, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was considered and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to transmit to the House of Representatives the report of a board of engineers appointed to examine and report upon a plan for improving the navigation of the mouth of the Cumberland River where it empties into the Ohio, and any other information upon that subject which may be on file in the War Department, with his recommendations thereon.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. COBB. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks which I made to-day on the bill relating to claims under the eight-hour law.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask unanimous consent that leave be made general.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The motion to adjourn was then agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. C. S. BAKER: A bill (H. R. 11646) granting a pension to Mary Wildman Herrick—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MOFFITT: A bill (H. R. 11647) for the relief of Ruth C. Wood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORRILL: A bill (H. R. 11648) authorizing the payment of $132.26 to Everard Bierer—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11649) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between the city of Leavenworth, in the State of Kansas, and Platte County, in the State of Missouri—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. PAYSON: A bill (H. R. 11650) for the relief of Jackson E. Young—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of the Citizens' Newspaper Company of Lowell, Mass., for the passage of an international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HARE: Petition of 70 citizens of Wilbarger County, Texas, and the Indian Territory, praying for the establishment of a Federal court, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Petition of W. T. Havens, of Mount Sterling, Ky., in relation to international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 6, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

DANIEL W. VOORHEES, a Senator from the State of Indiana, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement from the Director of the Mint, made in conformity to a resolution of the Senate of May 1, 1888, in regard to purchases by the Government of silver bullion, and stating that the quotations of India council bills in London so far enter into the determination of the market price of silver bullion in the United States as those quotations enter into the market price of silver bullion in London, etc.

Mr. STEWART. That document is very lengthy, and I ask that it may lie on the table. I should like to examine it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator will consent to have it printed. I should like to see the details as to amount of bullion that has been offered, and the prices.

Mr. STEWART. Very well; I have no objections to its being printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with the accompanying papers, will be printed and laid on the table, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with the requirements of section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, fair and accurate copies of the accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller, for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1888.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication is accompanied by exhibits too voluminous to be placed on the desk, which can be seen on the floor at the right of the Chair. What disposition shall be made of it?

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Printing. I think it has not been customary to publish that document.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The letter of the Treasurer will be printed, but not the accompanying document.

Mr. MANDERSON. Not the accompanying document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law and the opinion of that court filed April 2, 1888, in the matter of the schooner Jane, being a French spoliation claim; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed. Shall it be referred to the Committee on Claims or to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. HALE. I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred, if there be no objection.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress of February 3, 1887, a copy of the official ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Kansas at the election held therein on the 6th of November, 1888, as certified by the governor of the State.

This being an entirely new proceeding, the Chair will ask the opinion of the Senate as to the disposition to be made of the letter of transmittal and the accompanying certificate, whether they shall be entered on the Journal or placed in the archives of the Senate.

In addition to the one presented, the Secretary of State has forwarded similar certificates from the State of Maryland, the State of North Carolina, and the State of Georgia.

Mr. HOAR. May I inquire whether those documents purport to be merely certificates of the appointment of the electors?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It might be well to have the letter of transmittal and one of the certificates read. The Chair has not examined the papers sufficiently to state what the contents are.

Mr. DAWES. Does the new law require a copy to be transmitted to the President of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The provision of the law is that—

At the first meeting of Congress thereafter, he—

The Secretary of State—

shall transmit to the two Houses of Congress copies in full of each and every such certificate so received theretofore at the State Department.

If there be no objection the letters of transmittal, with the accompanying certificates, will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the letters of transmittal had better be printed, so that we may have them as a document to refer to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In each case?

Mr. EDMUNDS. In each case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As a document, or printed in the RECORD?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The letter of transmittal in each case ought to be printed, so as to go into the proper files.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the RECORD?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the RECORD, but as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Would it not be well enough to have one of them read, so as to go into the RECORD?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the least objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let one of them be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter of transmittal first laid before the Senate will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 5, 1888.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, a certified copy of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Kansas at the election held therein on the 6th of November, 1888, as certified to me by the governor of the said State.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS,
President pro tempore of the Senate of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The certificate will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

In accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1887, I certify that the following is a true copy of the certificate of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the State of Kansas at the election held therein on the 6th of November, 1888, as received by me from the governor of the said State:

THE STATE OF KANSAS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.
Topeka, November 30, 1888.

I, John A. Martin, governor of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that, in pursuance of the laws of the State of Kansas, electors of President and Vice-President were chosen by the voters of the State at the general election held on Tuesday, the 6th day of November, A. D. 1888, and that for the purpose of canvassing the result of said election, the State board of canvassers, consisting of the governor, secretary of state, auditor of state, treasurer of state, and attorney-general, met at the office of the secretary of state on Monday, November 26, A. D. 1888, as provided by law, and proceeded to examine and make a statement of the whole number of votes given at such election for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, which statement they certified to be correct, and subscribed their names thereto; and that said board of canvassers did thereupon determine what persons, by the greatest number of votes, were elected to the office of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and did indorse and subscribe on such statement a certificate of such determination, and did file the said statement, so certified and indorsed, in the office of the secretary of state.

I do further certify that the final ascertainment made under and in pursuance of the laws of the State of Kansas, as appears from the original statement, certificate, and indorsements on file in the office of the secretary of state, is that the persons hereinafter named received the votes set opposite their respective names for the office of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, to wit:

Names of persons voted for.	Number of votes received.	Names of persons voted for.	Number of votes received.
John L. Waller	182,845	Cyrus Corning	37,788
Eugene F. Ware	182,887	T. D. Fraser	34,659
Alonzo W. Robinson	182,890	D. O. Markley	34,679
Frank R. Ogg	182,892	J. L. Shinn	37,708
Thomas P. Anderson	182,904	P. B. Maxon	37,718
John Madden	182,886	L. G. Frybarger	37,306
Delbert A. Valentine	182,857	Albert Fuller	37,695
James B. McGonigal	182,832	Charles Rumsey	36,917
Willis G. Emerson	182,636	J. H. Byers	6,779
J. L. Grider	102,739	W. H. Ransom	6,777
John Sheridan	102,745	J. N. Scouller	6,767
B. A. Seaver	102,730	W. H. Lemon	6,770
C. E. Benton	102,728	Miles Brown	6,769
E. A. Scammon	102,727	J. H. Thompson	6,767
John E. Watrous	102,728	Charles Fairfield	6,764
W. C. Buchanan	102,728	C. H. St. John	6,766
W. D. Covington	102,708	W. M. Friedly	6,758
B. F. Milton	102,710	R. J. St. Clair	2,896
John Davis	37,787	Robert B. Frye	2,858

I further certify that it was ascertained by the State board of canvassers, in pursuance of law, that John L. Waller, Eugene F. Ware, Alonzo W. Robinson, Frank R. Ogg, Thomas P. Anderson, John Madden, Delbert A. Valentine, James B. McGonigal, and Willis G. Emerson, having received the greatest number of votes cast at the general election held on the 6th day of November, A. D. 1888, for electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, are the duly chosen and appointed electors of President and Vice-President of the United States for the State of Kansas.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the great seal of the State.

Done at the city of Topeka, this 30th day of November, A. D. 1888.

[GREAT SEAL OF KANSAS.] JOHN A. MARTIN.

By the governor:

E. B. ALLEN,
Secretary of State.

In testimony whereof I, T. F. Bayard, Secretary of State of the United States, [SEAL.] have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the seal of the Department of State to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 4th day of December, A. D. 1888, and the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirteenth.

T. F. BAYARD.

Mr. SHERMAN. The sending to us of these papers is an entirely novel proceeding, arising, I suppose, under the recent act. I think the whole proceeding is extra-constitutional. As to whether it is an infringement of the Constitution I shall not venture to express an opinion; that is a matter to be considered hereafter. Certainly, however, this is a new proceeding, and I think the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to examine into it.

What is to be done with these papers? The Constitution provides that each State under its own laws shall provide for the election of electors for President of the United States. The Constitution also provides that those electors shall meet at the place appointed and shall vote, and their votes shall be sent to the President of the Senate.

If these are merely papers sent here for our information as a legislative body, they seem to be entirely useless, because the papers upon which we shall act and upon which the people of the United States act in the election of electors are transmitted to the President of the Senate, and are the evidence of the election; and no law of Congress can change that routine of business.

I do not know, therefore, what benefit these papers will be when sent to the committee, or what use there is in the proceeding, or whether we have any authority by law to require the States to send the papers. It is a question to be considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the matter is a very simple one. The Constitution, as the Senator from Ohio states, says that the electors shall be appointed under the authority of the Legislatures of the States, and in such a way as the Legislature of each State pleases to adopt. It then says that the action of the electors thus appointed shall be sealed up and transmitted to the President of the Senate, and there the Constitution stops on the subject of the State's action in doing and sending. As to how it shall be sent, and what means of identification and proof that it is the action of the State are to be resorted to, the Constitution is silent until you turn to another clause of it, and that other clause is that Congress shall have power to make all laws necessary to the execution of all the powers of the Government, and everything that is to be done under the Constitution.

Therefore, the founders of the Constitution at the first or second Congress after it assembled did provide by an act of Congress for what the governors of the States should do in order to show to the President of the Senate or to Congress, where the votes were to be counted, what had been the action of the State, and how the President of the Senate should know that the papers that came to him were the action of the State, and that is the certificate of the governor under the great seal.

So everybody supposed and supposed rightly, I humbly submit that it was within the power of Congress (not touching the right of the State to elect her electors in any manner her Legislature chose to declare) to pass any law that should appear to be necessary to find out what the State has done; and that is all the last act does, just like the first act that was ever passed upon the subject. It only enlarges the degree of security and certainty that the counting power, whatever it may be here, is to know what the State has done; and so, as one precaution against the loss of papers and such occurrences, the Congress required that the governor of the State should send to each House of Congress an official copy of the State proceedings in finding out who had been elected electors. That does not interfere with any State power at all. It is only the mode of our knowing, when the time comes to count, that we have the proof that the people whose names appear inside the sealed envelopes are the people who by the certificate of the governor and the secretary of state and the canvassing boards in the State received the greatest number of votes. That is all there is to it that I can see.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me for one suggestion in addition to that, was it not also intended to provide for the promptness of putting this matter upon the public record, so that there could be no tampering with it under any stress of political temptation or any danger of loss?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would certainly be a very good additional reason.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not care to discuss any constitutional question. There have been divisions on this subject without respect to party and without reference to sections, I may say, in regard to the constitutional mode of selecting electors of President of the United States.

I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate to the novelty of this proceeding. This is not in pursuance of the old law referred to by the Senator from Vermont, but it is a new proceeding looking to the exercise of the power by Congress, interfering with the votes of electors and with the proceedings in regard to the vote of electors.

As a matter of course, no harm is done by having this information upon our files, but what is the ultimate benefit of it when Congress has nothing to do with it, according to my view of the Constitution? It has nothing to do with the appointment of electors except simply as spectators to witness the opening and counting of certain papers. However, no harm is done by the proofs being sent here, except that it is an apparent assertion of the power of Congress to control in some way, or interfere with, or to pass upon the votes of the electors, which I deny.

Mr. HOAR. I think it is perhaps proper to state at this time the main purpose of the act providing for the proceedings in the case of the election of President and Vice-President, which was passed in the last Congress.

That act was originally drawn by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], though it happened to me to report it from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which that Senator was not a member. It was, however, very carefully scrutinized by the members of that committee. The measure was before the Senate two or three Congresses, and it was passed with substantial unanimity in the last Congress.

It was reported to the Senate from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. There was a difference of opinion in that committee in regard to one clause in the bill, the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] having an opinion differing from the majority of the committee. That matter of difference was very fully discussed, and the bill then referred again to the committee, and reported anew, and passed with general acquiescence.

The main new feature which that bill introduced by law was that it declared affirmatively what a majority, I suppose, of both Houses believed to be the constitutional result, that the final decision of a State upon the question who were lawfully appointed its electors should be henceforth controlling and binding upon the power here which was to count the vote, without entering at this time upon the question whether that was to be done by the President of the Senate or by the two Houses of Congress.

That bill provided that when a State had appointed a tribunal that should be the final power in the State for ascertaining the result of the choice of electors, the decision of that tribunal should be binding upon the power that has to make the count here. That provision in the law was the result of very thorough consideration. I am not aware that there was a single member of either House of Congress who doubted the constitutionality or the propriety of that provision.

In order to have, in advance of the constitutional proceeding of counting the vote, the evidence of the ascertainment of the result by the local tribunal of the State, the tribunal established by the State for that purpose, it was necessary to make a new provision, which did not exist in the old law, for transmitting the proceedings and the result of that local State action; and as Congress is not always in session the convenient method of doing it was to require the certificate of the proceedings of the State tribunal, whatever it is, to be sent to the Secretary of State, and by him to be sent to both Houses of Congress when they are in session.

That is all. It does not in the least interfere with the constitutional process. It does not interpose any claim of any new legislative power over that constitutional process, but simply provides in a convenient way for the prompt and the sure recording of a public fact, to wit, the action of the State tribunal.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the Senator takes his seat I should like to inquire of him whether the recent act in any way interferes with the requirement of the Constitution that the State authority shall transmit to the President of the Senate the original certificate?

Mr. HOAR. That is a provision for transmitting the proceeding of the electors, their vote, and it is not in the least affected by the new provision. This is a proceeding for transmitting the result, the final action of the State tribunal which determine the appointment.

Mr. BLAIR. So the original evidence of the action of the electors will come into the possession of the Senate and not be sent to the executive department of the Government?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HOAR. It will come to the President of the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly. So I supposed.

Mr. HOAR. It will come into the possession of the Senate, as I understand. I do not understand that it comes to the Senate as a legislative body. It comes to the President of the Senate as a constitutional officer. Then, I suppose, when the President of the Senate receives from the State of Kansas the certificate of the result and the action of its electors he will place them in a secure place of deposit, unopened, until the time for counting the vote arrives. Then he will open the votes in the presence of the two Houses of Congress and the constitutional process will go on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the letters of the Secretary of State, with the accompanying certificates, will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3475) granting the use of certain lands in Pierce County, Washington Territory, to the city of Tacoma for the purposes of a public park; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB. Concerning the bill from the House which a moment ago was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, I suggest, as the subject has been considered by that committee and reported upon by it in the shape of a bill which is now on the Calendar, designed to accomplish the same purpose which is in view in the House bill, that this bill go on the Calendar, thereby avoiding the necessity of any further action by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of commitment will be reconsidered if there be no objection, and the bill placed on the Calendar. It is so ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. I give notice that at an early day I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Dr. Jasper P. Newton and other citizens of Benson, Vt., praying for the passage of an act granting arrears of pension to E. R. Reed, of Poultney, Vt., late of Company A, Twenty-first Massachusetts Infantry; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of John Anketell, of Tilton, N. H., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States empowering Congress to enact a uniform law of marriage and divorce for the entire country; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of band musicians of David's Island band, United States Army, a memorial of the United States Engineer band at Willets Point, New York Harbor, and a memorial of the United States Fourth Artillery band at Fort Adams, Rhode Island, remonstrating against the passage of the bill prohibiting United States bands from playing outside of posts; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of S. S. Marble and other citizens of Maine, praying that James J. Johnson be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLUMB presented resolutions adopted by a mass meeting held at Douglas, Kans., and resolutions adopted by the Oklahoma convention, held at Wichita, Kans., favoring the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Samuel E. Sherwin, of Washington County, Maryland, praying for certain relief of the estate of Thomas Sherwin, deceased; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE MEAT PRODUCT.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report favorably, with an amendment, the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee created at the last session of the Senate to examine the questions touching the meat product of the United States, and especially as to the transportation of beef and beef cattle, and the sale of the same in the cattle markets, stock-yards, and cities, and whether there exists or has existed any combination of any kind, either on the part of the Trunk Line Association or the Central Traffic Association or other agencies of transportation, or on the part of those engaged in buying, selling, or shipping meat products, by reason of which the prices of beef and beef cattle have been so controlled or affected as to diminish the price paid the producer without lessening the cost of meat to the consumer, be continued, with power to sit during the sessions and recess of the Senate, at such times and places as it may determine, and shall have power to send for persons and papers, and also to employ a stenographer and a sergeant-at-arms; all necessary expenses of said committee to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and said committee shall report to the Senate by bill or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 3, after the word "sessions," it is proposed to strike out the words "and recess of the Senate," and in lieu thereof to insert:

And during any recess of the Senate prior to December, 1889.

So as to read:

Be continued with power to sit during the sessions and during any recess of the Senate prior to December, 1889, at such times and places as it may determine, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The existence of the committees of this body terminates by operation of rule on the 3d day of March. The question in my mind is whether the resolution really carries the committee itself beyond that time. I think it was so designed, and it may be that it does. I only call attention to the matter with a view that there may be no dispute hereafter in regard to it. Probably, however, that dispute would arise in a practical way, more particularly in regard to the auditing of accounts.

Mr. DAWES. It has been done.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests that such things have been done. I agree to that. The only question in my mind is whether the language employed does carry the committee beyond the 4th of March. As now constituted the terms of four members out of the five expire on the 3d day of March. It may be presuming something to suppose that they will be re-elected. Whether they are re-elected or not, they are not Senators after the 3d of March until they are sworn in, and it might require some more particular phraseology than that employed in the resolution in order to cover that contingency.

Mr. DAWES. In a case somewhat similar to this a member of the Senate elect was continued over upon a committee by special reference. The chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs in the last Congress was continued in charge of a special committee by name. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] drew the resolution, and if I remember aright it was stated somewhat in this way: "In charge of the present chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs." The term of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs expired on the 3d of March, and he was simply a Senator-elect after that time until December.

Mr. PADDOCK. The Committee on Contingent Expenses was somewhat embarrassed by the aspect of the situation presented by the Senator from Kansas. Nevertheless, it felt like deferring to the judgment of the Senator who introduced the resolution and of older Senators, and concluded that under the circumstances it would be well to report the resolution favorably.

Mr. VEST. In drawing the resolution I followed the precedent of the Senate, which has simply been to declare that the committee still exists. As to the vacancies that may occur by reason of subsequent election or by any casualty, death or otherwise, those vacancies would be filled, as they have always been filled, by the President of the Senate. That has been, I believe, the unvarying practice, and I consulted the best authority on the subject.

It seems to me when the resolution declares that the committee exists, that is sufficient. As to the personnel of the committee, that may change, as we all know, and if a change occurs the remedy can be easily found in the power of the Senate. I do not know any other words I could have used except to say that the committee shall be continued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Mr. PADDOCK. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], with a similar amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Relations with Canada be continued with all the authority conferred by resolution at the last session, and with power to sit during the recess of the Senate and report at the December session in 1889.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the resolution by striking out all after the word "session," in the sixth line, and inserting:

And with power to sit during any recess of the Senate prior to December, 1889, the necessary expenses of such committee to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. PADDOCK. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report without amendment the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Foreign Relations, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rules.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3669) for the establishment of a national patho-biological laboratory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 3670) to organize bureaus of information relating to employment, occupation, wants, means of livelihood, and homes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and I should be glad if the Senate would examine its provisions with some care when it shall have been printed.

I have become satisfied myself that the legislation of Congress in the establishment of a Bureau of Labor, and the legislation which bears upon the interest of the working people of the country more specifically, largely fails of effect from the fact that the information which is obtained comes very late, and that it fails largely to be of that specific and practical character which is necessary for the accomplishment of the full amount at least of real good that ought to be obtained.

This is an effort to supplement and to render efficient our existing expenditure and existing laws, and to provide, as I think, for something further that is really needed for carrying out the legislative purposes of the country in that regard.

I think it is generally conceded that a great part of the misery which exists in this world is owing to the fact that those who are able to relieve it remain in ignorance of it. It is certainly true that in our country there is a vast amount of evil and misery and want and suffering existing which would be relieved if it could be called to the attention of the wealthier people of the land; and it may be that it is necessary that there should be a greater degree of legislation and State action for the full carrying out and the proper working of the principles of our civilization.

This bill is designed as an advance step in that direction. It will be found, I suppose, to be subject somewhat to the criticisms of the conservative people of this country, but I invite that criticism and that discussion which in the end will result in the enactment of this bill, or something like it, into a law.

I cut the following slip from a newspaper recently, and the newspapers, as we know, are the source of most of the information that is of value which we have in this country:

DEATH RATHER THAN DEBT—AN HONEST DIE-CUTTER OUT OF MONEY HANGS HIMSELF.

[Special to the Washington Post.]

NEW YORK, November 28.

Robert Albrecht, an aged German die-cutter, has of late had difficulty in making a living at his trade, owing to the loss of skill which comes with age. Albrecht has always been proud of his honest record, that he always paid his way. The fact that he was likely to run in debt because of infirmity preyed on his mind, and to-day he was found dead, having hanged himself to a bed-post after writing on the wall of his squalid room: "Two dollars and fifty cents I owe now for rent."

Albrecht left a note giving his tools to a friend, who will sell them and pay the $2.50 rent.

A fact of that kind occurring in the United States of America, after all we have done in the way of self-glorification, a fact like that occurring, as it could only have occurred, for the reason that the circumstances were not known, is a most painful argument in favor of the enactment of some law and the adoption of some provision which shall bring to the collective knowledge of those who can relieve want and distress in this country the existence of such specific instances; and that is of course, as compared with many that may be developed, a matter of by no means the most serious importance.

Mrs. Stowe has written us these words:

Half the misery in the world comes of want of courage to speak and to hear the truth plainly in a spirit of love.

I hope that the bill may be examined, and I shall press it upon the attention of some future Congress if we are unable to obtain action at the present time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 3671) authorizing the President to appoint and retire William G. Galloway with the rank and grade of captain of infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3672) to amend the act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3673) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River from the foot of South Capitol street, in Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3674) to amend "An act to incorporate the Georgetown and Tennallytown Railway Company of the District of Columbia," which was received by the President August 10, A. D. 1888, and became a law without his approval; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3675) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary F. Snider; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 3676) to create the Lincoln land district, in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. STEWART introduced a bill (S. 3677) to open abandoned military reservations in the State of Nevada to homestead entry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 3678) for the relief of Sterling H. Tucker and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. REAGAN introduced a bill (S. 3679) for the free coinage of silver, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 3680) granting a pension to John Shannon; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 119) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for changing the term of office of President and Vice-President from four to six years; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the joint resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4792) to pension J. W. Porter; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WICHITA, KANS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to report to the Senate what amount of the money appropriated for the erection of a public building at Wichita, Kans., has been expended, together with the respective dates and objects of such expenditure.

SETTLEMENTS WITH OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate copies of the settlements made between the United States and the State of Oregon on account of the sum of $70,268.08 heretofore appropriated by Congress to reimburse said State on account of the Modoc Indian war hostilities therein; and Second. Copy of settlement on account of the sum of $5,271.10 appropriated by Congress to reimburse said State on account of the 15 per cent. rebate of Oregon's quota ($35,127.42) of the direct tax levied upon such State under the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

Third. Copy of settlement on account of so much of the 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the cash sales of public lands therein which, together with the deduction made by the United States from said $70,268.08, constituted the alleged offset of $35,127.42 with which said direct tax was paid, with copies of all drafts issued in all the foregoing.

LOUIS RIEL.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say in connection with a matter of investigation before the Committee on Foreign Relations touching the circumstances of the death of Louis Riel (a subject presented by me prior to the adjournment of the last session), that I have received a statement of facts in that case from a citizen of Nebraska, Mr. W. F. Bryant, a responsible gentleman, an attorney at law, which is important, I think, for the consideration of the committee.

A question was raised as to whether Mr. Riel was a citizen of the United States, whether he was a person who could be naturalized, whether the forms of naturalization took place or not. This memorial settles that fact and shows that he was of Caucasian blood on the mother's side, and on the father's side was descended from a grandfather or a great-grandfather who was an Indian. So there is no question whatever of the fact or alleged fact that he was an American citizen.

The other allegations were, as the Senate will remember, of a very serious character, and the resolution proposed that the President or Department of State be called upon to explain the facts with reference to the allegations at that time made as to the conduct of our Government when applied to to see to the vindication of this American citizen's rights.

It will be remembered that it is alleged that he was executed without due process of law, being an American citizen, and at the time of his trial an insane person, and that the President and the Secretary of State were strongly urged by responsible people, who gave them full information of the facts, to interfere to arrest the course of the proceedings which resulted in his unjust death.

The resolution went to the committee, though it was in form merely asking for information from the executive department as to what had been done in the matter. It was thought best that the committee should examine the question before the Department or the President should be called upon for information. I trust that the fact that the election is over, if no other fact, will secure the action of the committee and a full investigation of the facts.

This statement is brief, and I will either read it to the Senate or ask permission to have it printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks that a statement which he presents may be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. Is it in the nature of a memorial?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not able to state.

Mr. BLAIR. It is a memorial, a statement of facts in reference to this case.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not want to object and force the Senator to read it, but we are putting a great many things into the RECORD which might very much better be left out and let the RECORD be a transcript of the actual proceedings of the body.

Mr. BLAIR. I can make it a part of the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I know the Senator can, and I shall not force him to do it.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senate that this is no light, trashy, irrelevant matter; it is a brief, pointed, terse statement of facts bearing upon the merits of this case.

Mr. SHERMAN. The paper presented is no doubt an important statement, and it had better be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it ought to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR. That is all I ask.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it ought to be printed in the RECORD, but printed as an ordinary document, so that it may be sent out to those who make inquiries about it. Such a course is better for the RECORD, better for the Senate, and more in accordance with precedents.

Mr. BLAIR. I am not particular about that. I will save the Senator further suggestion by agreeing to his proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be received, printed as a document, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the tariff bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the amendment, beginning with line 255 of section [12] 13, on page 96, as follows:

SCHEDULE B.—EARTHENWARE AND GLASSWARE.

99. Common brown earthenware, stoneware, and crucibles, not ornamented or decorated, 20 per cent. ad valorem.

100. China, porcelain, parian, and bisque, earthen, stone, and crockery ware, including plaques, ornaments, charms, vases, and statuettes, painted, tinted, enameled, printed, or gilded, or otherwise decorated or ornamented in any manner, 55 per cent. ad valorem; if plain white, and not ornamented or decorated in any manner, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

101. All other earthen, stone, and crockery ware, white, glazed, or edged, and other manufactures composed of earthy or mineral substances, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 50 per cent. ad valorem.

102. Tiles and brick, other than fire-brick, not glazed, ornamented, painted, enameled, or decorated, 20 per cent. ad valorem; ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, or decorated and encaustic, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In respect to paragraph 102 I desire to call the attention of the committee to the phraseology of the paragraph, which reads:

Tiles and brick, other than fire-brick, not glazed, ornamented, painted, enameled, or decorated, 20 per cent. ad valorem; ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, or decorated and encaustic, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The same words are used on line 273 that are used on line 272, and I want to call attention to the words "and encaustic." It seems to me as though that language qualified all that precedes it after the semicolon in line 273. In order to make it plain it should read "ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, decorated," with a comma after "decorated," "and all encaustic tiles," because the committee will see that the language "painted, enameled, or decorated," referring to glazed tiles, is not necessary.

There should be a comma after the word "decorated," and the word "all" should be inserted after the word "and," so as to read in this way:

Ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, or decorated, and all encaustic tiles.

That would then separate the two distinctions.

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no objection to that amendment, although the repetition of the word "tiles" is not necessary.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think it will not do any harm to put in the word "tiles," because encaustic tiles are a separate and distinct manufacture. Therefore, if you use the full term in addition to the other, the ornamented or decorated and all encaustic tiles, that would certainly make it clear.

Mr. ALDRICH. The paragraph refers to both brick and tiles when decorated and ornamented, and it will also refer to both brick and tiles if encaustic. The word "tiles" ought not to be there.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let me state it again. I move to insert a comma after the word "decorated," and to insert the word "all" between the words "decorated and" and the word "encaustic."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be now stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 274, after the word "decorated," it is proposed to insert a comma, and after the word "and" and before the word "encaustic," to insert "all;" so as to read:

Tiles and brick, other than fire-brick, not glazed, ornamented, painted, enameled, or decorated, 20 per cent. ad valorem; ornamented, glazed, painted, enameled, or decorated, and all encaustic, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed and continued the reading, as follows:

103. Fire-brick, not glazed, enameled, ornamented, or decorated in any manner, $1.25 per ton; glazed, enameled, ornamented, or decorated, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

104. Gas retorts, $3 each.

105. Slate.—Slates, slate-pencils, slate chimney-pieces, mantels, slabs for tables, and all other manufactures of slate, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 30 per cent. ad valorem.

106. Roofing-slates, 25 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Before proceeding further I wish to make a single statement with respect to Schedule B, containing both earthenware and glassware products.

This is, to my mind, an increase of duties over the existing tariff. There is quite a difference between the rates proposed in the Senate bill and those that were proposed in the House bill. I believe that the legislation which has been recommended in this bill by the Finance Committee for the better collection of the customs duties, which will be found in the after part of the bill beginning on page 197, and entitled "Collection of duties on imports," and the advantage found in that method of collection of duties will increase the rates of duty or the protection upon both glass and pottery ware to the extent of at least 10 per cent.

There has been great undervaluation, all admit, in both glass and pottery ware. If we are successful in accomplishing the result we have aimed at in preventing undervaluation, as we think will be accomplished by this bill in the provisions contained in the report of the committee—I speak now of the provisions for the better collection of the duties on imports—the effect will be to increase the duties on glass and pottery ware, at least the protection to the manufacturers, more than 10 per cent. It will be remembered that we prevent undervaluations; we do away with the damage allowance, which amounts to a very large sum on perishable goods; we also impose a duty upon the crates or packages. We also propose another method of determining values. They are to be determined at the place of original shipment rather than at the port of final shipment, as in the existing law. For instance, the duty will be levied, if the goods are manufactured in the central part of Germany, at the price prevailing in the place where they are originally shipped, and not at the port of final shipment as now.

More than that, there is a certain amount of profit upon which a duty is to be levied, and there is an increase of duty upon the whole pottery and glass schedule. If the supplemental bill which is found attached to the Senate bill shall become a part and portion of the law, if it shall happen to pass both Houses of Congress and become the law of the land, there will be an increase of duty instead of a diminution—a very large increase. There is no diminution in the existing rates in the substitute as set forth in this schedule, but there is the additional advantage which I have stated.

Now, I think that if it is allowable to grant a large bounty to any industry there is good reason for giving it to both the pottery and the glass industries. The major part of the value of the product consists of labor. A reference to the census report of 1880 will show that the labor cost in pottery and glassware is more than double the entire labor cost in the woolen and cotton industries; and I can see a reason, if there is any case calling for an increase of duty, why it should be given to pottery and glassware instead of other industries. But when it is found that there is to be an increase by reason of the prevention of undervaluation and by the doing away with the damage allowance, which is also a part of the protection, and by imposing duties on the packages, and all these things, it seems to me as though the rates proposed by the committee were greatly in excess of what the rate should be.

I speak of this as an industry of my own State, and one of its principal industries. I do not believe the factories need this amount of protection. I think the Mills bill accorded them all the protection that they need in order to compete successfully with such industries anywhere. I do not know but that I would desire to change perhaps some of the classifications that follow in the House bill, but it would seem almost impossible for me, desiring to give a fair measure of duty to this industry—a great one in my own State—to get out of this measure such a provision governing that case as I think would be satisfactory to myself.

I simply rose to make this statement for the information of the Senate, and to call attention to the fact, as we pass through this bill, that the provisions for the administration of the customs department as found in the supplemental bill will tend to add greatly to the protection of all the industries covered by this entire measure.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have to leave the Senate Chamber for a few minutes, and I desire simply to ask the Senator who has this bill in charge to allow me to reserve the right to go back to this glass schedule if it shall be necessary. I do not think it will be, but I desire to bring to the attention of the Committee on Finance a suggestion in regard to a certain manufacture of glass used in the making of spectacles, to have it put on the free-list. I do not expect to do it without bringing it first to the attention of the Committee on Finance. So I should like to reserve the right to go back to this schedule if it shall become necessary.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to say another word before we proceed with the discussion of this measure and the reading of the bill further.

It will be remembered by the Senator having charge of the bill that it was reported to the Senate but a very few days before our adjournment in October, and that none of the members of the committee on this side of the Chamber really knew what the measure contained when it was reported. They were not present while it was being formulated by the majority of the committee. Owing to the fact that a Presidential election has intervened since the time when the bill was reported to the Senate and that the session has only just commenced, it has been impossible for me at least, with the multitude of things that I have had to do, to investigate and compare the details of the measure about which I knew nothing when it was reported to the Senate. Therefore I shall reserve my right at some future time during the consideration of this bill by the Senate to offer amendments to the pottery and glass schedule if I shall find that I desire to do so. I do not mean to make any opposition to it now, because I have not prepared my amendments; and more than that, I supposed this bill was being read solely to enable the committee having charge of it on the other side of the Chamber to perfect it by offering amendments which they themselves desired to offer.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, upon the point suggested by the Senator from New Jersey, I desire to submit to him and the Senate a comparative statement made by the Treasury Department based upon the importations of 1887. On the first articles in this schedule those from paragraphs numbered 99 to and including 106, I find the average ad valorem equivalent to the duties collected is 56.75 per cent. Under the House bill the average equivalent is 44.49 per cent.; under the Senate substitute it is 51.95 per cent. Then from numbers 107 to and including 111, glassware, I find that the average rate of duty collected in 1887 under the existing law was 94.26 per cent.; under the House bill it would be 82.93 per cent.; under the Senate substitute 94.26, exactly the same as under the existing law. From number 112 to and including 113, glassware, the average rate of duty under existing law is 48.67 per cent.; under the House bill 48.67; under the Senate substitute 48.67; no difference there between the three. On number 114, being cast polished plate-glass unsilvered, etc., I find the rate of duty there under existing law is 101.32 per cent.; under the House bill 101.32; under the Senate substitute 101.32; all the same. On number 115 the rate of duty collected under existing law was 24.95 per cent.; under the House bill 24.58; under the Senate substitute 24.95; a small fraction of difference between the House bill and the Senate substitute in respect to that article. On numbers 116, 117, and 118 I find that the rate of duty collected is 59.14 per cent.; under the House bill 59.43; under the Senate substitute 59.14; and that completes this schedule.

I simply wanted to put on the record the exact difference, so far as this schedule is concerned, between the rate of duty under the existing law, the rate of duty imposed by the House bill and the rate of duty proposed by the Senate substitute.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then, according to the statement made by the Treasury Department, I am quite correct in my assertion that with the advantages that must necessarily follow by reason of the improved administration of the custom-houses, the new elements upon which this tax is to be based, there will be an increase of duty under the Senate bill above present rates in both the glass and pottery schedules. There will have been scarcely any diminution of duty if I am correct in the estimate I place upon the advantage found in the portion of the bill to which I have referred, while there is a very small diminution by the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed and continued the reading as follows:

GLASS.

107. Plain green, and colored, molded or pressed, and plain flint and lime glass bottles, holding not less than 1 pint, and demijohns, and carboys (covered or uncovered), and other plain molded or pressed green and colored and flint or lime glassware, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1 cent per pound. Plain green, and colored, molded or pressed, and plain flint and lime glass bottles, and vials holding less than 1 pint, 1½ cents per pound.

108. All articles enumerated in the preceding paragraph, if filled, and not otherwise provided for in this act, and the contents are subject to an ad valorem rate of duty, or to a rate of duty based upon the value, the value of such bottles, vials, or other vessels shall be added to the value of the contents for the ascertainment of the dutiable value of the latter; but if filled, and not otherwise provided for in this act, and the contents are not subject to an ad valorem rate of duty, or to a rate of duty based on the value, or are free of duty, such bottles, vials, or other vessels shall pay, in addition to the duty, if any, on their contents, the rates of duty prescribed in the preceding paragraph: Provided, That no article manufactured from glass described in the preceding paragraph shall pay a less duty than 40 per cent. ad valorem.

109. Glass and glassware of all kinds (not including plate-glass, silvered, or looking-glass plates, or cylinder crown, or common window-glass, hereinafter specially provided for), when cut, engraved, painted, colored, printed, stained, gilded, or otherwise ornamented or decorated, and hand, pocket, or table mirrors, not exceeding in size 144 square inches, with frames or cases of whatever material composed, or without frames or cases, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

110. All cut, engraved, painted, or otherwise ornamented or decorated glass bottles, decanters, or other vessels of glass shall, if filled, pay duty, in addition to any duty chargeable on the contents, as if not filled, unless otherwise specially provided for in this act.

111. Unpolished cylinder, crown, and common window-glass not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 1½ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1¾ cents per pound; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 2½ cents per pound; all above that, 2¾ cents per pound.

Mr. ALDRICH. Before we pass this schedule, I suggest that in paragraph 109, line 309, the word "unpolished" should be inserted before "cylinder."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island will be stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 98, paragraph 109, line 309, before the word "cylinder," insert the word "unpolished;" so as to read:

Glass and glassware of all kinds (not including plate-glass, silvered, or looking-glass plates, or unpolished cylinder crown or common window-glass, hereinafter specially provided for).

Mr. ALDRICH. There should be a comma after "cylinder."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be considered part of the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading, as follows:

112. Cylinder and crown glass, polished, not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 6 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 20 cents per square foot; above that, 40 cents per square foot.

113. Fluted, rolled, or rough plate-glass, not including crown, cylinder, or common window-glass, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, three-fourths of 1 cent per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 1 cent per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 1½ cents per square foot; all above that, 2 cents per square foot; and all fluted, rolled, or rough plate-glass, weighing over 100 pounds per 100 square feet, shall pay an additional duty on the excess at the same rates herein imposed.

114. Cast polished plate-glass, unsilvered, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 3 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 5 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 8 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 25 cents per square foot; all above that, 50 cents per square foot.

115. Cast polished plate-glass, silvered, or looking-glass plates, not exceeding 10 by 15 inches square, 4 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 16 by 24 inches square, 6 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 30 inches square, 10 cents per square foot; above that, and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square, 35 cents per square foot; all above that, 60 cents per square foot.

116. But no looking-glass plates, or plate-glass, silvered, when framed, shall pay a less rate of duty than that imposed upon similar glass of like description not framed, but shall pay in addition thereto 30 per cent. ad valorem upon such frames.

117. Plate-glass, silvered or unsilvered, and cylinder, crown, or common window-glass, when beveled, etched, engraved, stained, colored, or otherwise ornamented or decorated, shall be subject to a duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem in addition to the rates otherwise chargeable thereon.

118. All manufactures of glass or of which glass shall be the component material of chief value, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 45 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Iowa having this bill in charge whether under paragraph 115 there is imposed a duty upon the German glass, silvered, imported into this country, which is used, I think, almost if not quite exclusively for articles of furniture?

Mr. ALLISON. We make distinctions in that paragraph between the different sizes of glass.

Mr. PLUMB. Is not the German article that which is used in this country in looking-glasses?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose that the great body of that character of glass is imported from Germany and Belgium.

Mr. PLUMB. Is a similar article manufactured in this country at all? I have been told by a furniture manufacturer that he was constrained to use the German article because the American was not silvered; that is, it was not covered on the back with quicksilver which was durable. It seems to me that if that constituted a class of goods which was not manufactured in this country it might be proper to consider whether the duty can not be reduced without in any way affecting the manufacture here of articles of glass.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not see why it can not be manufactured here.

Mr. PLUMB. I have been told, but I know it is a subject of dispute, that the silvering of glass in this country is not durable. You can take your thumb-nail and rub it off, and therefore in articles of furniture the German or foreign glass is exclusively used by our dealers, at all events by those who design to produce an article having any permanent value.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator that the duty on the first article mentioned in item 115 is not changed by the proposed substitute. Under the existing law the ad valorem rate of duty is 10.85 per cent., which does not seem to be a very heavy duty. It may be that because of that light duty the silvering done in this country is not as substantial as that done abroad. This silvering process is not a difficult process in any sense of the word.

Mr. PLUMB. My recollection is that the same manufacturer to whom I before referred told me that it added to the cost of a glass in an ordinary bureau between two and three dollars of duty, and constitutes a very important item in the cost of an ordinary bed-room set of furniture.

Mr. ALLISON. The highest rate of duty in paragraph 115 is found in lines 359 and 360. That is, "all glass above 24 by 30 inches and not exceeding 24 by 60 inches square." That is a very high character of glass. The rate there is 78.49 per cent., the highest in that paragraph. Twenty-four by 30 inches would be a very large-sized glass. I do not think any furniture-maker would ever get a glass larger than 24 by 30 inches. On that grade the rate of duty fixed here is 27.57 per cent. ad valorem, and the cost is 36 cents a square foot; so that I do not see precisely how that statement can be reconciled.

Mr. PLUMB. I may be mistaken as to the amount. I know it was stated as being very burdensome, and I was asking whether the article I was speaking of was enumerated in this paragraph 115. That is the part of the cost I wanted to get at.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, take a glass 16 by 24 inches square. The rate of duty is 6 cents a square foot under existing law, and not changed. The cost of that is 2 cents a square foot, and the ad valorem duty 18.44 per cent. It seems to me that that can not be a very heavy burden on anybody. The House bill puts what are called "German looking-glass plates" on the free-list. Of course it can not be separated from the same kind of glass made elsewhere. It is on the free-list in the House bill, but it is not designated in our bill. Of course you can not tell what are German looking-glass plates from any other such plates. Looking-glass is made in Belgium precisely in the same way that it is made in Germany and polished with silver. I do not suppose that clause was ever inserted for any practical purpose, but I do not know what the purpose was.

The Chief Clerk resumed and continued the reading, as follows:

SCHEDULE C.—METALS.

Iron and steel:

119. Iron ore, including manganiferous iron ore, also the dross or residuum from burnt pyrites, 75 cents per ton. Sulphur ore, as pyrites, or sulphuret of iron in its natural state, containing not more than 3½ per cent. of copper, 75 cents per ton: Provided, That ore containing more than 2 per cent. of copper shall pay, in addition thereto, 1½ cents per pound for copper contained therein: And provided further, That in levying and collecting the duty on iron ore no deduction shall be made from the weight of the ore on account of moisture which may be chemically or physically combined therewith.

120. Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap iron, and scrap steel, three-tenths of 1 cent per pound; but nothing shall be deemed scrap iron or scrap steel except waste or refuse iron or steel that has been in actual use and is fit only to be remanufactured.

121. Bar-iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than 1 inch wide nor less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound; round iron not less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, and square iron not less than three-fourths of 1 inch square, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound; flats less than 1 inch wide, or less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick; round iron less than three-fourths of 1 inch and not less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter; and square iron less than three-fourths of 1 inch square, 1 cent per pound.

122. Round iron, in coils or rods, less than seven-sixteenths of 1 inch in diameter, and bars or shapes of rolled iron, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1.1 cents per pound: Provided, That all iron in slabs, blooms, loops, or other forms less finished than iron in bars, and more advanced than pig-iron, except castings, shall be rated as iron in bars, and pay duty accordingly; and none of the above iron shall pay a less rate of duty that 35 per cent. ad valorem: Provided further, That all iron bars, blooms, billets, or sizes or shapes of any kind, in the manufacture of which charcoal is used as fuel, shall be subject to a duty of not less than $22 per ton.

123. Cast-iron pipe of every description, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

124. Cast-iron vessels, plates, stove-plates, andirons, sadirons, tailors' irons, hatters' irons, and castings of iron, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1.2 cents per pound.

125. Castings of malleable iron not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1½ cents per pound.

126. Anvils, or parts thereof, of iron or steel, 2 cents per pound.

127. Iron or steel anchors, or parts thereof of iron or steel, mill-irons and mill-cranks of wrought-iron, and wrought-iron for ships, and forgings of iron or steel, or of combined iron and steel, for vessels, steam-engines and locomotives, or parts thereof, weighing each 25 pounds or more, 1.8 cents per pound.

128. Axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks, or forgings for axles, whether of iron or steel, without reference to the stage or state of manufacture, 2 cents per pound.

129. Blacksmiths' hammers and sledges, track tools, wedges, and crowbars, whether of iron or steel, 2½ cents per pound.

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, 1.1 cents per pound.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to interrogate the Senator from Iowa somewhat on paragraph 130. Does that cover what are known in this trade as steel beams; that is, the beams which are used in the erection of large buildings?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I call his attention to the fact that there has been a very close corporation formed consisting of all the manufacturers, as I understand, some six or eight in number, in the United States, whereby the price of these articles has been made not only uniform, but has been largely enhanced. In the construction of the capitol building at Topeka, Kans., the contractor found that he was able to save, I think, some twenty or twenty-five thousand dollars by purchasing articles of this kind abroad and shipping them to this country; and the contractors for the state-house in Texas saved between one hundred and fifty and two hundred thousand dollars by a similar purchase. One of the contractors for the Texas state-house told me that when the question of purchasing the beams for that building was under consideration his superintendent applied to all the manufacturers of steel beams in the United States for prices and received from each one of them a reply naming the same price; and it was found impossible to get up any competition or in any way to break the price, so they were constrained to go abroad to save this very large sum of money, which they did. I have no doubt that the price of these beams is much larger than it ought to be, and that if there is no other way of breaking up this combination it ought to be reached by a sensible reduction of the duty.

These manufacturers were not willing to enlarge their production and thereby meet the entire American demand, but preferred to manufacture a limited supply at enormously increased profits, and that, I think, is a feature of the iron manufacture in this country to a very considerable extent. That is to say, those who manufacture these articles, beams, do not care to supply the entire American market, but prefer to supply only that portion of it which they can supply at an enormous profit, and they have allowed without cause the foreign manufacturers to bring into this country a very large supply of manufactures of iron and steel, underselling the American manufacturers unnecessarily.

I was told by a thoroughly responsible gentleman some six or seven years ago, who was the agent of a manufacturer in Sheffield, that he imported into Chicago, and shipped from Chicago to Pittsburgh, and sold at Pittsburgh in competition with the Pittsburgh manufacturers, picks, mattocks, crowbars, and other implements that go to make up what is called a railroad kit, on which the lowest duty then, I think, was 45 per cent. ad valorem, and the Pittsburgh manufacturers did not care enough about the American market at large to enter into competition for it, but allowed all these articles to be manufactured outside and brought into this country, because they could manufacture something else and make an enormous profit by reason of the protection afforded by the tariff.

While, of course, it is desirable that all articles of this kind should be manufactured in this country, for which we have the most ample natural facilities, there ought to be a corresponding obligation on the part of those who are protected by the tariff that they shall supply this market, and that they shall not limit themselves in their efforts to supply this market to those things for which they can get the highest prices, allowing a very large supply of articles of the same general character to come into the country from outside and be sold here in this market. If this result can not be reached in any other way, I am in favor of doing it by reducing the duty, and thereby putting them into active competition as to everything which they do manufacture with the foreign manufacturer. I therefore move as one step, somewhat in the dark I suppose, to reduce the duty to 1 cent per pound in place of 1.10 cents per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas moves an amendment, which will be stated from the desk.

Mr. PLUMB. I will move to make that eight-tenths of a cent per pound in place of 1 cent per pound, on line 447, page 104.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BUTLER. Pending that, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not insist on that to-day. I think it very important that we should make some progress with this bill. We can adjourn over perhaps from to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. I am not so sure, I will suggest to the Senator from Iowa, that we shall not make more progress with the bill by adjourning over to-day than we shall by continuing in session.

Mr. BUTLER. We generally do; that has been my experience.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator to withdraw his motion for the present until we see what progress we make during the day.

Mr. BUTLER. It may be too late then to make the motion. Of course I do not feel like insisting upon it in the face of the opposition of the Senator who has charge of the bill, and yet I submit to him that between this and Monday we can all have an opportunity to examine the bill carefully, and perhaps in that way we shall get rid of a good deal of talk which would otherwise perhaps necessarily take place, particularly when we know nothing about it. I always observe that there is more talking when we are unfamiliar with a subject than when we are familiar with it.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator would devote himself between now and Monday for nine or ten hours each day to the study of this measure I might feel constrained to yield, but I am afraid the Senator may find other occupations.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator has loaded himself up so thoroughly that, of course, I can never expect to approach the weight which he is carrying; but still I might manage to get on a small amount between now and Monday.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not press his motion now.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, several Senators have approached me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course I know the motion is not debatable, but quite a number of Senators have approached me saying they very much desired a little time to look into and scrutinize this bill before proceeding further with it. We are getting on with it very rapidly, and I think it is not an unreasonable request of the Senator from South Carolina to adjourn over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next? [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

A division was called for, and the ayes were 19——

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Iowa will not ask for a further division, I am sure.

Several SENATORS. Give it up. Give it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does any Senator call for a further division?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

The noes were 11.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the ayes are 19 and the noes 11—no quorum voting.

Mr. HARRIS. That involves the calling of the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the roll being called on the motion to adjourn over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll is being called to ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Reagan,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones, of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Stewart,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stockbridge,
Blair,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Teller,
Call,	Gorman,	Morrill,	Vest,
Chandler,	Gray,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Harris,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Payne,
Davis,	Hiscock,	Plumb,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Pugh,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names, and there are one or two present who have not answered. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next. Senators will please rise and stand until counted.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 16.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], whom I do not see in the Chamber, and as this appears to be substantially a party division I withhold my vote.

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL], but on this question I vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that my friend from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] is present in the Chamber. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I see that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE] is present, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Bate,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Teller,
Call,	Gray,	Payne,	Turpie,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Plumb,	Vest,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Voorhees.

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Palmer,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Chandler,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Davis,	Hale,	Morrill,	Stockbridge.

ABSENT—28.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Blair,	Daniel,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Pasco,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	Quay,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.

So the motion was agreed to.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. Will the Senator from Kansas restate his amendment?

Mr. HARRIS. Before the Senator from Kansas offers his amendment I want to call his attention to a fact in respect to "beams, girders, joists, angles, channels," etc. During the last fiscal year there were imported into this country of the articles referred to in the clause proposed to be amended by the Senator $164,403 worth. The average rate of duty under existing law collected upon them was 102.75 per cent. The rate of duty proposed by the House bill averages 49.32 per cent., which is six-tenths of 1 cent per pound. The rate of duty proposed by the Senate substitute is equivalent to an ad valorem of 90.42. I suggest to the Senator that the rate of duty of five-tenths or six-tenths of a cent per pound is certainly quite as much as should be imposed upon that class of articles. I simply wanted to give him the facts as to the amount imported.

Mr. PLUMB. I have the table before me. I move to strike out "one and one-tenth cents per pound" and insert "eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, in lines 446 and 447, the words "one and one-tenth cents" and insert "eight-tenths of a cent;" so as to read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, eight-tenths of a cent per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. Has there been any agreement that this substitute shall be treated in offering amendments as an original bill? In other words, would an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas be in order? It would not unless there has been an agreement that the committee amendment shall be treated as the original bill, because an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas would be an amendment in the third degree.

Mr. PLUMB. I will withdraw my amendment in order to enable the Senator to offer his amendment first.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move to insert "six-tenths of 1 cent" instead of "eight-tenths," which I believe the Senator from Kansas moved, and that will amount to a duty of 49.32 per cent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] withdraws his amendment, and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] offers an amendment which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 446 and 447 it is proposed to strike out the words "one and one-tenth cents" and insert "six-tenths of 1 cent;" so as to read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. The whole question now is whether we shall impose a duty of 49.32 per cent. ad valorem or 90.42 per cent. ad valorem upon this class of articles. That is the whole question involved in the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee will not be agreed to. There is undoubtedly some force in the statement made by the Senator from Kansas that in past years, there being but few manufacturers of this class of steel, some arrangement as to prices was made; but the information of the committee on this subject is that new manufactories are establishing themselves in this country, so as to supply the market for these beams, etc.

It is also true that a portion of the articles enumerated in this paragraph are mere ordinary iron beams, such as are used in fire-proof structures; but a great many of them are articles of special length and special shape, and require considerable expense in the preparation of the plant for their manufacture.

This proposition of the Senator from Tennessee goes really to the root of this whole iron and steel schedule. The steel of the character described in this paragraph is made, of course, from pig-iron and from blooms or billets of steel that are prepared from pig-iron. We have a rate of duty first upon the iron ore, next upon the pig-iron, and next upon the billets from which these shapes are made. The lowest rate of duty on billets is half a cent a pound under this measure, or within one-tenth of a cent of the rate proposed by the Senator from Tennessee; and if the steel of these billets shall be of such a character as to cost exceeding a cent a pound the duty upon the billets is to be six-tenths of a cent per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question right in that connection?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes.

Mr. HARRIS. The billet or the bloom is the raw material of this beam or joist maker, is it not?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. It comes to him charged with the cost of production and with such increase of price as the duty imposed upon it may give. Now, does the Senator from Iowa maintain that the manufacturer of these billets and blooms into beams needs and must have a protection of over 90 per cent. in order to enable him to convert these billets and blooms into the beam or joist?

Mr. ALLISON. I only maintain this: The committee was satisfied that the rate of duty prescribed here would enable these beams to be manufactured in our own country upon sharp competition, and we reduced the duty, as the Senator will see, from the existing rate, the existing rate being 1¼ cents per pound.

Mr. HARRIS. One hundred and two and seventy-five one-hundredths per cent.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, 102.75 per cent. I have no doubt that if this duty is maintained upon these shapes of steel, in a very short time the competition will be sufficient to bring down the price in the cost of production, if it is not so now. Therefore, this was the judgment of a majority of the committee after full examination of the question.

I trust the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee will not prevail, nor do I think the amendment of the Senator from Kansas should prevail.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the rate proposed in the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is the rate of the House bill, six-tenths of a cent a pound; and if there is any one item of that bill which is more indefensible than any other, I think it is the rate it put upon structural forms of iron and steel. The rate upon bar-iron, from which iron beams must be made, both by the Senate and House bills, is from eight-tenths to a cent and one-tenth of a cent a pound. The Senator from Kansas shakes his head, but he will find that he is mistaken. If the duty on iron beams is to be reduced to six-tenths of a cent a pound, the duty upon bar-iron, from which they are produced, and the duty on pig-iron must be reduced very greatly, and the duty on iron ore must be reduced to make it all harmonious and symmetrical.

Take the item of steel beams. The suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee is to make the duty upon steel beams six-tenths of a cent per pound. The duty by this measure upon the steel billets, from which these beams must be made, is seven-tenths of a cent per pound. If the duty on beams is reduced, there must be a reduction of duty on all the other forms of steel. If that is done, it will necessarily involve a recommittal of this bill to the Committee on Finance or an abandonment of it. It certainly is an abandonment of the protective feature of the measure to reduce the rate on iron and steel beams to six-tenths of a cent a pound. There is no more justice in it than there would be in making it three-tenths of a cent a pound with four-tenths of a cent duty upon pig-iron.

The Senator from Kansas says there is a combination between the manufacturers of structural iron and steel in this country. This is the state of affairs, as I understand it to be: There has been developed within the past few years an enormous demand for structural iron and steel for building purposes, a demand greatly in excess of the producing capacity of the plants which are engaged in this business; but there is nothing difficult in the production of iron and steel beams, and all the large Bessemer-steel works of the country are now considering the question—one or two of them have plants, I think, in process of erection—of extending their business to do this.

So there is no reason under heaven, with a reasonable amount of protection, why every manufacturer of steel in the United States should not be engaged in the business of manufacturing structural steel; and that competition among American producers will in time reduce the price to a proper limit I have no doubt whatever.

Now, if the Senator from Kansas means to say that because there is a combination at the moment which advances the price of iron or steel above what he thinks is a proper one, and he proposes to obviate that by a reduction in duty, which will give the entire business to foreign producers—which would be certainly the effect of this amendment, and the foreign producers at this moment are in a combine amongst themselves, as has been shown by documentary evidence submitted in this and the other House of Congress—if he is desirous of bringing about that state of affairs, he must do it with his eyes open.

There is no more reason for reducing the duty upon structural forms of iron and steel to a rate below that fixed upon other forms of iron and steel by this measure than there is for reducing the duty upon any other item. There is no trust or combination among makers which can not eventually be prevented from enhancing prices by competition in this country; and I have no doubt that will be the result at an early day. I do not think at the present moment that the prices of iron and steel are excessive. I think the state of affairs to which the Senator from Kansas alluded existed a few years ago, but does not exist at the present time.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I desire to know if the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Rhode Island are prepared to maintain that a duty of over 90 per cent. is necessary to enable the people of this country to convert blooms and billets into these joists and structural forms? The provision in the House bill imposes a duty of 49.32 per cent. The provision in the Senate substitute imposes a duty of over 90 per cent. Now, can it be pretended that a duty of 90 per cent. is necessary, even if the principle be conceded that it is proper to give such protection as may be necessary to encourage the manufacturer here? Is 90 per cent. necessary, and can it be pretended that if you impose a duty of 90 per cent., which protects the home manufacturer to the extent of 90 per cent. as against foreign competition, that the small number of persons engaged in the production of these articles here will not continue to combine as they have combined heretofore, and demand the full measure of the price enhanced by the imposition of the 90 per cent. duty, or, in other words, the users of that material in this country will be compelled to pay 90 per cent. more than they would otherwise have to pay but for the imposition of this duty?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the amount of iron of the kinds included in this clause that was imported the last year only reached $13,513,000 in value. That was under a duty amounting to 102.75 per cent., which therefore must have been a restraint upon large importations of the articles. When we recall the great number of public and private buildings into which iron of this description goes as a part of the structure, "beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, T T columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams," etc., and that all these classes of iron go very extensively into buildings, public and private, and into bridges and other structures, we shall see the importance of this question.

The amount of iron of this kind which must go into use is enormous and must continually be enormous. Looking at that fact and at the unlimited resources of iron and coal in our country, can it be possible that the manufacturers of such iron can not make it successfully here when a subsidy is given to them equal to the amount offered by the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee of 49.32 per cent., nearly 50 per cent.? If they can not make such iron with the vast resources of iron and coal which we have with a protection of $50 on the hundred of other people's money, it seems to me they ought to go out of business. When, added to this, the country is met by a combination which puts any price it chooses upon those who are making buildings or bridges on their own account or who are compelled by their contracts to make public buildings or bridges, it will be seen that it is fully a large enough duty to allow them within a fraction of 50 per cent. on such iron. If we are to put it at 90 per cent., making the iron that goes into buildings and bridges and other structures cost nearly double what it could be purchased for in foreign countries, or what it could probably be made for in this, it will be seen that it creates an enor mous monopoly. If there is any one thing in which the American people are more interested at this particular time than in any other, it is in being rescued from the grasp and oppression of monopolies.

This measure, as framed by the Senate Finance Committee, aids monopolies. When we talk of protection, legitimate protection simply would mean what would enable people to manufacture here, not what would enable them to exact the last possible farthing that can be exacted by the exclusion of similar articles from trade in this country.

I understood the Senator from Rhode Island to refer to the fact that combinations existed with reference to such things in other countries. If they do, it seems to me that that would not be an argument against a reasonable rate of duty here, but an argument in its favor, because if combinations are formed there, that fact aids whatever duty may be imposed here in giving to our manufacturer of such kinds of iron a greater chance to supply our own people.

I submit, Mr. President, that 49.23 per cent. is a very high duty, and that there can be no difficulty with American manufacturers under such a duty manufacturing all that this country wants and having the advantage over foreign manufacturers. There can be no question that with the duty proposed to be imposed by the Senator from Tennessee our manufacturers would have the advantage of all other manufacturers of this description of iron, and it would relieve to that extent the people against enormous duties and would to that extent relieve them against the effects of the combinations through which it is intended improperly to extort from them money that ought not to be extorted from them.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, I rise only to say a word. The percentages to which both the Senator from Tennessee and the Senator from Texas have alluded are based upon false values of goods from the other side. The unit of value is given in the table to which the Senator from Tennessee refers—a cent a pound, or about $24 a ton for iron and steel beams. I take it for granted that neither of those Senators will undertake to say that that is a fair valuation, or anything like a fair valuation, for structural iron and steel. The Senator from Ohio who sits in front of me [Mr. PAYNE] must know as well as I do that the valuation is one that is very largely below the real valuation on the other side.

Mr. HARRIS. My statement, if the Senator will allow me, was based upon the statement of the Treasury Department upon the importations of the year ending June 30, 1888.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand that perfectly, but the information upon which that is based is furnished by the invoices which are made by the gentlemen upon the other side, and what I say in regard to this item, and almost every other, is that they are very largely undervalued, and that that does not in any sense represent the true value which the Senator from Tennessee or any other buyer would have to pay for these or similar goods in Belgium, in England, or in Germany, and that therefore all calculations of percentages based upon such values are entirely erroneous.

Mr. HARRIS. Do I understand the Senator to say that the Treasury Department has no accurate information as to the value of importations into this country?

Mr. ALDRICH. They may have accurate information, but it does not necessarily follow that the tables which they sent here are the true values. Take the article of lime. The importations of lime in 1887 are put upon the basis of 30 cents a barrel. Take wood-pulp; the average value, according to the table sent here by the Treasury Department, is $22 a ton. Nine-tenths of that was wood-pulp which sold at from $75 to $100 a ton and only paid 10 per cent. duty.

It ought to be as well known to the Senator from Tennessee as to myself, because it is a notorious fact, that nine-tenths of the goods imported into this country are very largely undervalued, and that while the tables sent here by the Treasury Department are not falsely represented by the Treasury Department itself, they represent a false value of the goods or a value which is not a correct one.

Mr. HARRIS. Can the Senator from Rhode Island furnish me any method by which we can approximate with anything like the same degree of certainty the value of importations into this country as the report of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the values upon which import duties were collected?

Mr. ALLISON. I can furnish the Senator from Tennessee, and he can be readily furnished by many other Senators upon this floor, with a very much better basis for fixing the rate of duties in the market values in the various markets of the world of these articles of structural iron and steel.

Mr. HARRIS. Where an ad valorem duty is imposed, is it not the duty of the Treasury Department to ascertain the value in order to fix the amount of the duty?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no ad valorem imposed here.

Mr. HARRIS. I say where an ad valorem is imposed. Where a specific duty is imposed, it does not matter what the value of the article may be.

Mr. ALDRICH. Where an ad valorem rate is imposed, it is the duty of the Treasury Department to obtain the correct value, of course; but that is based on the invoices and on the foreign valuation fixed by the importers themselves.

Mr. HARRIS. It being the duty of the Treasury Department to ascertain the value in order to fix the amount of duty when it has so ascertained it, I say that is the most reliable information that can be had upon the subject.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Tennessee mean to say that if I should produce him quotations from all the leading markets of Great Britain, Germany, and Belgium that structural iron and steel were worth $40 per ton, he would still insist that a valuation of $20 per ton was more nearly correct?

Mr. HARRIS. I mean to say that, it being the duty of the Treasury Department to ascertain the value of imports, it presumably resorts to all the evidences enabling that Department to decide justly and truly what the value is; and when it has decided, that decision is entitled to more credit than any statement which can come from any other source.

Mr. ALDRICH. But they do not send us the opinion of the Treasury Department as to what the value is. They simply send the transcript from the records of the Department of the invoices which are made by foreign importers and sent here as to value.

Mr. HARRIS. Are the invoices conclusive?

Mr. ALDRICH. They are conclusive in the absence of addition by the appraisers.

Mr. HARRIS. Conclusive in the absence of any other evidence?

Mr. ALDRICH. I do not say "any other evidence."

Mr. HARRIS. I understood the Senator to mean that. Is that what he means?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir; I do not mean that. I say they are conclusive in the absence of any addition by the appraising officers of the customs.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the appraising officer appraises in the light of all the information he has in respect to the value?

Mr. ALDRICH. He does, and it is a notorious fact that the appraised values of imported goods are 25 to 50 per cent. below their real value.

Mr. HARRIS. It being the duty of the appraising officer to appraise and ascertain the values, does he not presumably arm himself with all the best information attainable upon the subject? If so, and he fails to fix a proper value, I see no alternative but to argue that it is corrupt in him to have made a false report in the light of such information as he has; and that is not to be presumed.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have had some occasion—I have had no experience in this matter myself—to hear the result of the experience of a large number of persons who know as much about this subject as any persons in the country, I should suppose; I mean the business men of the city of Boston and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. I undertake to say, as a perfectly notorious fact, which every man acquainted with the subject knows, that it would be as safe to take the opinions of the horse-dealers of this country as to the value of the horses they have to sell as to take these foreign invoices which the Treasury is compelled in many instances to accept as to the value of goods that are imported.

Mr. ALDRICH. In this particular case there is no occasion for the Treasury Department to ascertain the correctness of the invoice values, because the duties are specific. I say that in answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee. Therefore there is no occasion for an examination, and there is a temptation, which has certainly been taken advantage of in this case, to place the value very greatly below what the real value is.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not suppose there is any doubt about the fact that in a large number of cases where goods are brought into this country from foreign countries the effort is very often made to undervalue them. I do not think there is any doubt about that; but the Treasury Department, as I understand, has adopted several methods within its reach to correct this abuse. The invoices of imported goods are first approved by the American consuls residing in the foreign countries from which they are sent; but that is not of itself conclusive.

It has come within my knowledge in a number of cases where invoices have been brought to consuls to be certified before the importers could bring their goods to this country, that those officials have transmitted to the collecting officers at New York and Boston and other offices the actual values of those goods, which, as I have just said, in very many cases are above the amount certified by the owner and importer of the goods. When those facts are ascertained by the Treasury Department and those notifications are sent to the appraising officers, it must be the fault of the appraising officers if there is an undervaluation, because they get the actual values at the point from which the goods were shipped. So I can not see, where the proper inspecting officers are sent, as they are sent from this country all over Europe for the purpose of ascertaining these very facts, why there should be so much complaint of undervaluation; and I do not agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that there is such an abuse in that direction as he claims. The importers, I have no doubt in the world, would be delighted to swindle the Government of the United States out of its revenues by undervaluation.

Such attempts have been made for years and years. I have no doubt further that there is even now a great abuse of that kind; but our officers ought to be able to ascertain the actual value of the imported articles by means of the consular reports and by the inspectors and special agents sent by the Treasury Department abroad for the purpose of ascertaining the actual valuation.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, on the subject of valuation referred to by the Senator from Rhode Island, I desire to call attention to the articles in the preceding paragraphs and the statement in the table which accompanies the report of our Finance Committee in regard to the percentage of valuation on blacksmiths' hammers and sledges, track tools, etc. If this estimate of valuation by the Treasury Department is entirely unreliable in the case of steel beams, whereby the value has been put far below what it should be, what does he say about the valuation of blacksmiths' hammers, and so on, where the valuation is very much higher? It seems to me that there should not be any very wide discrepancy.

I have no doubt there is room to say that there is some; but at $24 a ton, which the valuation stated in this table represents, I do not think that is very far wide of the mark, because steel rails have been bought at any time during the past year in England for much less than $24 a ton, or during most of that period, at all events. I do not see myself why there should be this enormous duty upon this article, being six times what it is upon blacksmiths' hammers, sledges, and so on, the labor in the production of which per pound is greater than in the production of steel beams. I admit there is not the same necessity for strength, and that in the forging of a very large beam or article of manufacture there is more liability to flaw, and so on, and there must be greater care exercised, no doubt. Of course the tariff is higher, but why should it be six times higher?

Mr. ALDRICH. The rate on hammers is just as high.

Mr. PLUMB. I am speaking in proportion to their value, the ad valorem duty. The equivalent, according to the statement made up by the committee, in the one case is 15.81, or less than 16 per cent.; and in the other case it is 102.75 per cent. There is a difference of six times, and this stands out here with a bold prominence which attracted my attention at once. In addition to that, my knowledge of the fact that this combination had existed and that it had, as I believe, unduly increased the price of these articles to the American consumer, led me to propose to reduce the duty still further below what is proposed by the committee.

I know one of the contractors of the Texas state-house told me that they got the same reply as to prices from all the manufacturers in this country, with no suggestion of any competition or anything of that kind; in fact, they found there was no competition; the price could not be broken, and the manufacturers were entirely indifferent whether they sold or not.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator will allow me to say that the price upon the other side was $24 a ton, and a duty of $27 a ton makes $51; and as the price here is $81, it strikes me that affords quite a margin of profit to somebody.

Mr. PLUMB. That is so, and I presume that will appear so to any one, except the manufacturers, and yet these manufacturers will not scruple to take it if they can get it. The Senator ought to have more acquaintance with them than I have; but I venture to say that they will take $30 a ton, and they will take $40, if they can get it.

Mr. ALDRICH. Does the Senator from Kansas state that it is larger than $30 a ton? There has been but $164,000 worth of these articles imported.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know about that; but I can imagine a condition of things whereby these people have got the particular forms necessary for use in the kind of buildings being erected in this country, and by making up the combination which I have suggested they were enabled for the time being at least to control the market and realize these enormous profits.

That leads me to say that one of the features of these combinations is that certain people will get enormous profits in a short time and as long as they possibly can, and when they get themselves sated, they will shut down, and they will always do that rather than run the risk of raising the wages of their laborers. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says that somebody else will begin then; but we do not want to continue that condition of things. We want a more uniform state of things. We do not want enormous profits to-day to be followed by knock-down prices to-morrow. We want the relation of the law to this form of manufacture, as with the other forms, to be such as will give us as early as possible a uniform price, and that uniform price which, while yielding profit to the manufacturers, affords decent and proper wages to the laborer, and no more. I agree to all the Senator said about the effects of the protective system; but I do not propose, so far as I am concerned, in the maintenance of the protective system to give undue profit to the manufacturers, and I propose myself with the light I can get to determine what their profit ought to be and the relation of that profit to the duty; and as much as I respect the Senator from Rhode Island, I am not willing to have him say here, and conclude me, that we have got to abandon this measure if we change any item in the report of the committee. I understood the Senator to say that if we reduced the duties here we had either to recommit the bill or recast the entire schedule. I do not think so.

Bar-iron does not enter into the manufacture of these steel beams, at least not to an appreciable degree, and the duty on bar-iron, therefore, has no relation to this duty, and the duty on bar-iron, according to the schedule of the committee, is much less than it is on steel beams.

Mr. ALDRICH. How can iron beams and girders be made except from bar-iron?

Mr. PLUMB. The beam is rolled by itself; that is the larger part of it. It is a separate article, just like the steel rail.

Mr. ALDRICH. I should like to know how an iron beam can be made without an iron bar.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not an iron bar, and the Senator will see that his own bill describes an iron bar as a different thing, and imposes a different duty. Therefore it is not the same manufacture at all. Bar-iron is one thing, and these beams, girders, joists, channels, TT columns and posts, etc., are a different thing, and the one might be admitted free of duty without practically affecting the trade in the other. The Senator will find that bar-iron, according to the table furnished with the report of the committee, only has imposed upon it a duty of 48.61 per cent. Now you propose to more than double that on these steel beams. I say that the mere statement of itself calls on the committee to defend its action.

Mr. ALDRICH. The statement which the Senator has last made shows the utter absurdity of his position. He says that the duty upon bar-iron is only fixed here at 48.61 per cent., while the duty of 1.1 cents per pound is 100 per cent. on iron beams and girders, which must be made from bar-iron. There is no other possible way in which they can be made.

I suppose there is a certain amount of seriousness in the argument which the Senator from Kansas has been making. Does he mean to say that there being a profit of $30 a ton upon the importation of these steel and iron beams would make any difference if a combination were possible on this side to effectuate that result, whether the duty was 1.1 cents a pound or six-tenths of a cent? If the condition of things is possible by which $30 per ton profit can be made, certainly the difference in duty does not enable them to do that. It must be some cause outside of the tariff. It must be some extraordinary demand or some fact by reason of which manufacturers can not produce the articles from the other side and bring them here. It certainly is not dependent upon the duty, which in itself is not equal to the amount of profit.

The Senator must see that reducing the duty from 1.1 cents to six-tenths or eight-tenths of a cent per pound would not cure that evil. He says that one of these articles could be put upon the free-list without affecting the other. I think the Senator from Kansas upon consideration will have to modify that statement, because if bar-iron or steel billets are put upon the free-list and a duty of six-tenths of a cent is maintained upon iron and steel beams, no iron and steel will be imported in the form of beams; they will be brought as bar-iron or steel billets, and vice versa. The competition is so great and the natural laws of trade are such that when you reduce the rate of duty upon any article in this iron or steel schedule below the normal rate or below the symmetrical rate to which it is entitled, as in the case of tin-plates, you immediately destroy that industry or you destroy the symmetry of the bill, and you prevent justice to the American manufacturer.

That is simply what I stated. As I said, if this duty is reduced to six-tenths of a cent a pound upon the motion of the Senator from Tennessee, it will necessarily involve a recasting and modification in every item of the measure of the committee, if we mean to be just—and that is certainly what the committee mean to be—and they have fixed this rate after long investigation, because they thought it was necessary for the protection of the American manufacturer. And I will say here that so far as I am concerned, I care not whether the average shown by the Treasury Department is 49 per cent. or 149 per cent., if it is necessary for the protection of the American manufacturer, conceding that the industry is entitled to protection, it shall have my vote and my support.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator has introduced steel billets as an element in the manufacture of steel, which is true, but that was not introduced before. I was speaking of bar-iron. Let us see what bar-iron is:

> Bar-iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than 1 inch wide nor less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick.

The Senator does not mean to say that bar-iron of that kind enters into the manufacture of steel beams?

Mr. ALDRICH. That is exactly what I say—not less than 1 inch. It may be 20 inches.

Mr. PLUMB. I take issue with the Senator on that. I understand that that means an entirely different thing from these beams and girders formed in special form. They are not bars in any sense.

Mr. ALDRICH. But the beams must be made from bar-iron, and can be made in no other way. Bars are the raw material from which the beams are made.

Mr. PLUMB. I take the questions of valuation and rate of duty here as shown by the report of the committee, and while I might perhaps be willing to say with as much fervor as the Senator from Rhode Island that whatever is necessary I will vote to maintain, I do say the onus is on the committee to show that a duty of 90 per cent. is necessary in one case, being six times more than that on the ordinary form of iron manufacture.

Mr. ALDRICH. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas that the committee are in no sense responsible for the figures which are placed here as the ad valorem rates. Those are the ad valorem rates furnished by the Treasury Department. They are based upon valuations which I say are false and misleading, and so far as the committee is concerned we disclaim any responsibility as to the character of the figures.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it not a little singular that they are only false and misleading in one case, while lower down there is a 16 per cent. rate, and in paragraph 131 as low as 31 per cent., and that in this particular paragraph 130 there should be this conspicuous error, which the Senator says exists, up to 102 per cent.?

Mr. ALDRICH. I thought I made myself understood that all of them are misleading or liable to be misleading.

Mr. PLUMB. But the theory is that it is the interest of the foreign importer to reduce the value; and if that be so, it seems that certainly is disputed by paragraph 129.

Mr. ALDRICH. There are only $1,450 of value of the article the Senator mentions imported into this country. It might have been some particular form of the large amount of tools mentioned in paragraph 129. It furnishes no guide whatever of any nature or description as to the proper duties to be levied upon these articles, and if the Senator from Kansas will give the subject investigation as intelligent and faithful as I know he can do, he will certainly arrive at the same conclusion.

Mr. PLUMB. Thereupon, Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a moment that I may make a motion to recommit a bill?

Mr. PLUMB. I withdraw it.

JOHN H. NEWMAN.

Mr. PLATT. Just at the close of the last session I objected to the consideration of a bill for the relief of John H. Newman, deceased. It is Calendar number 2094, House bill 834. Since that time considerable evidence has been submitted to me pro and con, and, with the consent of the Senator from Arkansas who made the report [Mr. JONES], I move the recommitment of the bill and the reference to the committee of the papers which I have.

I desire to say that I do not wish to delay the consideration of the case by this motion, and I would like to have the order of the Senate that when the committee has examined and reported the bill it will take the place which it now occupies upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Connecticut can only be entertained by unanimous consent. If there be no objection, the bill named, with the accompanying papers submitted by the Senator from Connecticut, will be recommitted, the understanding being that when again reported it shall resume its place upon the Calendar. The title of the bill will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 834) for the relief of the heirs of John H. Newman, deceased.

MATTHEW W. BERRYMAN.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Senator from Kansas will withdraw his motion until I can ask for action on a motion to reconsider House bill 925 for the relief of Matthew W. Berryman, made during the last session, and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having passed the Senate and having been recalled from the other House, the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed will be agreed to if there be no objection, and also the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, and the bill recommitted.

Mr. COCKRELL. I now present papers which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs with the bill.

The bill, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask permission of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] to make a single remark before adjournment upon a point that has been raised in the discussion of the tariff.

I have had occasion to know something about the manufacture of structural iron, and there may be some facts pertaining to that which do not affect the application of duties to most other forms of manufactures of iron and steel.

There are but two or three rolling-mills in the country that are equipped to manufacture many classes of structural iron. We have one at Pittsburgh, the Carnegie works; they are prepared to manufacture all sizes and all forms. I believe the machinery in one of the mills in Chicago has this year been enlarged for the purpose of meeting the increased demand that is now made for that article in recent structures.

I had occasion in my own case to ascertain these facts. We have five or six rolling-mills in Cleveland, and one of them is among the largest steel and iron rolling mills in the United States. I happened to be associated with that enterprise in the directory, and have urged the enlargement of the works to fill orders for structural iron and steel, but they have not done it on account of the very great cost and the amount of capital that would be required for it. They can not afford to do it because it requires so large an investment for the construction of the plant. There would have to be a great many patterns and a great variety of sizes of steel used for this purpose. There is, however, a large and increasing demand.

I do not know how it is in the Atlantic cities, in New York and Philadelphia, but I suppose they probably have works adapted to rolling the various sizes of structural iron. The contractor for a moderate-sized building in my city would be compelled to purchase a large proportion from the Carnegie works at Pittsburgh. It requires an immense amount of money and an innumerable variety of patterns to enable them to do it, and that is the reason why there is so little competition. The whole Western country is dependent upon the Carnegie works for iron structures. Contractors who take orders for the erection of buildings requiring many sizes of structural iron and steel are compelled to obtain their material from the Carnegie works.

I have to say to the honorable Senator from Kansas that I know of no combinations in the country in the manufacture of this structural iron and steel. If there are such combinations, I have not heard of them. I know that Carnegie will give prices to all works and all contractors alike, and our contractors who take contracts to erect a public building that requires such articles must pay them the price that they demand. There can not be much competition, and I do not think that in the case of structural iron it would be safe to reduce the duties that the committee have reported; and, for one, I shall be compelled to sustain the committee on that point.

PENSIONS TO ARMY NURSES.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew my motion.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call attention to a bill if the Senator will yield.

Mr. PLUMB. I yield.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to Calendar number 273, Senate bill number 373, for the relief of women enrolled as Army nurses, and to ascertain from him whether he has yet received the long hoped for information from the War Department with reference to that bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not received it and have despaired of receiving it, but shall not ask further delay upon the matter when the case is reached regularly in its order.

Mr. BLAIR. Then, as I understand, the Senator is ready to proceed so far as that matter is concerned with the consideration of the bill at any time.

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 10, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 6, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. JOHN H. ROGERS, of Arkansas.
Mr. RALPH PLUMB, of Illinois.
Mr. GEORGE T. BARNES, of Georgia.
Mr. WILLIAM H. HATCH, of Missouri.
Mr. F. M. SIMMONS, of North Carolina.
Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON, of Florida.
Mr. W. BOURKE COCKRAN, of New York.
Mr. M. L. CLARDY, of Missouri.
Mr. DAVID WILBER, of New York.
Mr. T. R. STOCKDALE, of Mississippi.
Mr. G. E. BOWDEN, of Virginia.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of the expenditures for contingent expenses of that Department for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

TESTS OF IRON AND STEEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, a report by Lieutenant-Colonel Parker, commanding the Watertown arsenal, of tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS SETTLED BY THE FIRST COMPTROLLER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of accounts rendered to and settled by the First Comptroller of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

CLAIMS UNDER THE BOWMAN ACT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House letters from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a list of cases of claims for stores and supplies furnished the United States during the late civil war, under the provisions of the Bowman act, which have been dismissed by the court for want of jurisdiction; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of law and of fact and the opinion of the court in certain spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. NEWTON, for two weeks, on account of ill health.

To Mr. NUTTING, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, for eight days, on account of important business.

RESIGNATION OF HON. PERRY BELMONT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the House that he has received a communication from the Hon. PERRY BELMONT, announcing that he has sent to the governor of New York his resignation as a member of the House of Representatives from the First Congressional district of that State, and the Clerk will therefore be directed to omit his name hereafter from the roll-call.

DISTRIBUTION OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report a resolution providing for the distribution of the President's message, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, where the message has already been referred.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman having in charge the special order for to-day does not desire to press it immediately, I will ask his permission to make a motion that the House now go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of disposing of this resolution. I do not think it will take more than five minutes.

Mr. CASWELL. All right.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the resolution which has just been reported from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to our foreign affairs, including appropriations therefor, together with the accompanying correspondence and documents, the British-American fisheries, the Alaska-Columbian coastal boundary, our Samoan interests, Chinese and Japanese indemnity, Chilian war claims of American citizens, the regulation of issue of passports and reorganization of the consular service, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public debt and the public revenues, to the national finances, to the revenue provisions of treaties with Mexico and other countries, the commercial relations with foreign countries having connection with revenue questions, the necessity of the limitation of the revenues of the Government to its economical administration, to the wants and condition of the Treasury and the reduction of its surplus, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the appropriation and expenditure of the public moneys for the support of the Government., i. e., for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, for fortifications, for the District of Columbia, for pensions, and for all deficiencies, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, and touching legislation affecting the Department of Justice, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

That so much as relates to the commerce of the United States, national or interstate, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

That so much as relates to agriculture, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

That so much as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor and to providing an armament for defense on the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

That so much as relates to the Navy of the United States, and the reconstruction of our naval establishment, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

That so much as relates to postal affairs, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

That so much as relates to the public domain and legislation to prevent frauds and revive the homestead policy in the disposal of our public lands, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

That so much as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

That so much as relates to pension laws and their modifications and revision be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

That so much as relates to the District of Columbia and suggested legislation be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move the adoption of this resolution.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I could not hear the reading of this entire resolution, and I wish to inquire whether it is proposed to refer any part of the President's message to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to advise the gentleman. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] moves that the committee rise and report this resolution to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the annual message of the President of the United States, had recommended the adoption of the resolution which he was directed to report to the House.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MCMILLIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUND OF DIRECT TAX.

Mr. CASWELL. In accordance with the order made yesterday, I desire to call up Senate bill No. 139, providing for a refund of the direct tax of 1861.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] moves that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. OATES. Before that question is put, Mr. Speaker, permit me to say a word. I have learned from a good many gentlemen on each side of the Chamber that they would be glad to have a change in the order in regard to this bill, as they desire no session of the House on next Saturday, wishing to devote that day to Department business. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the order be modified so as to substitute Tuesday for Saturday, and Wednesday for Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that the vote be taken on this bill on Wednesday next, instead of Tuesday, and that Saturday be omitted from the order; the order in other respects to stand just as it is?

Mr. CASWELL. It has been suggested to me that Saturday be dropped out entirely, and that we consume only to-day and Tuesday upon this subject.

Mr. WEAVER. I think that would be better. Does not the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] think that would allow sufficient time?

Mr. OATES. No, we can not agree to that, as a number of gentlemen have indicated a desire to speak on this subject.

Mr. CASWELL. I see no objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order will be modified as proposed. The Chair hears none.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, one word further before proceeding with this question. I was not in my seat yesterday when this order was made, or I should have asked some understanding in regard to one or two other points. With the view of facilitating proceedings and securing greater harmony I ask, in the first place, unanimous consent that any gentleman who desires to do so may either extend his remarks or print remarks in the RECORD touching this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request just stated by the gentleman? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OATES. Now, Mr. Speaker, the regular order of proceeding in Committee of the Whole will be, of course, first, to consider and vote upon amendments of the committee or other amendments seeking to perfect the text of the bill. I desire consent that other amendments which are intended to be offered may be presented, read, printed in the RECORD, and considered as pending, to be offered formally and voted upon in the usual order, and that general debate be concluded at some hour to be agreed upon on Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen having amendments to offer to this bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have leave to do so, and that such amendments be considered as pending, to be voted upon in their order when reached. Is there objection to this request?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will that carry amendments over into the House, so that they can be voted upon by a yea-and-nay vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that when the previous question is considered as ordered under the rule adopted yesterday, all amendments which may be pending would be embraced in the operation of the previous question, and would have to be voted upon.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] should confine his request to the printing of these amendments, for until they are printed the House can not know to what it is giving its consent.

Mr. OATES. I will state for the information of gentlemen on the other side that there are several members who desire to speak upon amendments to be offered, and such remarks would not be in order if the offering of the amendments must be postponed. Of course the amendments would not be formally offered, and could not be, until we begin to act under the five-minute rule.

Mr. REED. Any gentleman under the order already adopted can state what his amendment is, and discuss it quite as well as under his proposed modification that it shall be printed and voted on. I suggest the gentleman confine his request at present to the printing of his amendments and afterwards ask the consent of the House as to a vote on them.

Mr. OATES. I prefer they shall be considered as pending, not formally offered, but printed for the information of the House.

Mr. CASWELL. How is that?

Mr. OATES. That they shall be printed in the RECORD and considered as pending, but not formally offered.

Mr. CASWELL. That is to omit the reading, but to print them in the RECORD?

Mr. REED. That modifies the agreement which has been already made, which was that we were to vote on the amendments already offered; was it not?

Mr. OATES. Amendments to the text of the bill would come first.

The SPEAKER. Any amendment presented with the understanding it is to be considered as pending would have to be voted on unless there is action on the part of the House to the contrary.

Mr. OATES. My desire is that the amendments shall be considered as pending and to be voted on.

Mr. CASWELL. Let them be offered and printed in the RECORD so that we may know what is to be offered, and then let them be voted upon as the House may determine.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] objects to the request made by the gentleman from Alabama in its present form, and suggests it be confined at present to the offering and printing of amendments in the RECORD.

Mr. DINGLEY. That the amendments shall be offered simply for printing in the RECORD, as I understand it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is all.

Mr. CASWELL. That is my suggestion.

The SPEAKER. Is that modification agreed to?

Mr. MCMILLIN. What is it?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it again. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] objects to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] in the form in which it is made, but suggests that gentlemen desiring to do so may present amendments to the bill and have them printed in the RECORD; the understanding to go no further at present.

Mr. OATES. I prefer it in the form in which I originally proposed it.

Mr. CASWELL. There are so many objections to that I can not consent to it.

Mr. OATES. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not desire to take any advantage, but my object is merely to facilitate the business of the House. I wish gentlemen having amendments to offer may be allowed to put them in and have them printed in the RECORD; that they shall not be formally offered until the proper time, under the rules, to be voted on.

Mr. RYAN. If offered under the order, then they are pending and must be voted on.

Mr. CASWELL. And to that I can not consent.

Mr. OATES. I have myself amendments which I desire to offer.

Mr. REED. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to send his amendments up to the desk and to ask unanimous consent as to those amendments. All the objection now is as to acting in the dark.

The SPEAKER. Under the order no amendments can be voted on in the House except as reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The modification suggested by the gentleman from Alabama would result in having the amendments voted on which are to be considered as pending.

Mr. REED. The original agreement was made as an abridgment of time so we might come to action on the bill. It is very desirable the understanding unanimously agreed to by the House should be carried out at this time. No one has any objection to make to any concessions which may be reasonable, but we wish to know what they are before they are agreed to.

Mr. OATES. So far as I know, Mr. Speaker, no one wishes to put in any amendments with a view to killing time. We wish to conform to the order of the House in good faith. We wish to have the bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in good faith with such amendments as may be adopted. The modification I have suggested to the original order is with a view to facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. REED. Send up your amendments and have them read.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the attention of the gentleman from Alabama for a moment. It is probable—more than probable—that the amendments which are now proposed to be offered by him will cover an amendment to this bill that I myself desired to offer; but until I have heard his amendments read I do not wish to give my consent to any arrangement which will deprive me of the right if I shall desire to submit the amendment.

Mr. REED. Perhaps we had better go on under the present arrangement.

Mr. OATES. I think my amendment covers the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas, as I understand it.

Mr. ROGERS. I think it very likely it does, as I left my amendment with the gentleman from Alabama at the last session. Still I do not desire to be precluded from the right to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Alabama is not confined to his amendment, but embraces all.

Mr. REED. And that is just the trouble about it. It is too vague and indefinite.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire if the terms of the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Alabama are not so sweeping as to preclude, if accepted, the possibility of even raising points of order against any of the amendments which may be offered and which may be liable to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so, unless that right is expressly reserved; because if the amendments are considered as pending it will then be too late to interpose the point of order.

Mr. OATES. I do not desire to prevent the point of order being made against any amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. But the terms suggested by the gentleman are so broad that I think they would preclude all points of order.

Mr. CASWELL. I see no harm in consenting that the amendments may be presented and printed in the RECORD. But beyond that I do not think it wise to go.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already submitted that request to the House, and so far there has been no response. The Chair will again submit the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] that any amendment which any member desires to offer may be presented now, or in committee after the House has gone into committee, and be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. FARQUHAR. For information.

The SPEAKER. That is the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Do I understand that if that arrangement be adopted it would preclude the offering of amendments at a later date than the present time?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. CASWELL. That is not the intention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman would modify his request so as to allow amendments which I desire to offer to be printed in the RECORD and considered as pending——

The SPEAKER. That has been objected to, but the Chair will again submit the request. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama, that the amendment he now desires to offer may be printed and regarded as pending?

Mr. GROSVENOR. The objection is to the use of the words "considered as pending."

Mr. HOLMAN. But subject to the point of order.

Mr. CASWELL. We desire to reserve all points of order against any amendment.

Mr. OATES. I consent to that modification.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. REED. The understanding is that they are to be presented now?

The SPEAKER. Now or after the House has gone into Committee of the Whole. It can be done by consent now.

Mr. REED. But let it be understood, if this agreement is made, that they are to be presented at once, and not to be offered all along the line.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that they may be offered now or after the House has gone into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The objection to the words "considered as pending" has not been withdrawn.

Mr. OATES. I have only asked that this order apply to the amendments that I shall myself offer at this time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If I knew the character of the amendments and the number of them, I might consent to withdraw the objection.

Mr. OATES. There are but four of them.

Mr. REED. Then let them be read.

Mr. OATES. I will offer them at the proper time, if this agreement is entered into.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We must know what they are.

The SPEAKER. No agreement has been made. Objection is made by the gentleman from Alabama to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin; and the gentleman from Ohio objects to allowing the amendments proposed by the gentleman from Alabama to be considered as pending.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the title of the special order fixed for consideration to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, the merits of this bill are so well understood that it would be but a useless consumption of time to occupy the attention of the committee in further explanation. Later on, in the course of the debate, when new questions arise under the amendments proposed to the bill, I shall perhaps desire further time upon the floor to explain. For the present, I will state to the committee that this bill simply proposes to refund to the States and to individuals that portion of the direct tax levied in 1861 which was collected, and to remit the collection of the uncollected portion of the tax. I have made a careful computation of the amount which the bill will carry and find it to be $15,227,632.03. This does not include the 15 per cent. commissions which were allowed to the States, or to those who paid the tax. The bill further provides, as I have said, that the amount which is now uncollected shall be canceled, which amount will be $2,562,401.29. For the information of the House I will submit and have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Comptroller, dated March 2, 1888, giving a very carefully prepared statement of the condition of this matter, so far as he is able to do so, and I will accompany it with the tables submitted by him and also the computation which I have myself made, showing the amount to be refunded to each State, and the amount that would be canceled still remaining due from the States.

There are only two amendments pending. These amendments were submitted by the Judiciary Committee when they had the bill under consideration and made their report. One is adding the words "collected by offsets or otherwise," so that where an offset was made upon the fund and the United States had the benefit of it, the money will be paid to the State the same as though they paid the money. The other has reference to State agents; so that the money may be paid directly to the State, and not to State agents. These are the only two amendments that are now pending.

The letter and tables to which I have referred are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 2, 1888.

SIR: Your letter of the 27th ultimo to the Secretary of the Treasury has been referred to this office.

In reply I have to state that the report of the committee appointed to examine the direct-tax accounts was approved by this Department, and adjustments have been made as recommended, as shown in the inclosed statement, and which gives all balances due to the United States on account of direct tax uncollected. The accounts of the States and Territories not therein named are balanced and closed. From an estimate made in this office it appears that to pay back the direct tax proper to the several States and Territories, after deducting the amounts credited under acts of Congress and amounts paid back under appropriations for the 15 per cent. and the amounts of the judgments for certain set-offs obtained in the Court of Claims, there will be required (approximately) $15,035,000.

An estimate of the amount required to pay the amounts collected by the direct-tax commissioners, incidental to the tax, namely, penalties, interest, costs, and the amounts involved in the sales and redemptions of land, etc., would involve months of labor and would require the examination of many hundred claims for the refund of money collected under the direct-tax laws that have been passed upon during the last twenty-five years.

Respectfully, yours,

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Hon. L. B. CASWELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Statement in relation to direct tax.

Name of State or Territory.	Amount of direct tax charged.	Amount of tax collected by direct-tax commissioners from citizens.	Amount collected from the State by set-off of amount due to the State.	Total amount collected and credited.
Alabama	$529,313.33		$22,520.24	$22,520.24
Arkansas	261,886.00	$154,701.18		154,701.18
Florida	77,522.67	4,766.26		4,766.26
Georgia	584,367.33	82,427.47	35,555.42	117,982.89
Louisiana	393,886.67	314,500.84	71,385.83	385,886.67
Mississippi	413,084.67	69,584.55	43,740.11	113,324.66
North Carolina	576,194.67	377,452.61		377,452.61
South Carolina	363,579.67	222,396.36		222,396.36
Tennessee	669,498.00	392,004.48		392,004.48
Texas	355,106.67	180,841.51		180,841.51
Virginia	729,071.02	442,408.09		442,408.09
Wisconsin	519,688.67		{*454,944.84 / †73,153.26}	528,098.10
Colorado	22,905.33			22,189.96
Utah	26,982.00
Washington	7,755.33			4,268.16

* Collected from State. † Credited, equal 15 per cent.

Statement in relation to direct tax—Continued.

Name of State or Territory.	Balance of tax uncollected and due to the United States.	Balance overpaid and due to the State.	Amount of judgment recovered in Court of Claims on account of offsets.	Balance due the United States after said judgments are charged back in direct-tax account of the State.
Alabama	$506,793.09		$18,285.03	$525,078.12
Arkansas	107,184.82
Florida	72,756.41
Georgia	466,384.44
Louisiana	Balanced.		71,385.14	71,385.14
Mississippi	299,760.01		41,453.91	341,213.92
			131,124.08
North Carolina	198,742.06
South Carolina	141,174.31
Tennessee	277,493.52
Texas	174,265.16
Virginia	286,662.93
Wisconsin		$8,409.43
Colorado	715.37
Utah	26,982.00
Washington	3,487.17

I have carefully computed the amount which will be refunded to the States and Territories under this bill, the amount of commissions allowed, and the amount unpaid and which will be canceled, and I submit the statement for the use of the House:

States and Territories.	Amount levied.	Amount collected and to be refunded.	15 per cent. commission allowed.	Balance due to be canceled.
Alabama	$529,313.33	$22,520.24		$506,793.09
Arkansas	261,883.00	154,701.18		107,184.82
California	254,538.67	222,955.41	$31,583.26
Colorado	22,905.33	22,189.96		715.37
Connecticut	308,214.00	261,981.90	46,232.10
Dakota	3,241.33	3,241.33
Delaware	74,683.33	70,332.83	4,350.50
District of Columbia	49,437.33	49,437.33
Florida	77,522.67	4,766.26		72,756.41
Georgia	584,367.33	117,982.89		466,384.44
Illinois	1,146,551.33	974,568.63	171,982.70
Indiana	904,875.33	769,144.03	135,731.30
Iowa	452,088.00	384,274.80	67,813.20
Kansas	71,743.33	60,981.83	10,761.50
Kentucky	713,695.33	606,641.03	107,054.30
Louisiana	385,886.67	385,886.67
Maine	420,826.00	357,702.10	63,123.90
Maryland	436,823.33	371,299.83	65,523.50
Massachusetts	824,581.33	700,894.14	123,687.19
Michigan	501,763.33	426,498.83	75,264.50
Minnesota	108,524.00	92,245.40	16,278.60
Mississippi	413,084.67	113,324.66		299,760.01
North Carolina	576,194.67	377,452.61		198,742.06
South Carolina	363,570.67	222,396.36		141,174.31
Missouri	761,127.33	646,958.23	114,169.10
Nebraska	19,312.00	19,312.00
Nevada	4,592.67	3,903.77	688.90
New Hampshire	218,406.67	185,645.67	32,761.00
New Jersey	450,134.00	382,614.83	67,519.17
New Mexico	62,648.00	62,648.00
New York	2,603,918.67	2,213,330.86	390,587.81
Ohio	1,567,089.33	1,332,025.93	235,063.40
Oregon	35,140.67	29,869.57	5,271.10
Pennsylvania	1,946,719.33	1,654,711.43	292,007.90
Rhode Island	116,963.67	99,419.11	17,544.56
Tennessee	669,498.00	392,004.48		277,493.52
Texas	355,106.67	180,841.51		174,265.16
Utah	26,982.00			26,982.00
Vermont	211,068.00	179,407.80	31,660.20
Virginia	729,071.02	442,408.09		286,662.93
West Virginia	208,479.65	181,306.93	27,172.72
Washington	7,755.33	4,268.16		3,487.17
Wisconsin	519,688.67	446,535.41	73,153.26
Total		15,227,632.03	2,206,985.67	2,562,401.29

Now, Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied four minutes of his time.

Mr. OATES withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. OATES. I ask the Clerk to read my first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to each State a sum equal to the amounts collected therein respectively as a tax or duty on raw cotton under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the supplemental and amendatory acts thereto; which sums when so credited and paid shall be accepted and held by such States to be disposed of as their respective Legislatures elected next after such payment may direct.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which the Clerk will next read is one which I propose to offer, if the one just read, the adoption of which I prefer, be not adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That any citizen of the United States who owned raw cotton grown or produced in any one or more of said States, and who was required by any officer or agent of the United States to pay, and did pay, on such cotton any money as a duty or tax under the act approved July 1, 1862, or the act supplementary thereto approved July 13, 1866, entitled "An act to reduce internal taxation and to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide internal revenue to support the Government and pay interest on the public debt, and for other purposes,' approved June 13, 1864, and acts amendatory thereof," may at any time within two years after the approval of this act file his or her petition and bring suit in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of the money so paid and collected from him or her as a duty or tax on said cotton; and the said Court of Claims shall hear all legal evidence and render judgment in such case; and within sixty days thereafter either party—the petitioner or the United States—shall have the right of appeal from such judgment to the Supreme Court of the United States for decision therein.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I propose also to offer at the proper time the amendment which the Clerk will next read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That the right of action in the Court of Claims, under the provisions of the captured and abandoned property acts, be, and the same hereby is, revived and extended for one year from and after the passage of this act, including all cases of seizures under said acts, or under color thereof, either before or after June 30, 1865, without regard to any statute of limitations; and all claims for such property not filed in said court within that period shall be forever barred: Provided, however, That where any of such claims have been filed before the Secretary of the Treasury, and proof taken in relation thereto, under the provisions of the fifth section of the act of May 18, 1872, the proof so taken, whether upon the part of the Government or the claimant, where it is made to appear by affidavit that the witnesses are dead or can not be found, shall be used in evidence in the said Court of Claims as though taken in pursuance of the rules of said court; and that the Secretary of the Treasury, upon the call of said court, on the motion of either party, shall transmit said proofs and all the papers in the case to the said Court of Claims; and all judgments rendered in favor of the claimants shall be paid out of the captured and abandoned property fund, as provided by section 3689 of the Revised Statutes.

That in the trial of causes before the Court of Claims no person shall be excluded as a witness because he is a party to or interested in the same; and any claimant or party in interest in any suit may be examined as a witness on the part of the Government, and when refusing so to testify, or willfully testifying falsely, shall not be entitled to relief; and the testimony of such witness may be used by either party.

That if it shall appear to the court, in any case, that testimony has been duly taken by either party prior to the passage of this act, or that testimony taken in any other case under the rules of the court is pertinent to the issues involved, the same, so far as relevant, may be used in other cases pending in said court.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, which will be offered at the appropriate time, is the substance of a bill now on the Calendar which the Judiciary Committee, through its chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], has reported to the House. Its object is to enable parties making claim to moneys which are a part of the captured and abandoned property fund to go into the Court of Claims and make proof for the purpose of obtaining the money to which they may be entitled. The Supreme Court has held that this fund, now amounting to some $10,000,000, does not belong to the Government of the United States, but is held in trust for these parties. The previous law on this subject having expired by limitation, there is now no law by which these parties can go into court, make proof, and obtain their money.

The next proposition which I desire to have read is one referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas, which is designed to come in as a proviso to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury, in making payment and settlement with any State, shall take into account and set off against the amount made due by this act to such State any amount which may be due by such State to the United States under an act approved June 23, 1836, entitled "An act to regulate the deposits of public money."

Mr. OATES. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that these amendments be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be printed in the RECORD as part of the gentleman's remarks.

Mr. OATES. I prefer to have them printed independently for the information of the House, as I may withhold my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that these amendments be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OATES. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied thirty minutes.

Mr. OATES. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. CASWELL. The amendments just read were, as I understand, read only for information and were not regularly offered.

The CHAIRMAN. They were read as part of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. OATES. I ask the attention for a moment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL].

Mr. CASWELL. I am here.

Mr. OATES. I suppose the debate is to alternate on the one side and the other. If no one is ready to speak on the other side of the House, I would like to be informed of that fact.

Mr. CASWELL. We are entirely willing gentlemen on the other side should speak if any one is prepared to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize any gentleman on either side who is prepared to go on with the debate at this time on either side. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. OATES. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] who is ready to proceed.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, when I consider the important constitutional questions which are involved in the consideration of the measure before the House, I confess that I approach the argument with well-warranted misgivings. These misgivings do not come from any want of confidence in the soundness of the positions which I will this day assume. They spring rather out of distrust in my ability to present the argument in their behalf with the force which they merit, and from the knowledge that there is an indisposition in governments as well as individuals to afford adequate remedy for the wrongs and errors which they may inflict.

In the treatment of the question, however much repetition there may have been of certain points in the discussion heretofore, it is well, at least, at the outset, to understand what is the real question before us. The act of July 5, 1861, imposed a tax of $20,000,000 on the United States, and in accordance with the constitutional provision in regard to the subject of direct taxation, assessed it among the States in proportion to population.

That tax, let me call attention at the commencement of my remarks, Mr. Chairman, was a tax not levied on land as so many acres, but it was a tax levied on the value of the land, on the value of the improvements, on the value of the dwellings, and the value of lots of ground in the cities. This is an important distinction necessary to be borne in mind in the consideration of the act.

The act of 1862, amendatory of the act of 1861, was an act which had for its object the more rigorous enforcement of the collection of this tax in what were known as "the insurrectionary States." The operations under this act are fully set forth in the following table, marked A:

EXHIBIT A.—Statement of the condition of the direct-tax accounts of the several States and Territories of the Union under eighth section act August 5, 1861, as appears from the books of the Register's Office, February 18, 1888.

15 per cent. allowance.	State or Territory.	Amount imposed, etc.	Amount collected, etc.	Balance due United States.
	Alabama	$529,313.33	$22,520.24	$506,793.09
	Arkansas	261,886.00	154,701.18	107,184.82
(*)	California	254,538.67	254,538.67
	Colorado	22,905.33	22,189.96	715.37
$46,232.10	Connecticut	308,214.00	261,981.90
	Dakota	3,241.33	3,241.33
†4,350.50	Delaware	74,683.33	70,332.83
	District of Columbia	49,437.33	49,437.33
	Florida	77,522.67	4,766.26	72,756.41
	Georgia	584,367.33	117,982.89	466,384.44
171,982.70	Illinois	1,146,551.33	974,568.63
135,731.30	Indiana	904,875.33	769,144.03
67,813.20	Iowa	432,088.00	364,274.80
(*)	Kansas	71,743.33	71,743.33
107,054.30	Kentucky	713,695.33	606,641.03
	Louisiana	385,886.67	385,886.67
63,123.90	Maine	420,826.00	357,702.10
65,523.50	Maryland	436,823.33	371,299.83
123,687.19	Massachusetts	824,581.33	700,894.14
75,264.50	Michigan	501,763.33	426,498.83
16,278.60	Minnesota	108,524.00	92,245.40
	Mississippi	413,684.67	113,324.66	299,760.01
114,169.10	Missouri	761,127.33	646,958.23
(‡)	Nebraska	19,312.00	19,312.00
(*)	Nevada	4,592.67	4,592.67
32,761.00	New Hampshire	218,406.67	185,645.67
67,519.17	New Jersey	450,134.00	382,614.83
(§)	New Mexico	62,648.00	62,648.00
390,587.81	New York	2,603,918.67	2,213,330.86
	North Carolina	576,194.67	377,452.61	198,742.06
235,063.40	Ohio	1,567,089.33	1,332,025.93
(*)	Oregon	35,140.67	35,140.67
292,007.90	Pennsylvania	1,946,719.33	1,654,711.43
17,544.56	Rhode Island	116,963.67	99,419.11
	South Carolina	363,570.67	222,396.36	141,174.31
	Tennessee	669,498.00	392,004.48	277,493.52
	Texas	355,106.67	180,841.51	174,265.16
	Utah	26,982.00		26,982.00
31,660.20	Vermont	211,068.00	179,407.80
(‖)	Virginia	729,071.02	442,408.09	286,662.93
	Washington	7,755.33	4,268.16	3,487.17

* Payments made on account 15 per cent. allowance for cost of assuming collection, namely:

To California, September 10, 1884	$31,583.26
To Kansas, August 3, 1882	10,761.50
To Nevada, September 3, 1884	688.90
To Oregon, September 16, 1884	5,271.10

† In part on compromise.

‡ Nebraska—

Amount collected	4,281.60
Amount allowed by First Comptroller, March 27, 1884, under act August 7, 1862	15,030.40
	19,312.00

§ New Mexico: Amount allowed by First Comptroller, March 27, 1884, under act July 1, 1862 — 62,648.00

‖ Section 1, joint resolution February 25, 1867, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer $208,479.65 of the amount originally imposed on Virginia to the State of West Virginia.

L. W. REID, Acting Register.

EXHIBIT A.—Statement of the condition of the direct-tax accounts of the several States and Territories of the Union, etc.—Continued.

15 per cent. allowance.	State or Territory.	Amount imposed, etc.	Amount collected, etc.	Balance due United States.
*$27,172.72	West Virginia	$208,479.65	$281,306.93
39,346.43	Wisconsin	519,688.67	528,098.10
2,124,874.08		20,000,018.19	15,360,490.48
	Total indebtedness of States, etc.			$2,562,401.29
	Deduct balance due Wisconsin			8,409.43
	Net indebtedness to the United States			2,553,991.86

*Section 1, joint resolution February 25, 1867, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to transfer $208,479.65 of the amount originally imposed on Virginia to the State of West Virginia.

L. W. REID, Acting Register.

The column headed "15 per cent. allowance" shows the credit allowed States which assumed the payment of the tax for the expenses of collection. It will be seen that, including this allowance, about $17,500,000 have been paid and about $2,500,000 remain uncollected.

The purpose of the bill on your table is to execute a release as to the tax uncollected, and to refund the tax which has been collected to those who have paid it. Considered in that mere statement of the question, without regard to constitutional principles, as a mere isolated question, there is an appearance of equity in the claim. But it is true in reference to all taxes that they are never wholly collected. If taxes are to be refunded on the ground that a part remains unpaid, then there is an end to all taxation, and I may say to all government.

But neither justice nor right nor constitutional principles will permit the question of the repayment of this tax to be considered separate and apart from the repayment of other taxes which this Government has imposed and collected. One of the amendments which have been read proposes to amend this bill by restoring the taxes collected on cotton during and immediately after the war. It is to the consideration of the equities involved in this proposed amendment that I now desire to invite your attention.

In 1862 the Congress of the United States imposed a tax of half a cent per pound on cotton. In 1864 it increased that tax to 2 cents per pound. In 1866 Congress passed a further act increasing the tax on cotton to 3 cents a pound.

I now annex tables, taken from the report of the minority of the committee, which will show the operation of these acts, where the tax was collected, the States which paid it, and the amounts paid; and from these it will appear, Mr. Chairman, that the great bulk of what was known as the cotton tax was paid under the last of these acts.

EXHIBIT B.—Table showing the total amount of cotton tax collected within each State and Territory.

States.	Amount.	States.	Amount.
Alabama	$10,388,072.10	Missouri	$592,098.36
Arkansas	2,555,638.43	New Jersey	3,656.42
California	430.04	New York	867,942.68
Connecticut	193.64	North Carolina	1,959,704.87
Florida	918,944.98	Ohio	447,127.12
Georgia	11,897,094.98	Pennsylvania	78,535.06
Illinois	379,144.42	Rhode Island	2,421.73
Indiana	92,727.22	South Carolina	4,172,420.16
Kansas	286.15	Tennessee	7,873,460.71
Kentucky	553,327.45	Texas	5,502,401.24
Louisiana	10,098,501.00	Utah	1,375.34
Maryland	51,349.52	Virginia	825,856.87
Massachusetts	66,679.30
Mississippi	8,742,995.93	Total cotton tax	68,072,388.99

Collections of duty on cotton for the years 1863 to 1868, both inclusive.

[Taken from the books of the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.]

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1863	$351,311.48
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1864	1,268,412.56
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1865	1,772,983.48
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866	18,409,654.90
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1867	23,769,078.80
For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868	22,500,947.77
Making the aggregate sum of	68,072,388.99

The total amount collected was over $68,000,000, of which my own State paid nearly twelve millions, of which the South paid more than sixty-four millions, and of which more than forty-six millions was collected under the act of July 13, 1866.

The land tax, Mr. Chairman, was a general tax, a legal tax, a constitutional tax. It was laid on all the States of the Union, and in proportion to the population of each State. It was laid in strict accordance with all the forms and rules prescribed by the Constitution.

The tax on cotton was essentially a special tax. It was an illegal tax: it was an unconstitutional tax. I say it was a special tax because, Mr. Chairman, while the land tax affected property generally throughout the whole Union, the other, the cotton tax, was one imposed upon a special product peculiar to a portion of the Union. In fact, the laws of climate interposed and confined its production to eleven States. It singled out a special agricultural product. With the exception of one other agricultural product, that of tobacco in its raw state, no other agricultural product was a subject of taxation. Wheat, corn, wool, rye, oats, hay, pease, beans, potatoes, products common to the whole country, were exempt. It was therefore special in its operation. It was a step backwards in the history of civilization. In all civilized nations, so far as I have been able to examine the question, the annual products of the soil have long since ceased to be the subject-matter of taxation. This tax act singled out this product. It was therefore special and partial in its character.

But, Mr. Chairman, I say this cotton tax was to all intents and purposes, and in its effect, a special land tax also on the cotton lands of the South. It was a direct tax as that term was understood by the framers of the Constitution. It could not have been laid in any other manner than that prescribed by the Constitution for laying direct taxes. Let me say, sir, that when we approach the discussion of those clauses in the Constitution which bear on the subject of taxation, we should approach the investigation of the proper construction to be placed upon them somewhat in that spirit of jealousy with which our fathers framed them. There was no subject upon which our fathers were so peculiarly and specially jealous as they were with regard to the powers which should be conferred upon the Congress of the United States bearing on the subject of taxation.

Why, sir, I have been forcibly reminded as I approach the investigation of this question with what Burke said in his great speech in regard to the character of the colonists made in the British House of Commons before the battle of Lexington. He called the attention of the House of Commons to the fact in the then pending struggle with America, that the colonists were descendants of Englishmen, that they had emigrated from England when the love of freedom was most predominant in the character of Englishmen, that if they were devoted to liberty it was not to liberty in the abstract, but to liberty according to English ideas and on English principles. He said that in the history of England in every struggle for freedom the contest, unlike the contests in the ancient commonwealths, had turned on the question of taxing. He told the House of Commons that the American colonies had drawn in these ideas with their life-blood; and he told them further that however much liberty might be safe or might be endangered in twenty other particulars, they would not be much pleased nor alarmed.

But, he said, this love of liberty, as with you, is fixed and attached on this specific point of taxing. Here they felt its pulse, and as they found that beat they thought themselves sick or sound. Such was the character of our fathers, as described by no less a statesman than Edmund Burke, before they had been tried by the fires of the Revolution.

Mr. Chairman, it is with the same spirit of jealousy that I would examine the clauses of the Constitution which confer the taxing power. These colonies had fought the whole power of Great Britain for seven long years without conferring any power of taxation whatever on the central government.

When they came to frame the Constitution they gave to Congress, it is true, the power of taxation almost—I will not say quite, because the Constitution forbids me to say so—almost unlimited as to subject-matter. The power of taxation was conferred in the first clause of the eighth section and first article of the Constitution, in these words:

> The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

The question has been raised as to whether the term "taxes" as here used includes all taxes of every possible conceivable kind, which can not be described as duties, imposts, excises, and export taxes, or whether under this term only direct taxes were intended.

It is unnecessary at this time to discuss this question. For my part I doubt whether any tax can be laid which is neither a duty, nor an impost, nor an excise tax, nor a direct tax, nor an export tax. The limitations expressed in the clause were, first, as to the purposes of taxation. This provision limited the exercise of the power as to all the taxes, whether falling under the general term of taxes, or of duties, imposts, and excises, to the three distinct purposes—of paying the debts, providing for the common defense, and general welfare of the United States. The second limitation applied only to duties, imposts, and excises. Wherever any taxes were laid in any of these three forms, then it was provided that in the exercise of the power Congress should see that they should be uniform throughout the United States.

The convention further imposed a positive prohibition on the taxing power in these words: "No tax nor duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." It was broad and comprehensive. It made no difference whether it was a tax or a duty. The prohibition applied positively to both. Neither should be laid on articles exported from any State.

We come now to another prohibition. This prohibition applied to the manner in which the tax should be laid. It is in these words:

> No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

That census was provided to be taken in the third clause of the second section of the first article of the Constitution, in these words:

Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of ten years in such manner as they shall by law direct.

Here was a distinct manner, clearly pointed out, in which capitation or other direct taxes must be laid. They could not be laid in any other manner. There was no discretion whatever. The prohibition was positive that in this manner, and in this manner only, could they be laid. If laid in any other manner, the law would be clearly unconstitutional.

This provision in the Constitution was the result of compromise. No other provision in the Constitution elicited so much contention. The Revolution had been fought on the idea that taxation should not exist without representation. This referred entirely to internal taxes—not to duties on imports. This clearly appears from the examination of Franklin before the House of Commons. (See Bigelow's Franklin, volume 1, page 477.) The success of the Revolution established the principle that taxation and representation should go together.

This clause in the Constitution, that taxation should be in proportion to representation, was a corollary from this idea. The proposition as originally reported to the convention was that "taxation shall be in proportion to representation." But this was seen to be inapplicable, and it was changed so as to read, "that direct taxation ought to be proportioned to representation." The restriction of the taxation which should be proportioned to representation to direct taxation shows how closely the ideas developed during the struggle with Great Britain were followed in framing the Constitution. They saw clearly that taxation generally could not be proportioned to population; but, unwilling to trust the subject to the discretion of Congress, they restricted the power of levying direct taxes to a certain invariable rule, which they regarded as the best measure of wealth, and therefore provided that these taxes should always be in proportion to population as fixed by the census, and also provided, in estimating numbers, that five slaves should be counted as three white persons.

This much of the history of the clause I have thought proper to introduce prefatory to the inquiry of what was understood by direct taxes. I will not inquire here what political economists understand by direct and indirect taxes. But what did the framers of the Constitution understand by direct taxes?

The inquiry was made in the convention while this question was up for consideration as to what was understood by the term "direct tax," and we are told by Mr. Madison that no answer was given to the inquiry. We are told by Luther Martin, in the account he gave of the convention to the Maryland Legislature, that it was stated in the secret deliberations of the convention that the clause in reference to taxation, where used in connection with the words "excise, imposts, and duties," was meant to be understood as a direct tax; that all the other taxes, imposts, excises, and duties were to be uniform, and that all other taxes must necessarily be direct taxes, and consequently taxes according to the prescribed provisions of the Constitution, to be apportioned among the States according to population.

What, then, were direct taxes? It has been generally assumed by all the commentators on the Constitution that direct taxes are to be limited to lands, and that the capitation tax applies to persons. Chief-Justice Marshall, in discussing the subject in the Virginia convention, described direct taxes as taxes on lands, slaves, stock, and a few other articles. It is to be presumed, as he was addressing a convention composed in large part of Virginia planters of that day, that in speaking of stock he meant the usual stock on and pertaining to a Virginia plantation. (Elliott's Debates, volume 3, page 229.)

Mr. Madison said:

It is represented to be oppressive that the States who have slaves and make tobacco should pay taxes on these for Federal wants, when other States who have them not would escape. But does the Constitution on the table admit of this? On the contrary there is a proportion to be laid on each State, according to its population. The most proper articles will be selected in each State. If one article in each State should be deficient, it will be laid on another article. Our State is secure on this foundation. Its proportion will be commensurate to its population. It is a constitutional scale which is an insuperable bar against disproportion, and ought to satisfy all reasonable minds.—Elliott's Debates, volume 3, page 307.

Now, the first case that came before the Supreme Court of the United States bearing on this subject was the celebrated case of Hylton vs. The United States, where the question before the court was simply whether or not a tax on carriages was a direct tax. But there fell from some of the judges certain opinions in the course of their remarks, from which we can gather, possibly, what was understood to be direct taxation by the framers of the Constitution.

Justice Chase uses this language:

I am inclined to think, but of this I do not give a judicial opinion, that the direct taxes contemplated by the Constitution are only two, to wit, a capitation or poll tax, simply without regard to property, profession, or any other circumstance, and a tax on land. I doubt whether a tax, by general assessment of personal property within the United States, is included within the term "direct tax."

I turn, however, to Justice Patterson, who was one of the members of the convention which framed the Constitution, and one of the prominent and conspicuous members of it. He states:

The Constitution declares that a capitation tax is a direct tax; and both in theory and practice a tax on land is deemed to be a direct tax. In this way the terms "direct taxes" and "capitation and other direct tax" are satisfied. It is not necessary to determine whether a tax on the product of land be a direct or indirect tax. Perhaps the immediate product of land, in its original and crude state, ought to be considered as the land itself; it makes part of it, or else the provision made against taxing exports would be easily eluded. Land independently of its produce is of no value.

If we tax the value of land then we must have regard to its products.

Again he says:

A sum is to be laid on the landed property in the State, but by whom and by what rule? Shall every acre pay the same sum, without regard to its quality, value, situation, or productiveness? This would be manifestly unjust.

Here we see again that in determining the tax on the land we must have regard to the products in estimating the value and determining a just basis of taxation.

Now, let us look for a moment and see how those statesmen who came immediately after the Revolution framed the earliest direct-tax acts. The first direct-tax act was the act of 1798. That imposed a tax on the valuation of land and apportioned it among the States, and imposed a capitation tax on slaves. The act of 1813, 3 Statutes at Large, page 22, and the act of 1815, 3 Statutes, page 164, taxed land and slaves, and taxed them both as realty in connection with each other. They did not impose a capitation tax on the slaves. They imposed a tax on slaves and the land together. The language is that whenever a direct tax shall be laid the same shall be assessed and laid on the value of all lands, lots of ground, with their improvements, dwelling-houses, and slaves, which several articles, subject to taxation, shall be enumerated and valued by the respective assessors at the rate each of them is worth in money. They treated the labor as part of the realty.

Now, I put the inquiry right here at this stage of the argument that if the labor which gave value to the land was to be taxed as part of the realty because it was part of the realty, how will you escape the conclusion that the product, which is the joint fruit of that land and of that labor, both of which in law are realty, can be other than realty? The conclusion is irresistible. To deny it is to claim that the offspring is different in nature from its parentage. The argument is unanswerable in the mere statement of it. It may be avoided, but it can not be met.

I wish now to invite attention to the views on these statutes expressed by Chief-Justice Chase, a judge whom I regret was not upon the bench when the case was argued about the constitutionality of the cotton tax. Let us see what he says in his comments—and I should have liked to have had on the bench at that time a man of his equipoise of mind.

In the case of Veasie Bank vs. Fenno, in 8 Wallace, where the question was whether or not the tax of 10 per cent. on the amount of the notes of any State bank paid out is a direct tax, he enters into a discussion as to what is a direct tax. He says:

We are obliged, therefore, to resort to historical evidence and to seek the meaning of the words in the use and in the opinion of those whose relations to the Government and means of knowledge warranted them in speaking with authority.

And, considered in this light, the meaning and application of the rule as to direct taxes appears to us quite clear.

It is, as we think, distinctly shown in every act of Congress on the subject.

In each of these acts a gross sum was laid upon the United States and the total amount was apportioned to the several States according to their respective numbers of inhabitants as ascertained by the last preceding census. Having been apportioned, provision was made for the imposition of the tax upon the subjects specified in the act, fixing its total sum.

In 1798, when the first direct tax was imposed, the total amount was fixed at $2,000,000; in 1813 the amount of the second direct tax was fixed at three millions; in 1815 the amount of the third at six millions, and it was made an annual tax; in 1816 the provision making the tax annual was repealed by the repeal of the first section of the act of 1815, and the total amount was fixed for that year at $3,000,000. No other direct tax was imposed until 1861, when a direct tax of $20,000,000 was laid and made annual; but the provision making it annual was suspended, and no tax except that first laid was ever apportioned. In each instance the total sum was apportioned among the States by the constitutional rule, and was assessed at prescribed rates, on the subjects of the tax. These subjects, in 1798, 1813, 1815, 1816, were lands, improvements, dwelling-houses, and slaves; and in 1861 lands, improvements, and dwelling-houses only. Under the act of 1798 slaves were assessed at 50 cents on each; under the other acts, according to valuation by assessors.

This review shows that personal property, contracts, occupations, and the like have never been regarded by Congress as proper subjects of direct tax. It has been supposed that slaves must be considered as an exception to this observation. But the exception is rather apparent than real. As persons slaves were proper subjects of a capitation tax, which is described in the Constitution as a direct tax; as property they were, by the laws of some if not of most of the States, classed as real property, descendible to heirs. Under the first view they would be subject to the tax of 1798, as a capitation tax; under the latter they would be subject to the taxation of the other years as realty. That the latter view was that taken by the framers of the acts after 1798 becomes highly probable when it is considered that in the States where slaves were held much of the value which would otherwise have attached to land passed into the slaves. If, indeed, the land only had been valued without the slaves, the land would have been subject to much heavier proportional imposition in those States than in States where there were no slaves; for the proportion of tax imposed on each State was determined by population, without reference to the subjects on which it was to be assessed.

The fact, then, that slaves were valued under the acts referred to, far from showing, as some have supposed, that Congress regarded personal property as a proper subject of direct taxation under the Constitution, shows only that Congress, after 1798, regarded slaves for the purposes of taxation, as realty.

It may be rightly affirmed, therefore, that in the practical construction of the Constitution by Congress, direct taxes have been limited to taxes on land and appurtenances and taxes on polls or capitation taxes.

It will be seen that Judge Chase here includes as subject-matter of direct taxation, not the land alone, but land and appurtenances. Now, if in the view of any opponent of this amendment annual crops are not to be regarded as part of the land, it certainly can not be denied that nothing could be more appurtenant to land than the annual crops which spring from the soil.

But if it is a correct proposition that the slave was to be considered as realty because he added to the value of the realty, and the tax was not upon the land, so many acres, but upon the value of the land, how are you to escape from the conclusion that a tax on products is a tax on land? Is the land of value without the products? Does not the product increase the value of the land? If you impose a tax on the land, you tax the products of the land. If you tax the product of the lands, you tax that which gives value to the land; you do in fact tax the value of the land. Having seen what were the views of the framers of the Constitution, as expressed by some in the debates on the Constitution, as set forth in the opinions of eminent judges, as discoverable from our early legislative history, let us see what were the prevailing opinions in England at or about the time of the formation of the Constitution.

The opinions of our fathers on questions of taxation were unquestionably formed to a great extent on the history of and the then existing status of English taxation.

I think the views which I have expressed are fully supported by reference to English history. I have endeavored to give the subject close investigation. I can nowhere find that agricultural products were taxed in England, with the single exception of tithes. I am strengthened in this belief from the fact that one of the ablest Senators the Republican party ever gave to the American Senate announced the same conclusion in a speech made in the Senate in 1866. I refer to Hon. John B. Henderson, of Missouri. He quotes some authorities I have been unable to procure, and I have been able to obtain access to some from which he does not quote. The conclusions which he reached were that agricultural products were never assessed and placed in the tax-lists. They were taken into consideration as affecting the value of lands, those lands producing most being regarded as most valuable; but they were never rated and taxed in addition to the lands on which they grew.

There is but one exception, that of hops, and this exception proves the rule. Blackstone gives a list of articles subject to excise duty in England in his time just prior to the American Revolution. The only agricultural product named is hops. Senator Henderson gives as the reason for this exception:

The cultivation of this article was regulated by law as the cultivation of tobacco now is in France. The article was never exported, and could be, and was, protected by a heavy import duty on the foreign article. There was not enough of the article produced for home consumption.

These reasons sufficiently explain why this article was excepted, and strengthens the correctness of the statement that agricultural products were not a separate subject-matter of taxation.

The ancient taxes were the scutage, the hidage, and the tailage. These were succeeded by what were called subsidies, and these in turn by what were called periodical assessments. Senator Henderson quotes that subsidies was a money tax on persons, levied in proportion to their wealth, lands being valued according to their rental or productions, and taxed at four shillings per pound and goods at two shillings eight pence per pound.

Blackstone, published 1765, says, page 312:

These periodical assessments, the subsidies which preceded them, and the more ancient scutage, hidage, and tallage were to all intents and purposes a land tax, and the assessments were sometimes expressly called so.

The land-tax act, passed in the reign of William and Mary, 1692, took the place of these ancient taxes.

Burns's Justice, published 1769, volume 3, page 17, says:

The land tax hath succeeded into the place of the ancient fifteenths and subsidies, and the land-tax acts are framed in many respects after the manner of the ancient subsidy acts.

Macaulay says:

The Commons resolved that a new and more accurate valuation of estates should be made over the whole nation, and that on the rental thus ascertained a pound rate should be paid to the government. Such was the origin of the existing land tax. The valuation made in 1692 has remained unaltered down to our time.

Now, this was the land tax of England in force at the time of the commencement of the American Revolution, and at the time of the formation of our Constitution. Under this law a very large variety of subjects were embraced. They include lands, tenements, manors, springs, tolls, tithes, annuities, and a great number of other specific matters. But agricultural products are not included.

Adam Smith, in his Wealth of Nations, published 1776, Edinburgh edition of 1828, page 391, says:

When, instead either of a certain portion of the produce of land, or of the price of a certain portion, a certain sum of money is to be paid in full compensation for all tax or tithe, the tax becomes in this case exactly of the same nature with the land tax of England.

These views from law writers, historians, and political economists on the subject of taxation of lands or products are in entire consonance with the ancient common law of England. Let me add the authority of one other great name in support of the position that the products or profits of the land are one with the land. Says Lord Coke:

If a man seised of lands in fee by his deed granteth to another the profit of those lands, to have and to hold to him and his heires, and maketh livery secundum formam chartæ, the whole land itselfe doth passe; for what is the land but the profits thereof? For thereby vesture, herbage, trees, mines, and all whatsoever parcell of that land doth passe. (Coke on Littleton, L. 1, C. 1, section 1; Fee-simple, 4b.)

Now, it was from such sources that our fathers must have derived their opinions on the subject of land taxation. With them lands and the profits of land were one and the same. They did not know of agricultural products as a subject-matter of taxation independent of the land itself. They merely regarded products as imparting additional value to the land and the value of the land as the subject-matter of taxation.

A few words on tithes and I dismiss this branch of the subject. Tithes under the old Hebrew law show that in their origin and in practice they were a tax on land. The tithes were the tenth part of the annual products, taken from the lands of the other tribes and contributed to the Levites. No land was assigned to the Levites in the general distribution; but in lieu of land—and in payment of their duties connected with the priesthood—tithes, made a burden on the rest of the land, were assigned to them. This was their share in the land, and had they been paid in money instead of kind they would have been, in the language of Adam Smith, of exactly the same nature as the land tax of England.

Let us now return and examine more specifically the cotton-tax act of 1866. The act was approved July 13, 1866. It imposed no tax on any cotton produced prior to that time. It imposed no tax on any cotton on which any tax had been levied, paid, or collected. But there had been a tax, either levied, paid, or collected under prior acts, on all cotton produced in the United States, of crops prior to the crop of 1866. All the cotton of previous crops was then specially excepted from the operations of this act of July 13, 1866. The act then provided that on and after the 1st day of August, 1866, there should be paid by the producer, owner, or holder a tax of 3 cents per pound. The language, "3 cents per pound," and the subsequent provisions in reference to the weight of the cotton, are mere rules for measuring or fixing the amount of the tax.

It was provided further that this tax should be and remain a lien thereon in the possession of any person whomsoever from the time this law took effect (that is, from the 1st day of August, 1866), or such cotton was produced as aforesaid, until the same should have been paid. Here is a positive declaration of the statute that this tax should be a lien from the 1st day of August, 1866, although the amount was to be subsequently ascertained.

The tax was actually laid on cotton on and after the 1st day of August, 1866; that is, when the cotton was in the field growing. That was the time when this tax was laid on the cotton. It was further provided by the fifth section of the act that this crop of 1866 was not to be removed from and after the 1st of September, 1866, from the place where it was produced without the payment of the tax. It was not a tax that was appurtenant; it was a tax upon part and parcel of the land. Would you tax potatoes when they were in the soil, embedded in the earth, and then say that it was not a tax upon the land? Would you tax trees which grow upon the land, forming a part and parcel of the soil, and say that that was not a tax upon the land? Will you tax wheat or cotton growing in the field, part and parcel of the soil itself, and say that that is not a tax upon the land?

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that I have made good the position that this, being a tax imposed on the cotton while it was still growing, was in fact a tax upon the land itself. Suppose there had been a prohibition in the Constitution of the United States against laying any tax upon land, and you had imposed a tax on the products which grow upon that land, would you not be taxing the value of the land? How do you escape the conclusion that a tax on the products which impart value to the land is a tax on the value of the land?

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BARNES. Yes, sir; and I will try to answer it.

Mr. CASWELL. Can you draw a distinction between a tax upon cotton and a tax upon tobacco?

Mr. BARNES. None whatever; and I do not propose to make a distinction so far as the raw, unmanufactured tobacco is concerned—the tobacco in its crude state. I say such a tax would be illegal and unconstitutional.

I do not believe it was ever contemplated to tax the annual products of land in this country, except as a land tax. That was the position of Senator Henderson, as I understand, when he argued the constitutionality of this measure; and no attempt was made to answer him in the American Senate. I again say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] that there is no distinction; the two classes of tax when the taxes are laid on raw products are the same in reason and on principle.

This tax, bear in mind, is not a tax on land; it is a tax on the value of land; the product is a part and parcel of that value. When this tax was laid on cotton growing in the fields, it was just the same as if a tax had been laid on wheat in the fields. So far as I have been able to find, there is no civilized country where a tax is laid on annual products; and in speaking to-day in the interest of the cotton planter I am speaking equally in the interest of the grower of wheat, of potatoes, of Indian corn, or any other product.

To tax the value of the land, and then impose another tax on the product which gives it its value, is to impose an additional tax on the land. There is no telling but that in the course of time, when some other chapter of history may arise, if this tax is to be held a legal and constitutional tax, there may be, by some combination of interests on this floor or in the other Chamber, a tax proposed on wheat or Indian corn. If so, and I should be here then, I would stand then, as I stand now, ready to oppose such a tax on the annual products of land as vicious, illegal, and unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I humbly conceive that I have shown that a tax on the annual products of land is a tax on the land itself. I think I have shown that the statesmen who framed the Constitution so regarded it. I think I have shown that it was so regarded by some of our earliest and by one of the most eminent of our later judges. I think that it has been so treated in the early legislation of the country. I think that it has been so regarded in English legislative history. I think I have shown that the most eminent political economists have regarded taxes on annual products as of the same nature as the tax on land, and I think, Mr. Chairman, I have established that the act of 1866 in its imposition of the tax on cotton has laid the tax while the cotton was part and parcel of the land. The conclusion is inevitable that the tax on cotton was a tax on the value of the land. If so, it was a direct tax. As a direct tax it could not be laid unless in proportion to the census which the Constitution provided should be taken. It was not so laid, and not being so laid, I am authorized in pronouncing it an illegal and unconstitutional tax. In the view which I take of this question, I might here, Mr. Chairman, dismiss the subject from all further consideration.*

But there are those who insist that this was a duty imposed on the cotton. If so, Mr. Chairman, it was not such a uniform duty as was required by that clause of the Constitution which prescribes that all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States. A uniform duty could have been laid on wheat, tobacco, or corn, because they could at least have been grown throughout the United States. But it was impossible to single out an article which under the laws of climate could only grow in a certain section and impose a peculiar burden of taxation on that article, and then claim that the tax was uniform throughout the United States. In the case of Gilman vs. The City of Sheboygan (2 Black, 510) the Supreme Court of the United States quote with approbation the following language used by the supreme court of Ohio in the case of The Exchange Bank of Columbus vs. Hines (3 O. S. Rep., 1), wherein that court says:

> Taxing is required to be by a uniform rule, that is, by one and the same unvarying standard. Taxing by a uniform rule requires uniformity not only in the rate of taxation but also uniformity in the mode of assessment upon the taxable valuation. Uniformity in taxing implies equality in the burden of taxation, and this equality of burden can not exist without uniformity in the mode of assessment as well as the rate of taxation. But this is not all. The uniformity must be coextensive with the territory to which it applies. If a State, it must be uniform all over the State. If a county or city tax, it must be uniform throughout the extent of the territory to which it is applicable. But the uniformity in the rule required by the Constitution does not stop here. It must extend to all property subject to taxation, so that all property may be taxed alike, equally, which is taxing by a uniform rule.

Now, can it be said that a tax imposed on a single agricultural product, which under the laws of climate could not possibly be produced outside of a given number of States, when all other agricultural products, with but one exception, and which could be produced anywhere throughout the Union, were exempt, is a uniform tax, a uniform duty as contemplated by the Constitution? Is this an imposition of the burdens of taxation equally throughout the country? Is this the spirit of equality which this clause of the Constitution was intended to subserve?

But there is still another provision of the Constitution under which this cotton tax is unconstitutional. I refer to the clause prohibiting the imposition of any tax on exports. The language of the clause is:

> No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

As I have elsewhere said, it made no difference whether it was a tax or a duty. The prohibition applied positively to both. Neither should be laid on articles exported from any State.

If there is any one article of American produce which is specially and pre-eminently an article of export it is the article of raw, unmanufactured cotton. From four-fifths to five-sixths of American cotton goes abroad. Its price is regulated at Liverpool, in a foreign market. Early after the close of the war it came into competition then with the untaxed raw product of India and other countries, where its production had been greatly stimulated during the war. The tax paid by the planter here was not paid back in any price increased to that extent, for the price which ruled in Liverpool controlled the price here, and Liverpool was beyond the jurisdiction of your tax. Had you repealed the cotton tax at the time it would not have reduced the price in Liverpool. The tax paid by the planter was so much taken out of his profits, for which he was never reimbursed.

The planter's cotton was an article of export; it was raised for export; it was intended for export; it was in fact exported. Congress by this act imposed a tax on it, which the Constitution in positive terms prohibited. There was a reason for this prohibition on Congress. It was intended to prevent Congress from favoring the articles of production in one section rather than another. In a very able speech on this question, made in this House in 1887, Mr. MCRAE quoted from Mr. Ellsworth on this subject in the debates in the convention. I beg to reproduce that quotation here:

> There are solid reasons against Congress taxing exports. First, it will discourage industry, as taxes on imports discourage luxury. Secondly, the produce of different States is such as to prevent uniformity in such taxes. There are indeed but a few articles that could be taxed at all, as tobacco, rice, and indigo, and a tax on them alone would be partial and unjust. Thirdly, the taxing of exports would engender incurable jealousies.

Judge Story, in his Commentaries on the Constitution, says the object of this clause was to prevent any possibility of applying the power to lay taxes or regulate commerce injuriously to the interests of any State so as to favor or aid another. If Congress were to lay a duty on exports from any State it might unreasonably injure or even destroy the staple productions or common articles of that State. (Story's Commentaries, section 1014.)

But the Congress of the United States found it possible to impose the onerous duty of 3 cents per pound on this article of export. If it could do this, and thus unreasonably injure this product, it could do more, and utterly destroy the cotton interests of the South.

But Congress was determined that by no possibility whatever should this cotton be exported without paying an export duty.

Section 5 of the act of 1866 reads:

> And be it further enacted, That it shall be unlawful from and after the 1st day of September, 1866, for the owner, master, supercargo, agent, or other person having charge of any vessel, or for any railroad company, or other transportation company, or for any common carrier, or other person to convey, or attempt to convey, or transport any cotton, the growth or produce of the United States, from any point in the district in which it shall have been produced, unless each bale or package thereof shall have attached to or accompanying it the proper marks or evidence of the payment of the revenue tax, etc.

Now, this cotton, five-sixths of which was not only intended to be, but was actually, exported from the country, could not be moved either by the owner, the common carrier, or any other person, unless this license fee was paid. Why, sir, Chief-Justice Marshall, in the case of Brown vs. Maryland, said that the license fee required by the State of Maryland from any man attempting to sell an article of import was a violation of that clause of the Constitution of the United States which prohibited a State from imposing a tax on imports. Here is a constitutional provision prohibiting Congress from imposing any export duty; yet this law undertakes to provide that you shall not move this cotton to the port for export until this license fee has been paid.

There is no escape from the conclusion that this was a tax on exports. You can not vary the form and change the substance. The prohibition is general; it is intended to prohibit any interference with any article of export from any State. You can not, to paraphrase the language of Chief-Justice Marshall in Brown vs. Maryland, treat the prohibition, which is general, as if it were confined to a particular mode of doing the forbidden thing.

But I must do the Congress which passed the act the justice to say that they clearly intended to be understood as imposing this tax on an article which they knew would be exported. Knowing from the past history that four-fifths or five-sixths of the cotton raised in the United States would be exported in a raw, unmanufactured condition, they nevertheless provided in the first section of the act of 1866, that no drawback shall in any case be allowed on raw or unmanufactured cotton of any tax paid thereon, when exported in the raw or unmanufactured condition.

They were determined there should be no mistake about it. This raw, unmanufactured cotton should not be exported without paying duty. There are many articles raised or manufactured in the United States, some of which are disposed of here, and others exported abroad. It would have been an easy matter to have devised some legislative plan by which cotton exported abroad should have been relieved from the payment of this duty or tax. In the case of manufactured tobacco stamps were devised as a means of separating and identifying the tobacco intended for export from that which was to be sold in the home market, and relieving it from the tax imposed by the internal-revenue act. (See 92 United States, page 375.)

There was but one way to have avoided the constitutional prohibi-

*The argument made in the House was strictly on legal and constitutional grounds. I now add here opinions of eminent publicists, showing the viciousness of taxing annual crops by the effect of tithe laws. McCulloh on Taxation, page 178, says: "Tithes practically operate as a premium on idleness, and as a heavy and constantly increasing tax on industry. They obstruct the progress of improvement, and by preventing the cultivator from deriving the entire advantage of superior skill and increased exertion, discourage his efforts, and contribute to render him indolent and indifferent."

"Tithe," says Adam Smith, page 377, "is always a great discouragement, both to the improvements of the landlord, and the cultivation of the farmer. The one can not venture to make the most important, which are generally the most expensive improvements, nor the other to rear the most valuable, which are generally, too, the most expensive crops, when the church, which lays out no part of the expense, is to share so largely in the profit."

Dr. Paley, volume 2, page 105, edition of 1819, says: "Of all institutions adverse to cultivation and improvement, none is so noxious as that of tithes. Tithes are a tax not only upon industry, but upon that industry which feeds mankind, upon that species of exertion which it is the object of all wise laws to cherish and promote."

tion against the taxation of exports. That was to have provided for the payment in the form of a drawback to the producer or owner of the amount which he might have paid on the cotton whenever the cotton was exported. As this was not done it is manifest that it was the clear intention of Congress to impose a duty on exports. Such a duty so imposed, it is needless to say, was illegal and unconstitutional.

Mr. Chairman, I fear I have detained this committee too long, but I have not detained you one moment longer than the importance of the subject demands. I make no plea on account of the impoverished condition of our people. I say that the Government has collected money under the form of taxes from the cotton States of the South, under acts which I believe I have demonstrated to be partial, special, illegal, and unconstitutional. If this be true, then the money paid has been unjustly exacted and most wrongfully collected. It has been exacted and has been collected in violation of the compromises in the Constitution which your fathers and mine made in convention assembled. Wrongfully collected, every principle of justice, of law, and the Constitution requires its return.

Mr. Chairman, an impression is abroad that the Supreme Court of the United States has pronounced an opinion on the constitutionality of the cotton tax. This is a mistake. There was a case before the court, argued in an early year after the war, in which the question of the constitutionality of the cotton tax was raised. There were but eight judges on the bench. They were equally divided on the question, and therefore no decision was made. The act imposing the tax has long since been repealed, and there is therefore now no way in which a case can be made, taken to the Supreme Court, and a decision be obtained on the constitutionality of this question.

The act imposing this tax was passed amid the passions engendered by fratricidal strife. Its constitutionality was argued before the Supreme Court without a single representative at the time from the section most deeply interested on the bench. Judges are but men. The heat arising from the flames of civil war could still be felt. Yet when the case was argued there were four of the eight judges prepared to decide that this cotton tax was an illegal and unconstitutional tax. If my argument has failed to establish the correctness of the same proposition, these circumstances can not fail to bring into your minds a deep conviction that this cotton tax was of most doubtful constitutionality. I cease to argue the question. I put to you the inquiry, will you restore a tax the legality and constitutionality of which is unquestioned and refuse at the same time the restoration of another tax which the Supreme Court of the land under such circumstances was unable to decide was unconstitutional?

Mr. ENLOE. I wish to have the amendment which I send up to the Clerk's desk read and printed in the RECORD, and to be considered at the proper time.

Mr. ENLOE'S amendment was read, as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to each State a sum equal to the amounts collected therein, respectively, as a tax or duty on raw cotton under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the supplemental and amendatory acts thereto, which sums when so credited and paid shall be accepted and held by such States to be refunded and distributed to the parties who produced the cotton and actually paid said tax, through the agency of such legal tribunals as the Legislatures of the several States may establish or empower; and it shall be held sufficient proof to entitle the claimant to recover for him to show by competent and sufficient testimony that he raised the amount of cotton upon which he claims to have paid taxes, and that he, through himself or others, paid taxes upon said amount to the Government in any year between the years 1863 and 1868, inclusive. Claimants shall have three years within which to file their claims after the several Legislatures shall have established competent tribunals or clothed existing tribunals with power to take jurisdiction and to adjudicate their claims; and all claims not filed within three years shall be forever barred. Any portion of the money that may remain in the hands of any of the States after paying all established claims shall be turned over to the custodians of the common-school fund of the several States, and be constituted a part of said fund, to be used as other school funds of the States are used.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair). The Chair understands the request of the gentleman from Tennessee to be that his amendment shall be printed in the RECORD and be considered as pending.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I understood the gentleman from Tennessee merely to ask that his amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to ask that his amendment be considered as pending.

Mr. ENLOE. My object merely is to get my amendment printed in the RECORD, so members may address themselves to it during the debate, and to have an opportunity to speak on it on Tuesday.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not object to the printing of the amendment in the RECORD, but I do object to its being considered as pending.

Mr. ENLOE. All I wish is that it shall be printed in the RECORD, to be considered if other amendments are to be offered.

Mr. CASWELL. We do not object to printing the amendment in the RECORD.

Mr. ENLOE. I ask for nothing more.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard for a few moments in regard to the question of refunding the cotton tax, and to put on record my opposition to the claim for the refunding of that tax. The main objection I see to it is this: That while the tax might have been paid by the producers of cotton at the time, it is also a fact that they received much larger prices for their cotton, and the consumers of the cotton paid that much more for it. In fact, the price of cotton was enhanced so that the producers were really benefited and gained an advantage during all of the years that the tax was levied. They received more, over and above the tax on the cotton, during the years that this tax prevailed, than they have ever received since, and if anybody suffered from the tax it was the consumers of the cotton product, and not the producers of cotton in the Southern States. So that, Mr. Chairman, even if there was an evasion or violation of the Constitution in levying the tax, as has been claimed by the gentleman from Georgia, the remedy that ought now to be applied should be applicable to the consumers of the product, and not to the men who raised it. So that to remedy the wrong is now impossible. I know some of our friends on the other side would say that this argument militates somewhat against the views and theories of some Republicans that the tariff is not a tax. But the tariff is levied upon an entirely different basis, and the same rules that are applicable to that would not apply to the cotton tax, which was necessarily a tax upon consumers, for all cotton had to pay the tax.

In regard to the refunding of the direct tax, as proposed by this bill, I confess that I seriously question the policy of doing so. I do not like the policy of the Government levying a tax of twenty millions of dollars and paying 15 per cent. for collecting it, and then going to work after the money has been expended in collecting it and paying it all back. I think, as a rule, it would be a decidedly bad policy, and I confess I have great hesitation in voting for this bill, but shall do so in obedience to the very general desire of my constituents. I am also afraid that should it be refunded it will be a source of great annoyance to future Legislatures of my State, for the people who paid the tax will be inclined to regard the State as their trustee, and will want the money paid them in person. I make this statement, Mr. Chairman, in order that I shall be perfectly understood in the vote I shall cast upon this question.

Mr. BLAND. It is one of the instances in which the consumer pays the tax, is it?

Mr. KERR. Yes; the cotton tax was.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise only to submit a few remarks, for I do not expect to enter into a discussion of all the propositions which were so eloquently and forcibly laid down by my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], who, whether he has a good or a bad cause, always argues it so well that every one who listens to him can not fail to be thoroughly entertained, and who never fails to give us a great amount of valuable information and the best kind of logic, no matter how hard a road he has to travel so far as the merits of his case are concerned.

I shall confine myself to a single remark, for there is but one thing that I wish to say in this connection, and that is, that there is no comparison whatever between the cotton tax and the tax which we propose to refund by this bill. The cotton tax was levied, and all who produced the cotton paid the tax. There is no complaint here that anybody held back and did not pay his share of the tax. It was uniformly collected. There is nobody in default about it. If the cotton tax fell upon one section of the country rather than upon another section, it was simply because the cotton was produced in one section and could not be in another.

Mr. BARNES. That is the reason it was levied.

Mr. MILLIKEN. And the same reason would apply to the tobacco tax. One section of the country produces that, and the other sections do not, or to a very limited extent. Is that any reason for refunding that tax? You might apply the doctrine of my friend to the entire internal-revenue tax. Take the tax upon whisky, for instance. My State is not taxed. Why? Because it produces no whisky. The tax upon beer does not apply to the State of Maine, because we produce none. Certain sections of the country produce it; they pay the tax upon it; it happens that it falls upon certain localities, but is that any reason for refunding the tax?

But, Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration has a very much wider and broader scope. This tax was laid upon all the States of the Union. It was levied for the purpose of meeting the great expenditures of money at that time rendered necessary by the existing civil war between the States; and a part of the States obeyed the law and paid the tax. To use a common phrase, they put their portions into the pot. Another part of the States paid either none of the tax or only a portion of it. This tax was made to bear equally upon all of the States. Now it seems to me to be a proposition as clear as the light of day, and one which can not be evaded by any constitutional discussion, or by anything else, that either one of two things should occur—either the States which failed to pay the whole of the tax, failed to come up to the requirements of the law, failed to put their portion in, and failed to pay their share of the tax, should now come up and pay it in full, or else that the States that did pay the tax should have it refunded to them.

The position of my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] is this—and I have great regard for him, but it amounts simply to this—that while he would not have his State come up and pay its portion of the tax, at the same time he would be willing to have it reap its portion of the fruits derived from those who did pay the tax.

That is what there is of the question. That is all there is in it, and when my friend comes and introduces, as an amendment, a provision to pay the cotton tax back, somebody else will propose to pay the whisky tax, and somebody else will want to pay the tobacco tax. That will involve the whole matter, and it is simply to escape from a plain, square meeting of the question whether those who failed to pay shall come up and pay their portion, or else those who did pay shall have their portion paid back; and that he who did not pay shall not himself partake of the value of that which was paid by others. It is simply a proposition as to whether justice or injustice shall be done.

Mr. OATES. Defeat the bill and pay none.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Oh, we will not defeat the bill; we will pass the bill if we get votes enough.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, there are a greater number of gentlemen opposed to this bill ready to speak than there are of those who favor it. It occurs to me that it would not be quite fair for the opponents of the bill to go on and speak to-day and consume their half of the time, and the advocates of the bill to have all day Tuesday to reply. I suggest, then, in fairness, that the time be equally divided each day. If the advocates of the bill do not want to consume any time to-day, why those who are ready to speak in opposition can go on now. All I want about it is perfect fairness, and I presume my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] does not want any more than that.

Mr. CASWELL. I do not think there will be any trouble about it.

Mr. OATES. I simply want to call the attention of the House to that.

Mr. CASWELL. I see no objection to the suggestion.

Mr. OATES. I ask, by unanimous consent, that that be the agreement; that the time be equally divided each day between those who desire to advocate the bill and those who are opposed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to arrange it in that way, according to custom.

Mr. OATES. According to custom, I believe the time is to be equally divided. I only ask that it be equally divided each day.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to do so.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman from Alabama approve of a motion that the committee rise now for the balance of this day?

Mr. OATES. Oh, no. There are others ready to address the committee. You see the order of the House limits this discussion to a certain length of time, and there are a greater number of opponents of the bill who wish to speak than there are of the advocates. That is certainly the case to-day. But the opponents of the bill do not want to consume this entire day, and the advocates of it all day Tuesday. That is not fair.

Mr. CASWELL. I think there is no objection to the understanding that the time shall be equally divided each day, and if other gentlemen prepared to speak can go on, they can do so this afternoon. If not, those on this side can go on. We will have no trouble about that.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration proposes to credit and pay back to the several States and Territories all sums of money collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

The large sum of money carried by this bill, as well as the grave constitutional question involved, are sufficient reasons why this measure should receive careful consideration by every member upon this floor. The bill provides that the General Government pay to the several States and Territories certain sums of money. This language would seem to imply that the relation of debtor and creditor exists.

If the tax collected under the act of 1861 was constitutional and legal, those who paid it, whether as States or individuals, have no valid claim against the General Government, and the General Government is under no legal obligation to the States or Territories on account of the imposition and collection of said tax. What court or constitutional lawyer has ever doubted the constitutionality of the tax act of 1861? I know of none. It must, therefore, follow that the language of the bill is illogical, and by implication seeks to declare a legal right which does not exist. If the General Government does not owe, and if the States and Territories, as well as individuals, have no right to demand this sum of money, then it must follow that this is an effort by the General Government to donate to the States and Territories more than $17,000,000. We learn from the sayings and conduct of those who established the General Government and who framed the Federal Constitution that the States delegated certain powers to the General Government, which are enumerated in the Federal Constitution, and we maintain that among all the grants of power, as well as the objects contemplated by them, no authority can be found in the Constitution for such legislation as is proposed by this bill.

In the debates which were had at the time the Constitution was adopted it will appear that for a time it was contended that no power should be conferred upon the General Government to levy and collect taxes, but that the same should be reserved to the States, and many contended that this was the most dangerous of all powers; that the purse and sword would go together, and that this would enable the rich and strong to grow richer and do this by oppressing the poor. Were the words then spoken prophetic? If we are to engage in such legislation as this, what is it we can not claim to do under the Constitution?

Our Federal compact has stood the test of an hundred years. It is "hoary with age and venerable with wisdom." It has laid the foundation upon which has been erected the grandest republic known among all the civilized nations of the earth. Shall we now ruthlessly disregard its sacred limitations? I most solemnly protest. While it may suit the convenience of some or subserve the partisan purposes of others to pass this bill, I trust that a majority of the members upon this floor, inspired by feelings of patriotism, will rise above party and with a fixed purpose for the maintenance of constitutional right vote against this measure.

Our friends on the other side of the Chamber contend that, as only part of the tax imposed by the act of 1861 was collected, they are now, after a quarter of a century has elapsed, justified in taking a sum of money from the Treasury of the United States and paying it over to the States or individuals from whom taxes were collected in 1861. There is no force whatever in this argument. If a State or municipality imposes and collects a tax for a legitimate purpose, and by omission or other cause fails to collect from some person subject to taxation, will it be contended that such omission to enforce a law will justify a State or municipality in paying a sum of money to those from whom taxes were legally collected? And in this connection let it be borne in mind, if we have the power to take seventeen millions of money from the Treasury and pay it out under this bill, it must necessarily follow that we have the power to levy a new tax in order to raise money to meet the necessities created by this bill. And who would for a moment contend that we have such authority? If the friends of this measure contend that this bill should be enacted into law because it tends to equalize burdens heretofore imposed by the Government, then it would logically follow that all taxes heretofore assessed or imposed which were excessive or burdensome should be returned.

And if we are to enter upon this class of legislation, why not commence with the tax act of 1789, or with the expenses incurred by the war of 1812, and especially give attention to the discriminations made by the bank deposit of 1835, when it is well known that the amounts received by some of the States have never been returned, and I call attention to a notable case, that of the cotton tax of 1866. A more invidious and oppressive tax than this was never imposed by the despotic governments of the Old World.

This tax, I fear, was imposed in a spirit of oppression; and, in many cases, collected in a spirit of mendacity. I think this statement entirely justifiable when we remember what was the true condition of the country when this tax law was enforced. The South had emerged from one of the most sanguinary struggles known in all history. The face of the land was scarred with new-made graves; the curling smoke of the invaders' torch had scarcely been dissipated; the widow's wail and orphan's cry were heard upon every hill-top and in every vale; want and desolation were seen and felt on every hand; the Federal Government, dominated by the Republican party, imposed a tax upon one Southern product and from it collected into the Treasury about $68,000,000.

By the common consent of mankind I am sure this is regarded as one of the most oppressive and iniquitous taxes ever imposed. Its constitutionality was called in question, and when the question was presented to a Republican Supreme Court, consisting of eight members, they were equally divided in opinion. This tax law was so odious that by the force of public opinion it was soon swept from the statute-books; and notwithstanding all this when appeals have been made to a Republican Congress to have this money thus collected returned to its rightful owners all such appeals, if not spurned, have been treated with indifference. A Republican Congress has ever failed to see that equalization was needed here.

My friend from Alabama, Colonel OATES, has given notice that he will offer an amendment to the bill under consideration directing that this cotton tax be returned to those who paid it, and I shall watch with deepest solicitude the conduct and votes of the friends of this direct-tax bill when they come to vote on this amendment. Will not those who vote in favor of this tax bill be committed to a line of policy which will impel them to vote for this amendment, and if they should vote against the amendment will not their conduct be not only inconsistent but stultify every sense of propriety?

Gentlemen, in the name and in the behalf of the almost impoverished farmers of the Southland from whom you collected this tax, I appeal to your sense of justice and right and demand that this ill-gotten money be returned. If you can rise above party and return this cotton tax, then shall we have convincing proof that the passions of 1861–'65 have well-nigh died out, and that it is your desire that a spirit of fraternity and good-will shall dwell within all our borders. Much more might be said with reference to this cotton tax, but my friend from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] has made an argument touching this matter which is unanswered and in my opinion unanswerable. I therefore beg to call attention to additional reasons why the bill under consideration should not become a law.

The late war has cost more than $6,000,000,000; the burdens which it imposed were necessarily unequal. Will the precedent created by the passage of this bill be urged hereafter as a reason why we should undertake to equalize the expenses incurred by the late war? Who can tell?

Not many years ago the Congress of the United States passed an income-tax law, and under its provisions many thousands of dollars were collected, and mostly from one portion of the country; and how long will it be before those who paid that tax (encouraged by the passage of this bill) will be making appeals to Congress to have the income-tax returned? Standing here to-day I would sound this note of warning: Let the friends of this measure stop and think how dangerous must be the consequences which must necessarily follow the adoption of this measure.

Aside from the insurmountable constitutional objections to this bill, it contains provisions which will necessarily lead to inevitable confusion, and for this reason is most objectionable. Take its application to the State of Georgia as an illustration. Under the act of 1861 there was collected from the individual citizens of Georgia about $83,000, ranging in sums from 50 cents to $20. By the provisions of this bill this fund is to be held by the governor of Georgia in trust for the term of six years, so as to allow parties to present their claims; and at the end of six years that part of the fund unclaimed is to belong to the State.

The governor is not a bonded officer, and his term of office does not extend through six years. The State of Georgia never paid any part of this tax, and suppose at the end of six years $40,000 of this fund should be unclaimed (as no doubt most of those who paid this tax are either dead or removed to other States), upon what principle of law or equity can it be insisted that $40,000 or any other sum of money should be taken from the Treasury of the United States and donated to Georgia when it is not claimed that the State ever paid one dollar of this tax?

The truth is that the whole scheme contained in this direct-tax bill reduced to its last analysis is nothing more nor less than an effort to take from the Treasury of the United States money collected from the people and make a donation of the same. Every lawyer, every writer on constitutional law, as well as every writer on the power of taxation, knows and has often declared that this Government has no power or authority legally to raise a sum of money by taxation or otherwise for the purpose of making a donation. This is boldly and baldly an effort to perform an act based upon the principle that "might makes right." Let those who participate in such conduct remember that the people whose money you are attempting wrongfully to dispose of will hold you to an account; you will be tried before the bar of public opinion; and while public opinion does not execute it can execrate.

Mr. Chariman, if it were not for the fact that we have an overflowing Treasury, I doubt very much whether this measure would ever have been presented to this House for consideration. It constitutes one of the many schemes which have been devised to deplete the Treasury, so as to charge a Democratic administration with prodigality, and at the same time prevent any reduction of taxation. I denounce this measure as unwise legislation. It is not warranted by the Constitution. As a precedent it is dangerous; as a party measure it is most pernicious; as an equitable claim it is unjust; as based upon legal right it is a monstrosity.

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Chairman, I know of no one on this side of the House who desires to take part in the discussion to-day, and if there are no gentlemen on the other side who wish to be heard, I shall move that the committee do now rise. If there is any one, however, who is prepared to proceed, I shall be very glad to have him occupy the time now.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped to hear something from the advocates of this bill explanatory of a proposition which is certainly novel in its character, and I believe for the first time in the history of this country made upon the presentation of the pending bill. But it appears that there are no gentlemen upon the other side of the Chamber among the many gentlemen who favor the measure, who are prepared to give a reason for the extraordinary proposition which is now presented, to take from the Treasury of the United States the back taxes paid by the States of this Union to be distributed among the several States of the Union by which they were paid.

I do not wonder, sir, that there should be no one to defend such a proposition. I say that it is a novel one. It is one which, so far as I am aware, has never yet been presented up to the present time in the history of our country.

As has been well said by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who makes the minority report from the Judiciary Committee, in his challenge to the opposition to say under what clause of the Constitution this power is assumed by the Congress of the United States, there does not exist in the general grant of power to levy taxes any power to take back the taxes which have once been paid into the public Treasury; for if that power does exist under the general clause of the Constitution which grants to the Congress of the United States as the legislative department of the Government the power to levy taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the public debts and provide for the common defense and the general welfare of the United States—I say if there is any power in this grant of the Constitution to impose a tax, who is prepared to argue that under that same clause in the Constitution the power exists to take taxes already paid out of the public Treasury to be refunded?

That is the proposition, the naked, distinct, unequivocal proposition of this bill: to put the hand of the authors of this bill, or the beneficiaries of this bill, into the public Treasury and to take back the taxes, money already paid under the law, and divide it among the several States. And upon what ground, sir, is it proposed to be done? I say the clause of the Constitution which authorizes it can not be pointed out.

Mr. Chairman, the power of taxation is the most tyrannous power with which any government can possibly be invested, and we are all familiar with the fact that when our ancestors had emerged from the successful struggle for liberty, the Revolutionary war, the rebellion against the mother country, and were prepared to found a government of their own, in adopting the confederate form of government, the confederation of the States, they absolutely declined in that constitution first adopted after the war of the rebellion to concede the power of taxation to the Federal Government at all; and in the debates in the convention which framed the Constitution under which we now live, as well as the debates in the several State conventions, upon the question of the adoption or the rejection of the Constitution, the gravest question which was discussed, both in the general convention and the conventions of the respective States, was that of conceding to the General Government the power of taxation.

It was well said by a distinguished gentleman whose remarks I have just read, in the debates in the New York State convention, that to concede the power of taxation to the Federal Government upon all subjects and upon all kinds of property would be to have two legislatures imposing taxation upon the States, and a necessary conflict of jurisdiction between them. I have said, sir, in the first government established after the war of the Revolution the concession of the power of taxation was refused to the Federal Government.

But experience demonstrated the fact that thirteen different Legislatures of the thirteen different States were ill prepared to lay a tax for the support of the General Government. The consequence was that under the Articles of Confederation the quotas of the several States, as called for by the Federal Government, were not furnished to the General Government; and the great argument made in the convention of the General Government, as well as in the conventions of the different States, for the grant of power of taxation to the Federal Government was that the States would not levy the tax, and the quota required from each State would thus not be forthcoming when the necessities of the Government should require it.

It was the force of this argument that impelled the framers of the Constitution, with guarded language, to concede for the first time the power to the Federal Government to levy taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, and they tried to guard the grant of that power, sir, by the terms of the Constitution enumerated in this grant, that it should only be exercised for three purposes, namely, to pay the public debt, to provide for the common defense, and the general welfare of the country. It is true that in the concluding clause of this paragraph of the Constitution the power to pass all laws needful for carrying into effect the power thus conceded to the Federal Government was also given to Congress, but it went no further.

I repeat, therefore, that both in the debates in the general convention that adopted the Constitution as well as in the debates in all the States on the question of its adoption or rejection by the States (because it provided in its own terms that it was to become the constitution over the States when nine of the original thirteen States should have ratified it in their conventions, and then, Mr. Chairman, only to become a constitution over the States which ratified it and none others), it was required that this power conceded to the General Government of taxation be for the purposes I have enumerated, and none others.

That concession was made for the reasons I have indicated, but this bill proposes to take back a portion of a tax imposed on lands by the act of 1861 out of the common Treasury of the United States and divide it among the States, confiding it to the executives of the respective States in trust for a period of six years to be handed back to the persons from whom it was originally derived.

Mr. Chairman, where now are the people who paid it? The theory upon which this bill proceeds is that you are going to refund this money, to give it back to those people who paid it. They will not be found easily, and yet this bill proposes to take from the Treasury all of this money derived by the taxing power of the Government, and paid by each individual tax-payer in the respective States where it was collected, and give it back to the States and not to the individuals, for I apprehend the individuals will not be found.

Where is the power to do it? I have said that nowhere in the Constitution is it conceded. The power to levy taxes, duties, imposts, and excises is conceded; but nowhere, by construction or otherwise, can you evoke from the Constitution or any phrase or paragraph in it the power to take out of the common Treasury taxes that have already been paid, unless they have been illegally or unconstitutionally paid.

If this tax, therefore, was levied by the Congress of the United States in 1861 and thus paid into the Treasury of the United States, by what authority can you take it out now and hand it back to the States? And if you can do it—as has well been said by my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES]—if you can do it with reference to one species of taxation, why can not you do it with reference to all? If you can do it upon the principle of equalizing taxation among the people of this country, then you can give back and equalize the tax for the war of 1812, and you can go back still further and equalize the taxes of the war of the Revolution itself. What limit is there, sir, to this power of Congress to equalize taxes if the power exists in regard to this particular and specific tax? Where, then, is the limit; where is the restraint? You will find it nowhere; but it will give unlimited power to any future Congress to go back and equalize every tax which is being paid into the Treasury to-day under any of the internal-revenue taxes of the country, which are direct taxes.

Is it not, therefore, an assertion of power which does not exist under the Constitution, and the setting of a precedent, Mr. Chairman, that will be dangerous in the extreme if this bill should become law? There is no limit to it. There was a tax, sir, imposed upon incomes during the late unfortunate war between the States. That is a species of taxation which the great parliamentarian of England said in regard to all direct taxation, was the most just of all, but which you long since repealed, because the prediction of Mr. Williams, in the speech he made in the New York convention adopting the Constitution, has been fulfilled; for he said that if this power of taxation was granted, this Government would become a government of the wealthy men of the country, and the power of taxation would be exercised in their behalf.

Have we not reached a consummation of that prediction made by this gentleman in the convention of New York? The income tax has long since been repealed. There may be many who did not pay the income tax. That very portion of the country which you say did not pay a part of this direct land tax did not pay income tax, and I raise a note of warning here to-day that if you pass this bill in regard to the refunding of this direct tax it will not be long before it will be said that that portion of country which by reason of the war could not be reached and where the tax-gatherer could not go to collect the income tax, ought to pay its fair proportion of that tax.

And if you can go back to that tax, then you can go back to every other, and the dangerous precedent will be set of the Congress of the United States investing itself, outside of the Constitution, with authority conferred neither by the terms of the instrument nor by necessary implication to carry into effect granted power, and you will have an example set of going back to equalize any taxation that the majority of Congress may think, in their judgment, ought to be equalized. I call the attention of gentlemen upon the opposite side and warn them that if this measure shall become law, there will be no end to corrections of what may be called unequal taxation.

It will be extended back to other species of taxation that you can say have been paid in one portion of the country and not in another. I do not like, Mr. Chairman, to go outside of the very question which the bill itself presents. This is simply a question of the power of Congress by an act to go into the Treasury of the United States and take out tax money paid a quarter of a century ago for the purpose of dividing it between the States themselves in trust for the people who paid it. If, as I have said, you can do this in reference to this tax, then you can do it with reference to all. And why should it not be done with reference to all? If at any future time it shall be said any species of taxation has operated unequally upon this country, why shall you not make a proposition to take the money from the Treasury and divide it?

Suppose that the unjust and excessive taxation under which the country has been groaning for years had not been imposed upon it, suppose there were now no surplus, would the honorable gentleman who represents the majority of the committee that reported this bill dare to propose that a tax should be imposed on the people for the purpose of returning the money which is alleged to have been unequally paid in this case? And, yet, if you possess the power to take the money out of the Treasury and divide it amongst the people who paid this tax, upon the ground that there are others who did not pay it, why would you not have the power to levy a tax to raise money for the same purpose? Yet I venture to assert that the honorable members of the committee who favor this bill would hardly dare propose that a law should now be enacted for the purpose of levying a tax to repay taxation unjustly or unequally collected from the people. Nevertheless the principle in both cases is the same.

I repeat, if the power exists to pay out the money which is in the Treasury now and devote it to this purpose, then the power exists to levy a new tax to make this repayment. And if that is the case you may introduce a law to make uniform the income tax which was at one time imposed in this country; and so with regard to every other form of direct taxation under the excise laws, the taxes operating upon wine, spirits, beer, brandy, tobacco, and every other article that was a subject of such taxation.

But, Mr. Chairman, the power does not exist to take the money out of the Treasury for this purpose. The pretext on the face of this bill is that you are going to return the money to the persons who paid it, but that is only a pretext. You know that you will never do that; you know that it is incapable of being done; you know that not one in a thousand of the men who paid this tax will be beneficiaries under this bill if it shall become a law. You know that the money will go to the States for the purpose of being appropriated, after the expiration of your trust period of six years, in the discretion of the State Legislatures, and thus a precedent will be set by which the most dangerous legislation that can possibly be imagined may be enacted by the Congress of the United States.

It was well said, sir, by that great judge, Chief-Justice Marshall, in an early case decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, the case of The State of Maryland vs. McCullough, that the power of taxation was the most tyrannous power that any government could be intrusted with, and that it might be used to destroy; and if those who feel an interest in this question will examine the debates in the various State conventions, and especially in the great State of New York, they will find that the argument against the policy of conceding the power of taxation to the Federal Government was predicated upon the idea that the power of taxation might, in the language of Chief-Justice Marshall, be used to destroy.

To-day, if this bill becomes a law, there will be no restraint upon the legislative power to impose hundreds of millions of dollars of taxes such as have been imposed within the last quarter of a century not needed for any legitimate purposes of government, not needed for any purpose of honest and economical administration. The prediction of the debater in the convention of New York, Mr. Williams, will be verified, and I say that the history of this country now demonstrates that the Government of the United States exercising the taxing power upon the theory of this bill, holds the power of the purse and may lay taxes to the absolute destruction of the people of this country.

The debater in the New York convention reminded that body that, if the power of laying taxes without limit was conceded to the Federal Government, the power of the sword ever accompanied the power of the purse, and that the Government, which had an unlimited right to levy taxes, would have an unlimited right to raise armies and to arm and equip them, and thus the free Government of the United States would be clothed with a power as dangerous, as despotic, as autocratic in its character as that possessed by the most powerful despotism of the Old World.

There is no one now, I presume, who would contend that the power of taxation should be used in that way; but where is the limit? How are you going to restrict it? The discretion and conscience of the legislator will be the only restriction if you are going to set this precedent of "equalizing" taxation in this manner. It has been well said by my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES]—better said than I can say it—that if you are going to equalize taxation at all, certainly you ought not to begin with a tax which everybody concedes was legally and constitutionally laid, legally and constitutionally collected, legally and constitutionally expended.

If you are going to equalize taxation on principles of common justice, honesty, and equity, you ought to begin with those taxes which, as conceded by the common consent of mankind and the judgment of every fair-minded man, have been illegally and unconstitutionally laid. Sir, while the war was going on, in 1861, and even after the war had terminated, by amendments to the original law, the Congress of the United States selected a particular article produced in the Southern States alone, the article of cotton, and levied a tax of 3 cents a pound upon it.

If the Government of the United States possessed the power to levy this taxation in time of war, there can be no man so bold as to assert that it possessed it in time of peace, after the war had closed. If in time of peace the Congress of the United States can levy a tax upon a product of any one particular region of the country, then, as has been well said by my learned friend from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], you may levy a similar tax upon all other products; and if you may do this, then the power of taxation may indeed be said to be, in the language of Chief-Justice Marshall, the power of destruction. What authority or right has the Government of the United States to go into a State, seize upon a particular product of the soil and make it the subject of taxation?

Sir, we had direct taxation for a brief period only after the war of the Revolution; that law continued in force for only a year, having been swept off the statute-book in 1801. In 1812 we again resorted to that form of taxation, but in five years it passed away. During our late war direct taxation was again resorted to in 1861 and 1862; and much of that taxation has been swept away, though some portion still remains upon the statute-book. It was in 1861–'62 that the tax on cotton was originally imposed; but in 1866, when the war had terminated, Congress passed another law on this subject, still more punitive in its character than the original act itself, selecting a single product of a particular region of the country and subjecting it to onerous and oppressive taxation.

A case arising in the United States court at Memphis which presented the question of the constitutionality of this tax went to the Supreme Court of the United States, but unfortunately for the country, unfortunately for the Constitution, unfortunately for the liberties of the tax-payers, this court was equally divided upon the question; and under the rule which prevails alike in the Supreme Court and in the State tribunals of last resort, the equal division of the court amounts to an affirmance of the judgment of the inferior tribunal. Thus there was a failure to obtain from the Supreme Court an authoritative determination of the question of the constitutionality of the cotton tax. The judgment of the court below stood as the judgment of the higher court, so far as the parties in interest in that litigation were concerned.

But to-day there lies in the Treasury of the United States $68,000,000, collected under that law which certainly could not commend itself to the gentlemen who advocate this measure upon the doctrine of equality, justice, honesty, and fair dealing—collected from the people of the Southern States at a time when they were scarcely able to bear any taxes. We were just recovering from the devastating effects of a great war between the States; we were struggling to place ourselves again in a position in which our people could earn a livelihood, to keep body and soul together, to support their wives and little ones; we were struggling to rehabilitate our States; we were struggling to emerge from a condition of poverty to which no other people have ever been reduced, and which no other people have ever borne with the fortitude, the manliness, and I may say the womanliness with which our people in the South bore their condition. It was then that you imposed this cotton tax which the amendment of my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] proposes to refund. You imposed it after the war as well as during the war. After awhile you repealed it. Why was it repealed? Was it from a returning sense of justice and conscience on the part of those who had imposed it? If it was a right tax, a necessary tax, a constitutional tax, why was it not maintained? Ah, you dared not continue it. Why? Because the very same principle which you invoked when you unjustly and iniquitously laid this tax upon that product would authorize a tax upon the wheat in the fields of the West and the North, and upon every product of your farms. I presume it was the returning sense of justice, the reproach of conscience against that unjust, oppressive, and onerous tax which induced the Congress of the United States to repeal it.

Now, if you intend to commence the return of taxes which have been unequally, unjustly, unconstitutionally imposed, my friend from Alabama properly invites you to begin with this unjust taxation which you imposed upon the cotton farmers of the South during and immediately after the war. You derived from that taxation $68,000,000, lying in your Treasury to-day. Will you not submit to the Supreme Court of the United States the question whether that money has been placed there rightly or not? Will you deny such an appeal? Will the friends of this measure now refuse to permit the court of last resort, the court to whose adjudications we all bow in ready obedience, to pass upon this great constitutional question?

There is one tribunal in this country that is the repository of the safety and the liberties of the citizen. No great standing armies are necessary in the United States of America to protect our liberty and our independence; we have merely the skeleton of an army in time of peace; but there is one tribunal, the tribunal of law, which regulates liberty by law and which adjudges all constitutional questions; and to the decisions of that tribunal the citizens all over the land bow in obedience.

When that tribunal decided after the late unfortunate conflict between the States regarding the first thing they had to do, as they were bound to do, as they were coerced to do, was to recognize the great principle of home rule and community independence, which lies at the foundation and is the corner-stone of our constitutional Union, and in accordance with that great principle that great tribunal decided this was an indissoluble Union composed of indestructible States. And hence when they made that decision every man in the United States of America from Maine to California bowed in obedience to the rule of law proclaimed by the tribunal of last resort.

If you will not take as an amendment to this bill the proposition of my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES] and allow that court to decide on the constitutionality of your cotton tax, if you will not adopt it as an amendment to this bill, then will you dare to refuse the proposition he makes to give to that oppressed and tax-ridden section of our country, reduced by the disasters of war, at least the right to have the decision and adjudication of that court of last resort upon the propriety of returning the $68,000,000 you now hold in your Treasury?

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but my friend from Alabama proposes an amendment to this novel and extraordinary bill, to test the sincerity of the men who advocated it on the ground of justice, equity, and fair dealing. He proposes that you shall allow another fund called "the captured and abandoned property fund," which originally amounted to $35,000,000, collected from the Southern States after the war, and the cotton sold by the firm of Drexel & Co. in the great city of Philadelphia, and which, after taking out what the collectors of the tax took to defray expenses, left $34,000,000—to let the Supreme Court of the United States decide whether the cotton thus sold, making up a fund never to be mingled with the other funds in the Treasury of the United States, but to remain there as a fund liable to be called for by the people who owned the cotton at the time when the Government took it and sold it and put the proceeds into the Treasury—will you refuse, I ask, to accept that proposition and let the Supreme Court decide whether the act was constitutional or not?

The gentleman from Alabama proposes that as an amendment to this bill, which you on every principle of equity, justice, and fair dealing ought to accept. He proposes you shall give to every man who owns a part of that captured and abandoned property fund the right to go into the tribunals of the Government and establish his right to it and obtain judgment for it.

It was well said by that man whom I cherish in my memory with as much regard and affection as I do any of the distinguished men who lived before my time in our history—it was said by the late Justice Story, of Massachusetts, long before you created the Court of Claims, with its small, qualified jurisdiction—I remember to have heard him say that while in the most despotic government in the Old World a citizen, however humble he might be, had the right to walk into the tribunals of that government and sue it and compel it to pay his just claims, it was a shame and disgrace to the greatest and freest government on earth that there was no tribunal in which a citizen of the United States could present his claim and ask to be heard in its maintenance. To a limited extent you have removed that shame from the country by clothing the Court of Claims with limited jurisdiction. Why should not every citizen of the United States have the right to enter the tribunals of the Government and establish his claim against the Government and have it paid?

And what argument can you make against the proposition of my friend from Alabama to allow this remnant of the fund, magnificent in its proportions, which you took from the Southern people after the war and put in the Treasury—what reason can you give, what conscience to deny the rights of the citizens to go to your own tribunal and prove simply that what is there belongs to them, especially when the Supreme Court has declared it constitutes a sacred fund to remain there forever until paid to the people entitled to it?

I have spoken longer than I intended upon this question, Mr. Chairman, but there seemed to be none upon the other side who desired to be heard, and with the permission of the committee to extend in the RECORD, with a view to copying some expressions of others upon the subject whose judgment is better than my own, I leave the question for the further consideration of the committee. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied thirty-seven minutes of his time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD two amendments to be offered to the bill at the proper time.

Mr. CASWELL. To be printed for information only.

There was no objection.

The amendments of Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, are as follows:

Amend by adding the following section:

"SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to the State of Illinois a sum equal to the amount of 2 per cent of the net proceeds of the lands sold by authority of Congress after January 1, 1819, within said State of Illinois."

Amend by adding the following sections:

"SEC. —. That for the purpose of raising the money herein appropriated in the foregoing section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid during the year 1889 upon the annual gains, profits, or income of every person residing or owning property in the United States, and of every banking company, trust company, savings institutions, insurance, gas, bridge, express, telegraph, steam-boat, ferry-boat, canal, manufacturing, navigation, or railroad company or corporation, whether derived from any profession, trade, employment, business, or vocation carried on in the United States or elsewhere, or from any other source whatever, if such annual gains, profits, or income exceed the sum of $25,000, a duty of 3 per cent. on such annual gains, profits, or income over and above said sum of $25,000; and upon the annual gain, profits, or income, rents, and dividends accruing upon any property, security, and stocks owned in the United States by any citizen of the United States residing abroad and not in the employment of the United States, and by every foreigner, there shall be levied and collected a duty of 1 per cent. additional to the rates above imposed.

"SEC. —. That in estimating said annual gains, profits, or incomes, all other State and local taxes lawfully assessed upon the property or other sources of income from which said annual gains, profits, and incomes are or should be derived shall be first deducted; and the duty or income tax herein provided for shall be assessed and collected upon the income for the year ending the 31st day of December next preceding the time for levying and collecting said duty; that is to say, on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1889.

"SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to adopt and prescribe such rules and regulations as will enable him to carry into effect this act."

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. All points of order are reserved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, the Senate bill which I send to the desk was incorrectly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It does not refer to the late war.

The SPEAKER. The title will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander.

Mr. LANE. I ask to have this bill referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the reason that the Committee on Pensions have reported a similar bill, which is now on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

And then, on motion of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky (at 3 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. BOUTELLE: A bill (H. R. 11652) granting a pension to Mary E. Wadleigh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHIPMAN: A bill (H. R. 11653) to restore Thomas J. Spencer to rank of captain—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11654) to restore Thomas J. Spencer to certain brevet rank—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. COMPTON: A bill (H. R. 11655) to amend an act giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac Railroad, in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H. R. 11656) for the relief of pressmen employed in the Government Printing Office—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 11657) to pension Henry Klockenbring—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of Abraham Flener, of Monroe County, Arkansas, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of the publishers of the Muncie (Ind.) Herald, against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CANNON: Remonstrance of H. J. Dunlop, of Champaign, Ill., and of G. F. Howard, of Paris, Ill., against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FORNEY: Petition of L. D. Agnew, administrator of James R. Dorsey, of Cherokee County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LODGE: Petition of John S. Flanagan and others, citizens of Charlestown, and of A. B. and H. R. Champlin, of Massachusetts, against Senate bill 554—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of Fannie B. Damon and Mary V. Pierce, of Maine, for the relief of Anna Ella Carroll—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES STEWART: Petition of sundry citizens of Houston, Tex., for the removal of duty on dental and surgical goods—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WASHINGTON: Petition of administrator of John Thompson, deceased, of Davidson County, Tennessee, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 7, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. RICHARD W. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois.

Mr. GEORGE W. STEELE, of Indiana.

Mr. RICHARD GUENTHER, of Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHN H. O'NEALL, of Indiana.

NAVAL MUSEUM.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, in response to a resolution from the House calling for information relative to the proposed establishment of a naval museum in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER. During the last session the House passed a Senate resolution providing for the printing of a number of copies of the report of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, and it seems that the resolution has been mislaid and was never transmitted to the Senate. If there be no objection, an order will be made directing a duplicate copy to be made, so that it may be transmitted to the Senate.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT OVER TO MONDAY.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was put, and the Speaker announced that he was unable to determine the result.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. Does that interfere with the pension session of to-night?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is when the House adjourns to-day.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Will it interfere with the debate on the direct-tax bill?

The SPEAKER. Not at all. The order was changed yesterday, substituting Tuesday for Saturday and Wednesday for Tuesday.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That was done in order to adjourn over from to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that Thursday, December 13, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in such order as the committee may designate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will indicate the character of the bills proposed to be acted upon.

Mr. DINGLEY. I hope, further, that he will make it after the consideration hour.

Mr. MCCREARY. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope that Wednesday will be set apart for the consideration of bills from the Military Committee.

Mr. MCCREARY. That will not be in order as an amendment, but as a separate proposition.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to have a day set apart for the consideration of bills from the Military Committee.

Mr. SPINOLA. If the gentleman from Kentucky will specify the bills I will not object. Otherwise I shall feel it my duty to object.

Mr. MCCREARY. The first bill that I desire to call up on that day is the Senate bill which came from the Committee on Foreign Affairs last session, which was unanimously reported to this House and is now on the Calendar, providing for the celebration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. That is the first bill; that bill has already passed the Senate. It is very important that action should be taken on that bill this session, in order that proper application may be made to the Legislatures of the various States, which will probably take such action as to participate with us.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman provide that his resolution shall specify that very bill?

Mr. MCCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPINOLA. Then I withdraw opposition.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, there are important measures now, which under the rules of the House have precedence over everything else, and which are of more importance than this, notwithstanding there is a patriotic sentiment connected with it; and I must object until that business shall have been disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa objects.

RELIEF OF WRECKED WHALING AND FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. DUNN. I ask to make a privileged report from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 5, 1888.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House what, if any, relief can be furnished by the Revenue-Cutter Service and Life-Saving Service to American whaling and fishing vessels wrecked in Bering Sea or the Arctic Ocean, and what, if any, legislation is necessary to make such relief available and effective.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INVALID PENSION BILL.

Mr. FORAN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I reserve all points of order upon that bill.

SMALLS AGAINST ELLIOTT.

Mr. CRISP. I am directed by the Committee on Elections to report back the contested-election case of Robert Smalls against William Elliott, from the Seventh district of South Carolina, and I desire to give notice that at an early day, after the report of the committee and the views of the minority shall have been printed, I shall ask the House to consider this case.

Mr. ROWELL. On behalf of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LYMAN], I ask leave to present the views of the minority, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE REPORT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the year ending June 30, 1888, in two octavo volumes, 16,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LANHAM. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. This being Friday, the regular order is the call of the committees for reports on bills of a private nature.

Mr. LANHAM. I move to dispense with the call of the committees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered that at the last session, toward the close of the session, we adopted a plan, by common consent, whereby on Fridays the roll of members was called in alphabetical order, and gentlemen, as their names were called, were each allowed to call up a bill for consideration, which was considered unless objected to by five members. That rule operated somewhat to the satisfaction of the House, and I desire now to take the sense of the House as to the continuation of that plan of procedure during the remainder of this session. Accordingly I have prepared and will send to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I ask to have considered at the present time.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That when the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar upon this Friday and future Fridays of this session, the order of procedure shall be for the Clerk to call the roll of members in alphabetical order, beginning where the call ended at the last session, and that each member, when his name is reached in the call, shall be permitted to call up for consideration on the Private Calendar one bill, other than a pension bill, and the same may be considered by the Committee of the Whole House unless five members shall object to such consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. KILGORE. I object.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would ask the Chair how far we had proceeded with the call. I suppose the names of the gentlemen who object have been already reached and passed.

The SPEAKER. That call takes place in the Committee of the Whole, where the present occupant of the chair does not preside, and therefore he is unable to answer the question. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]?

Mr. SPINOLA. I reserve the right to object, unless the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] objects.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] has objected, as the Chair understands.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to inquire whether the objection comes from a gentleman whose name has already been reached in the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that he is unable to answer that question.

Mr. CLARDY. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] whether he proposes to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not.

Mr. KILGORE. I want to say that my name has never been called on this Calendar, and I hope it never will be while I am a member of Congress. I never want to have a private claim; I never have had one; and I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman's name was reached and he called up the bill to charter the Nicaragua Canal Company. I was in the chair at the time.

Mr. LANHAM. Do I understand that my colleague [Mr. KILGORE] objects to the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman [Mr. KILGORE] has objected several times.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. There is no point of order to be made. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] asked unanimous consent, and the resolution requires unanimous consent, which has not been given.

Mr. LANHAM. I will state to my colleague that the resolution the adoption of which I have just asked provides that if five members object to the consideration of any bill it shall not be considered.

Mr. KILGORE. If the resolution were modified so as to provide that one objection should be sufficient——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has objected to the consideration of the resolution, and the matter is terminated.

Mr. LANHAM. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

MARITIME CANAL COMPANY OF NICARAGUA.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which comes over from last session as unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Mr. CLARDY. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would like to inquire how this bill gets to the head of the list.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill was under consideration when the House was last in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and comes up now as unfinished business. The Clerk will read the pending amendment, offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 2 after the word "company," in line 3, and add to the section the following:

"The directors hereinafter described, with the approval of the majority of the stockholders, may adopt regulations and by-laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this act; but no amendment to or change in the by-laws shall be made except by a majority vote of the stockholders, either personally or by proxy, and at a meeting held for the purpose. At least twenty days' notice of any such meeting shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the city where the principal office of the company is located."

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the bill itself has not yet been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the bill was read when under consideration at the last session.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can have the bill read by taking the floor and having it read in his own time.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, I will ask the reading of the bill in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized and demands the reading of the bill in his time. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. DINGLEY (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, has not this bill been once read?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been; but the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has taken the floor and demanded the reading of the bill in his time. The gentleman from Indiana has five minutes.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. SPINOLA (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know whether it is in order to offer amendments as the bill is now being read, or when it will be proper to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana has taken the floor in his own right for the purpose of debate, and the bill is being read as a part of his remarks. An amendment at this time would not be in order.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, which was continued until the expiration of the five minutes of Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the residue of the bill be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] is recognized, and asks that the reading of the bill be continued in his time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a question of order. Does the Chair hold that the five-minute rule is now operating? I think that I have the floor for an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair now remembers, this bill, when the committee rose on a former day, was being read for the purpose of amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule. The Chair, however, will make examination as to that point while the reading of the bill is continued.

Mr. DUNN. The Chair is correct. I was in charge of the measure at that time, and that was the order.

The Clerk continued and concluded the reading of the bill, which, with an amendment heretofore adopted by the Committee of the Whole to section 5, is as follows:

A bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua.

Whereas, to facilitate commercial intercourse by water between the Atlantic and the Pacific States as well as with foreign nations, it is deemed desirable for the public interest of the United States that a ship-canal be constructed between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, on what is known as the Nicaragua route: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That Frederick Billings, Charles P. Daly, Daniel Ammen, Francis A. Stout, Horace L. Hotchkiss, Edward F. Beale, Hiram Hitchcock, C. Ridgely

Goodwin, A. C. Cheney, J. F. O'Shaughnessy, H. C. Taylor, J. W. Miller, A. S. Crowninshield, A. G. Menocal, Charles H. Stebbins, T. Harrison Garrett, Jules Aldige, R. A. Lancaster, Alfred E. Mills, Gustav E. Kissell, Horace Fairbanks, George H. Robinson, Alfred B. Darling, Joseph E. McDonald, James Roosevelt, Christian Devries, Frederick F. Thompson, Henry A. Parr, and such other persons as may be associated with them and their successors are hereby constituted and created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law, by the name, style, and title of "The Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua," for the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean either entirely through the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua or through Nicaragua and in part through the territory of the Republic of Costa Rica, with such collateral, connecting, or cross canals as may be necessary to connect therewith, and to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua by the concession of that Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the Republic on the 20th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession; and the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, by that name shall have perpetual succession; may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, defend and be defended in all the courts of law and equity within the United States; may make and have a common seal; and shall have and possess the rights, powers, and privileges usually possessed by similar companies. It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property, or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments; may do all lawful things to secure the full enjoyment of the powers, privileges, rights, benefits, and grants contained in any canal concession so made by the Republic of Nicaragua or to be made by the Republic of Costa Rica, as aforesaid; and to aid in the construction of said canal and to carry out the purposes of this act, the said Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua is hereby authorized to issue its bonds, and to secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property of all kinds and descriptions real, personal, and mixed, including its franchise to be a corporation. The principal office of said corporation shall be in the city of New York, and all legal process may be served upon the person who may at the time be in charge of said office or upon the attorney of said company, whose name and address shall be certified by the president of the company; and such certificate shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the capital stock of said company shall consist of not less than one million shares of $100 each, with the right to increase the capital stock to two million shares of $100 each, upon the vote of two-thirds of the stock of said company at any time outstanding, which shares shall in all respects be deemed personal property and shall be transferable in such manner as the by-laws of said corporation may provide. Five incorporators, who shall be chosen by a majority of the number from those named in this act, shall have power to open books of subscription to the capital stock of said company in the city of New York, and at such other places in the United States, Nicaragua, or elsewhere as they may designate, who shall receive all subscriptions for stock; and no stock shall be transferable except upon the books of the company provided for that purpose. The said incorporators shall give thirty days' notice of the time and place of the opening of said books, by publication in one daily newspaper in New York City, and one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic. Sixty days' previous notice shall be given of the payment required, of the time and place of payment by publication in one daily newspaper in the city of New York and in one newspaper in Managua, Nicaragua, and one in San José, Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and in case any stockholder shall neglect or refuse to pay, in pursuance of such notice, the stock held by him may be sold to the highest bidder for cash, according to the regulations to be made therefor in the by-laws of said company. The directors hereinafter provided for may adopt regulations and by-laws not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That the affairs of the said company shall be managed by a board of directors, fifteen in number, who shall hold their office for three years and until their successors are duly chosen and qualified, and a majority of whom shall be citizens and residents of the United States. At the first election five shall be chosen by the stockholders for one year, five for two years, and five for three years, and at each annual election thereafter five shall be chosen by the stockholders for three years. The said board shall elect from its number a president who shall be a citizen and resident of the United States, and one or more vice-presidents of the company, who shall hold office for such terms as the by-laws of said board may provide and until their successors are duly elected and shall have qualified.

SEC. 4. That for the management and disposition of the stock, property, estate, and effects of the said company, the board of directors may make such by-laws, rules, and regulations as may conform to the authority granted in such canal concession or concessions, and not be inconsistent with this act or the laws of the United States or the existing treaty stipulations of the United States with the Government of Nicaragua or of Costa Rica, if the said canal should be in part in the territory of that Republic; and may fix the time for election of directors, and in case of vacancy in said board, caused by death, resignation, or otherwise, may fill the same. No person shall be a director who is not a stockholder, and any one ceasing to be a stockholder shall cease to be a director. All meetings of stockholders shall be held at the office of the company in the city of New York, and at least one such meeting shall be held in each year; but failure to elect directors on the day appointed by said by-laws shall not be deemed to dissolve said company, but such election may be holden on any day appointed thereafter by the directors first giving thirty days' notice thereof, in manner aforesaid. The directors, of whom eight, including the president, shall be a quorum, shall have full power touching the election or appointment of all officers of the company, and said officers shall hold office at the will and pleasure of said board.

SEC. 5. Nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed to in any wise restrict or impair any right of the United States under any treaty in force with the Republic of Nicaragua. And nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever other than in respect of the payment of tolls, as provided for in this act.

SEC. 6. That Congress shall at all times have the power to alter, amend, or repeal this act, when in its judgment the public good may so require.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FULLER], which has already been read.

Mr. CLARDY. I think there is no opposition on the part of the Committee on Commerce to the adoption of that amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CLARDY. If no further amendments are to be offered, I ask that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. SPINOLA. Are amendments now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. They are.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "therewith," in the twenty-first line of the first section, down to and including the word "concession," in line 32. The language which I propose to strike out is as follows:

And to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua by the concession of that Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the Republic on the 20th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession.

Mr. Chairman, I make this motion to amend the bill for the reason that we are conferring power and authority we know nothing of; we are conferring, sir, power on a corporation to do something which some other government may authorize it to do without knowing anything at all about it. Now we should protect ourselves against such danger as may be involved in the incorporation of any company of that character.

Mr. CLARDY. We were not able to hear just exactly what the gentleman's amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will send his amendment to the Clerk's desk in writing, and it will be again read.

Mr. SPINOLA's amendment was again read.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I trust that amendment will not be adopted. In the absence of concessionary right these people could not undertake to build this canal. They can not enter even into the undertaking without such concession, and I trust, therefore, the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I do not see what the Congress of the United States has to do with making an agreement between a private corporation which has no real, no legal existence to-day and a foreign government. Now, if this is to be a mere stock-jobbing concern, the quicker we learn that fact the better.

I see no good objection which can be honestly urged why this amendment should not prevail. How many members are there on the floor of this House who know what is the agreement between this Maritime Canal Company and the Government of Nicaragua? How do we know what we are to protect and confirm, and what powers and authority we are to confer?

I think, sir, the amendment is a proper one and ought to prevail. It ought to prevail for the protection of everybody who expects to invest one dollar in this enterprise, if it is to be honest in its operations.

Why, sir, a failure has taken place a little south of this line of a French company which has been conducted by the most distinguished and experienced engineers in the world. Now, this is an attempt to get up another enterprise of a similar character, and to ask the American people to invest their money in it under the sanction of this act of Congress which is proposed to be passed by the Congress of the United States. I trust, for the reasons I have stated, that the amendment will prevail.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I do not know any facts upon which my colleague can make his statement that this is a stock-jobbing bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I did not say it was; I said that probably it might be.

Mr. COX. I do not know of any probability which could lead the gentleman to designate the bill as a future stock-jobbing measure. The stock authorized by it may be placed and more or less affected in our bourses and exchanges. I do not know about that; I know nothing of its pecuniary relations except what is disclosed by the bill and report.

This bill or one of similar object was reported several Congresses ago from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I was then chairman. That bill was reported by Mr. Morton, then of New York, our present Vice-President-elect. Then I had occasion to study its constitutionality and practicability.

I do not judge this enterprise by the condition and probable failure of the Panama Canal Company, for if there ever was a stock-jobbing scheme which probably will ruin the deluded men who undertook, who have subscribed for and paid their money for its stock and construction, that Panama Canal Company is one. I propose in the short time allowed to discuss the bill.

It has two branches. First, its constitutionality, and, second, its feasibility.

First. Can Congress create such a corporation?

Under Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States. The Supreme Court has interpreted this clause frequently. Chief-Justice Marshall decided the leading case of Gibbons vs. Ogden (9 Wheat., first volume). He upheld the power of Congress to provide for "commercial intercourse between nations and parts of nations in all its branches." Navigation was embraced, according to that decision, within the words of the Constitution. There was no limitation on the species of commercial intercourse. It could be "exercised to the utmost extent." When the sovereignty of Congress is recognized, though limited to specific objects, it is plenary as to these objects.

There has been a close adherence to this leading case both in the Federal and State courts.

These cases include commerce carried on by corporations as well as by individuals. Mr. Justice Field recognized this (8 Wallace, 182, 183) in the case of Paul vs. Virginia. He recognized the utility of corporations in the commercial world. They were contemporaneous with the formation of the Constitution, the grant of power having made no reference to the instrumentality by which this commerce should be carried on. "It is general, and includes alike commerce by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations."

Afterwards, in the case of The United States vs. Marigold (9 Howard, 567) Mr. Justice Daniel said that the Constitution warranted legislative discretion on all and every subject of commerce.

In other cases, which might be quoted, it was held that either interstate or foreign commerce was within the purview of our organic law. Even as late as the case of Lord vs. Steam-ship Company (102 U. S. Reports, 544) the court interpreted the constitutional clause as to extra-territorial commerce, and the cases then decided had reference to commerce in a foreign country, including navigation as well as traffic.

There can be no doubt that if this corporation is a facility for such commercial intercourse and navigation, it is within the constitutional clause.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to inquire whether this bill is constitutional under the "general defense" clause of the Constitution. This brings me to the Second proposition: That this proposed charter affects the commerce of the whole world, and including especially our own. The obstacle, if any, would be the lack of acquiescence in the foreign country through which the proposed facility of commerce, or the proposed canal, is to pass. There is no obstacle in this case, as Nicaragua has given her stipulation in that regard.

How will this matter affect our maritime traffic?

First, it does what Maury intended should be done by his scientific induction and experiment in making a map of the ocean, showing its varied currents. That is, it leads commerce away from the old routes upon the ocean; it discovers and constructs new and shorter routes. That this is so has already been explained by the committee which has proposed the measure.

Without considering any other route, or the relations of any other country to this or any other route, I may be allowed to say that if this enterprise be successful, it will enable our country to compete successfully with the other hemisphere, not only with the Pacific coast of our own country, but with the coast of North and South America generally. The vessels of Europe now have ten days of an advantage over us in time and 2,000 miles in distance in reaching the western coast of North and South America. In sailing around Cape Horn we are at a great disadvantage compared with the vessels of the world. This canal will place the city I represent 2,500 miles nearer to San Francisco than Liverpool is. It is of especial advantage to our Southern cities. I need not dilate upon the advantages by which we would be enabled to trade for the eastern coast and nations of Asia through this shorter water route.

It does not matter, in this connection, whether we shall be exclusive users of the canal or not. The advantages to the company are apparent, and the advantages to our country are paramount. They will not be lessened by making the canal neutral.

This company asks no money and no monetary credit of the Government. The bill as now pending absolutely forbids any moneyed responsibility. It stands, therefore, very unlike other transit routes, which have been becoming running sores, by reason of the munificence of Congress in granting them lands and credit, and the flagrant breaches of the trusts created by statute.

It has been contended in some pamphlets which I have read, that the scheme is so grand and the probable results are so great that Congress ought not to give a charter without some monetary or other compensation.

The scheme does look grand. The capital stock is to be one hundred millions, with the right to increase it to twice that amount. It has advantages connected with the reception, purchase, and conveyance of real and personal estate. And I do not well see how this corporation could effectuate its grand ends for the improvement of our commerce, especially that which is beyond our control, without having the Federal ægis thrown over it. The Panama Railroad is no longer within our control. The proposed Panama Canal is becoming a fruitful failure in spite of all the efforts of its great projector by lottery—nay, in spite of the French Government—and other schemes to prop it.

All that this charter proposes is to endow this company with the power to do its own business. It binds the Government to nothing, except such action as will throw a shield over our citizens who will invest their means in its construction.

Other gentlemen at the last session expanded, and very properly, and none more so than the distinguished gentlemen from Kentucky [Mr. MCCREARY] and from Mississippi [Mr. HOOKER] upon the vast trade which this country would and should secure between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States; in fact, between our country and the Pacific islands and Asiatic coast. They have given you in tonnage and in dollars the immense values now existing, and they have made a horoscope of our splendid future in this direction.

Sir, these ideals of future advancement southward are not new to me. Years ago, when the Mexican treaty of Mr. Robert McLane, our minister to France, was sent to Washington for confirmation, and afterwards when we discussed our Central American and other policies, I gave my feeble help to those projects. The civil conflict came along to disturb and terminate these projects. One great bugbear stood in the way. It was the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

The gentleman from Tennessee, who has made the minority report, has done me the honor to quote from a report I made from the Foreign Affairs Committee upon this topic. I take back not one word in that report as to the propriety and necessity of the resolution I reported for abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. Our traditions, and especially the doctrine known as the "Monroe doctrine," should not stand in the way of that freedom of intercourse which belongs to us as the leading power on this continent, not only for our own connection with our own territory but with foreign countries.

The report to which the gentleman refers was made to this House on the 16th of April, 1880. It was made to the Forty-sixth Congress, second session, and is numbered House Document 1121.

The committee, of which I was the chairman, obtained jurisdiction of the question by reason of two resolutions: one in relation to the interoceanic canal, and the other with reference to the "Monroe doctrine." The report quoted with satisfaction the message of the then President, Hayes, and from which the gentleman from Tennessee has made an extract in his own report. It demanded American control for the route. We agreed with the President as to the necessity of the canal, and I still agree with him. The extract from my report will show this accord. Our committee at that time protested against British arrogance, and denounced the ill-omened Clayton-Bulwer treaty, which had been violated by that power. It recited the various stages of diplomacy, which show that although we were compromised by the treaty, yet that Great Britain had violated it so frequently that it was practically nullified. Still it existed.

The President advised its abrogation, and the committee authorized me to report a resolution of that tenor, for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, although it was practically inept, still remained as a cloud over the interoceanic transit, which we desired should be shared by no other power. It was purely a diplomatic question. The influence of Congress which was sought on that occasion was simply moral, and, if you please, intended to exercise the influence of one co-ordinate branch upon another. Diplomacy has failed to rid us of the incubus of that treaty, and I do not know that that treaty should stand as an obstacle to the accomplishment of the great ends sought by the pending measure, nor am I prepared to say that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee would be other than a prejudice and an impediment to the success of the objects of the measure.

The main question is, will this canal be controlled substantially by Americans, and will our Government have the paramount influence for all the purposes connected with commerce; and, in case of war, with that neutrality, without which a grand highway, like that proposed, would be rather a hurt than a help in the interchanges of mankind?

Mr. Chairman, I believe not only that our own commerce between our Atlantic and Pacific ports, but between the Orient and Occident, will be benefited by this canal. It will be a competitor for trade—a useful competitor with our trans-continental railways. It will be a useful competitor with any other canals. It therefore helps the trade of the people of the United States, among themselves, north and south, inland and on the coast, as well as our commerce with other and foreign nations. If there be any one thing more than another that the United States wants to-day to secure its advancing prosperity, it is the revival of that shipping and commerce which bears our surplus products to all the world. If we can not do this by domestic or Federal legislation, let us bestow on our enterprising citizens, the chartered panoply of the Republic. Let its protection go out over the world and draw the resources of other nations to our shores. [Applause.]

I favor the bill and shall oppose any suggestion which would break down its scope, force, and effect. It will not only help that great metropolis which I have the honor in part to represent, but it will be of incalculable benefit to the whole country in the revival of those interchanges, which is now the great desideratum for our country. [Applause].

It is said by Humboldt that the discoverers of the western world sailed by the light of the Southern Cross. Their religion, which was that of the Catholic Church, gave pious enthusiasm to their adventure. The stories of those days read like marvels, even to us in these days of steam and electricity. But so long as the Southern Cross shines in the heavens, so long will the wonders of this nation be led by its light, for it is loftier and more beautiful, as an emblem of that commerce which produces civilization and Christianity, than any Pharos which was ever erected by the genius of man to guide adventure over the uncertain elements of the sea.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident to the friends of this bill that the amendment proposed by my friend from New York, General SPINOLA, is calculated to leave the bill in the condition of the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out. I do not suppose, sir, that this Congress cares to debate matters which have taken place in the past twenty years as to the charters of these various Nicaraguan companies. It is plain to us now, as set forth in the minority report of this committee, that to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], and to others, every line of concession by Nicaragua is laid plainly before this Congress for its consideration. We are not either at loose ends or in the dark as to what Nicaragua desires, nor what is conceded to this maritime canal company. These matters are well understood.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, stands simply in this way: the friends and incorporators and the movers of this great canal company project have come to the National Legislature for the purpose of obtaining a charter. Those who are the enemies or the pretended enemies of this bill can not make either any capital or headway in their opposition by opposing it on this floor on simply the merits that the United States will give the guaranty of money or otherwise, anything they ought not to give to this company or to any other private corporation.

That argument is of no avail. The question simply lies here with me. I can have no interest, particularly in the district I represent, only as the interest of that district is affected by the whole commerce of the United States. Now, at the first glance at this bill there is one idea, one strong, great, determined commercial proposition, and that is this: Build this great Nicaraguan route and you place in advantage the whole of the coastwise commerce of the United States, as between 3,000 and 3,500 miles the European ship has to sail before it reaches our competing line. Open this route to the governments of South America, and the whole trade of the Indies is in the hands of the United States. It does more than that. While this coastwise trade has been concentrated in New England and New York, I am willing now for the rehabilitation of our Southern commerce that New Orleans shall enter into the strife for the prize of the two Americas south of us and their magnificent trade. [Applause.] And I hope, sir, when this bill shall have passed, such an impetus will have been given to the coast marine of the South that out of the iron and coal of Alabama shall be built the 3,000 or 4,000 ton steamers which can reach the prize, the commerce the Nicaraguan Canal will place in the lap of the South. [Applause.] I say that with all due sense of what may be the outcome of the future, whether this Congress or another Congress shall pass a free-ship bill or a subvention bill. Let us show to the congress of the three Americas, when it meets in this city, that instead of empty phraseology and resolutions of comity and of good will, this Congress has opened to the two Americas south of us a highway costing a hundred millions of dollars backed up by the sentiment and good will of the Fiftieth Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment this bill is one of the most important measures that have been before the American Congress for a decade. It is of transcendent importance to the commerce of the whole country. It bears the same relation to the trade of America that the discovery of the Cape of Good Hope bore to the commerce of the Old World. The discovery of the Cape of Good Hope turned the commerce of Asia away from the cities of the Mediterranean to the cities of London and Liverpool. The completion of this great canal will turn the commerce of the Orient away from the cities of Liverpool and London to our shores and to the cities of the United States. [Applause.] It will give us more than 3,000 miles of advantage, and we can trust American pluck and enterprise to do the rest. I hope this measure will pass. I regard it as one of great importance, so important, indeed, that I venture to hope it may pass this body unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. MAISH. In my judgment the discussion upon the merits of this measure is somewhat premature. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] proposes an amendment which I think it is entirely proper for this House to adopt. He proposes to strike out of the bill an amendment that was made by the Senate, which proposes to confer on this corporation all the powers that were conceded to Mr. A. G. Menocal, and all the powers of a similar kind that may be conceded to the corporation by the Republic of Costa Rica.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I beg pardon. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania read the bill?

Mr. MAISH. I think I have.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Look at the bill.

Mr. MAISH (reading):

And such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession.

Perhaps I was a little inaccurate in not mentioning the Republic of Costa Rica.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. They strike out "or may be."

Mr. MAISH. "Or may be" is not stricken out in the bill I have. This House is asked to adopt an amendment of the Senate conferring all these powers on this corporation now granted by the concessions made by the Government of Nicaragua and which may be conferred by Costa Rica.

Mr. CLARDY. The words "may be" were stricken out. The gentleman has not got the right bill.

Mr. MAISH. Why does not the committee give us bills that show us what is before the House? This House is not informed as to what is before it. Now, it is very apparent that when the friends of this bill first introduced it they did not consider it necessary to possess these powers, for they were not contained in the original bill.

The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] is to strike out this amendment because the powers are not set out in the bill. They should certainly be included, so that we may know what is granted. But here we are referred to the concession. I think, therefore, the House should adopt the amendment of the gentleman from New York; or at least the committee should incorporate the concession as part of this measure, so that we may know what powers are granted. I think that the amendment is reasonable and proper. I am not opposed to this bill; but I do not want to confer upon this or any other corporation indefinite or unlimited power such as conferred in this measure. I venture to say there is not a constitution in any of the States that would authorize the granting of a charter like this. Further, there is no provision in this bill that one cent of the capital stock shall be paid. I have never heard of a charter being granted in the States where it was not provided that at least a portion of the capital stock shall be paid.

Mr. ADAMS. The question now before the committee is not on the merits of the bill as a whole. The question now before the committee is on the merits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York. As I understand the sentiment and opinions of that gentleman he is not opposed to the bill; he is not opposed, therefore, to conveying to certain persons the powers of a body corporate for the "construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean," but he is opposed, apparently, to the conveyance of certain additional powers, known or unknown.

Now, in the first place, as I understand, the additional powers to be conferred are now known, because it is proposed to strike out the words "or may be." So that the only additional powers to be conferred on this corporation in addition to the powers involved in the words which I have read from the bill are the powers which have already been specified in what is known as the Menocal concession from the Nicaraguan Government.

I think, as I understand the copy of that concession which I have in my hand, that there are certain of these powers conveyed by that concession. Possibly what is to be implied in this language of lines 16 and 17, "the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal."

For instance, article 23 of that concession mentions certain lands which that company can hold. We can not object to their holding these lands. We have no power to concede these lands to this company, but this corporation have the power to hold lands; otherwise they could not hold them. When we create a corporation they can not exercise powers unless we give them those powers, and to give them power to maintain and operate a ship-canal would not give them power to hold a concession of land outside of the route line. Therefore it is contended that certain powers shall be exercised by this corporation outside of this, which will be involved in the language prior to or preceding the language which the gentleman proposed to strike out.

Article 23 recites the concession of land which this company is to hold, but which it might not have power to hold if they simply had power to construct, equip, and operate a canal. Article 26 relates to the mines of stone, gold and silver ores, and other metals, to which the company shall have certain rights.

Now, we desire that that company shall have the right to control those mines if that republic chooses to concede it; and yet the power to own and control those mines might not be involved or implied in lines 17 and 18 of this bill, giving the power to construct, operate, and maintain a ship-canal. I find also in article 25 a similar provision; also in article 26, in article 43, and in article 45. So far as I have been able to examine the bill, certain powers are provided for which it would be for our interest that this company should enjoy, yet which would not be implied in the mere power to construct, equip, and operate a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Therefore the gentleman from New York, who proposes this amendment, will see that it is necessary that this company shall not only have the power to operate, but that, in order to make the enterprise effective, the company must have the right to exercise additional powers which have been already conceded and which are perfectly definite and ascertainable.

Mr. CLARDY. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that we shall now have a vote on this amendment.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the remarks of my two colleagues from the State of New York, and I can not but admire them. They are broad, statesmanlike, and comprehensive, and I agree with those gentlemen on the general principle which they have set forth. But, Mr. Chairman, this is a measure which is to go before the American people, and by which we are to convey away the rights of the people to a certain extent, and all I ask at the hands of this House in defense of those rights is that this bill shall be perfected.

I am as much in favor of increasing the commerce of this country as any man upon the floor of this House, and I will go as far toward carrying out that idea as either of my colleagues; but I do not wish to lend myself, upon any buncombe idea whatever, to the passage of a measure which some day may rise to plague us. This bill presents a very grave question for the consideration of the Congress of the United States, and we should move with great caution, and should perfect the bill so that when we transmit it to the gentlemen who are to act under it we shall know that we have done our duty fairly and honestly and have held out no false inducements to persuade people to invest in this enterprise under the idea that the Congress of the United States has given it sanction. Up to this time this company is not a company at all. Although the promoters of it procured the passage of an act through the Vermont Legislature exactly in conformity with the bill now before us, yet they did not dare to proceed under that enactment of the Vermont Legislature, and now they come back here to us and ask us to take the same bill and pass it blindly.

I ask the Congress of the United States to make this bill a perfect measure, and when that is done no gentleman on this floor will vote for it more cheerfully than I will. But let us be a little guarded in acting upon this bill. I understand this character of legislation, understand it thoroughly. Gentlemen can come here, where there are three hundred and twenty-five members upon this floor, and introduce a measure like this, and although the committee who report the bill may understand it very well, we all know that very few of us have had an opportunity to give sufficient attention to it to familiarize ourselves with all its provisions. We are asked here to confirm and ratify and perpetuate powers which have been conferred by another government upon a private corporation. That is what this bill asks for. And, Mr. Chairman, there is gross disagreement among the "doctors" themselves who have brought us this bill. They have presented three different measures upon this same subject, and it was only by accident that I found out this was the bill before us.

Mr. MAISH. I will ask the gentleman from New York to tell us which is the right bill.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not know with certainty, but I suppose it is the one I have in my hand, which is called the Senate bill. But there are also two others. This shows that there is very great disagreement between the two Houses, and also among the members of our own committee, and is it not reasonable and natural that a difference of opinion should exist among members on the floor, who perhaps have not had sufficient time to examine the bills in detail? For my own part, I only ask that this measure shall be perfected so as to be a measure that no gentleman shall be ashamed of when passed, a bill that can not be footballed all over the country, or over the world, upon the allegation that the Government of the United States is standing behind it and is its sponsor and guardian. There is a great deal connected with this measure which has come to my ears that I do not wish to refer to here.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Will my colleague permit me to ask him whether in his judgment there is anything in this bill by which the faith or credit of the United States is pledged to this corporation?

Mr. SPINOLA. Only by implication. It is implied. Every word in the bill carries with it that implication, and it will be used by the gentlemen who are negotiating this enterprise when they go abroad for the money to construct the work. They will use the argument that they have a charter granted by the Congress of the United States and approved by the President of the great Republic.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman state what words in the bill indicate that?

Mr. SPINOLA. The whole of this section indicates it. Every line in the bill would indicate it. It is the grant of a charter by the United States Congress.

Mr. REED. When your State of New York grants a charter, do you understand that it thereby loans its credit?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN obtained the floor and said: If the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] desires to continue, I will withhold my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. By unanimous consent the gentleman from New York may be permitted to continue his remarks.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope we shall have a vote.

Mr. SPINOLA (to Mr. CLARDY). Why, my friend, you have all day. Let us take time. This is an important measure; and we have only begun its consideration.

A MEMBER. It is important enough to occupy a day.

Mr. SPINOLA. Certainly; important enough to occupy a week.

Mr. WEAVER. I will not object to extending the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA] if the extension be only for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from New York to continue his remarks for five minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SPINOLA. I would say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] that the State of New York has granted so many charters, for which more than once that State has had occasion to blush, and the State, with its great character, immense resources, and untold wealth, has been so frequently referred to as a guarantor of the genuineness of the charters granted, that the State has from time to time——

Mr. REED. Perhaps the gentleman in the confusion did not apprehend my question. It was whether, when the State of New York grants a charter, it carries with it any implication of State aid?

Mr. SPINOLA. It does not.

Mr. REED. Well, this is nothing but a charter of that kind.

Mr. SPINOLA. But this carries with it the inference——

Mr. REED. From what?

Mr. SPINOLA. From every line in it.

Mr. REED. Well, which particular line?

Mr. SPINOLA. Read every section of it——

Mr. REED. Which particular section?

Mr. SPINOLA. The bill grants to certain individuals the power to form a corporation and to construct a canal between the two oceans.

Mr. REED. Does that imply a loan from the Government?

Mr. SPINOLA. No, sir, not a loan; I have not said that.

Mr. REED. What else is it, then, which gives it that character? I want to know, for my own information and that of the House, on what the gentleman bases his position.

Mr. SPINOLA. I base it upon the whole bill.

Mr. REED. But upon no particular words which are in the bill?

Mr. SPINOLA. No, because they have been too cautiously avoided. The framers of the bill understood that they could not——

Mr. REED. It looks to me as though they had not only "cautiously avoided" it, but had actually avoided it.

Mr. SPINOLA. Ah, they have dodged it. They have left it for the drummers and "heelers" to explain to foreign capitalists and to capitalists of our own country that the Government has given a charter, and that under this charter they are acting——

Mr. REED. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact we have already adopted an amendment on this subject—

And nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever other than in respect of the payment of tolls as provided for in this act.

As the bill contains no words committing the United States to any liability, and as this express amendment has been adopted to guard against any such thing, how could we protect ourselves any further?

Mr. SPINOLA. That is similar to the language used in the act providing for the centennial exhibition; but afterward they came back and the Government had to make good——

Mr. REED. The Government had to make good?

Mr. SPINOLA. The Government did make good——

Mr. REED. Oh, the gentleman is as much out in his history as he is in his law. The Government refused to make it good.

Mr. SPINOLA. But the parties came here for it.

Mr. REED. Oh, "came here!" You can not expect to prevent men from asking the earth.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I simply want to say to the gentleman from New York, what I have already stated on various occasions in this House, that the one million and a half of dollars in connection with the centennial celebration was paid by the people of Philadelphia and not by the Government. Now, while I am on my feet I will ask——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is recognized.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks I ask that an amendment, which I wish to offer at the proper time, to the first section of the bill may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company; nor shall the United States be held in any wise liable or responsible in any form or by any implication for any debt or liability in any form which said company may incur, nor be held as guarantying any engagement or contract of said company, or as having assumed, by virtue of this act or otherwise, any responsibility for the acts or proceedings of said company in any foreign country or contracts and engagements entered into in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless this is offered as an amendment to the pending amendment it is not now in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I will offer that as an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. We want to hear this discussion—those of us who have not made up our minds on the question—and if the Chair will preserve order we will listen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will endeavor to preserve order. Gentlemen desiring to converse will retire to the cloak-room. The House will come to order.

The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA], on which debate is exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer my amendment as an amendment to that amendment of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DUNN. A point of order right there.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. Is it in order to offer as an amendment to constitute part of a bill an amendment which is to strike out part of the bill? Is that possible?

The CHAIRMAN. It is substituting this in its place.

Mr. DUNN. If he will offer that as a substitute it is a different thing instead of as an amendment to it.

The CHAIRMAN. He offers it in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will not consume the time of the committee with any extended discussion of this question. I desire simply to reply briefly to the suggestions of the gentleman from Indiana that this is a new departure in American legislation. While that is true to a certain extent, it can not be said that this is a new attempt to establish commercial relations between the people whom we seek to benefit by the construction of this canal or by authorizing a company to do so.

In 1849 gentlemen belonging even to the political party to which my friend from Indiana belongs did not regard the construction of this canal as an unwise project, nor did they disbelieve in the doctrine that Congress, under the constitutional provision referred to by my friend, had the power to authorize a company to construct it. In that year we had the celebrated treaty known as the Hise-Selva treaty, which imposed upon the Congress of the United States the duty of awarding a charter to an American company which might undertake the construction of this great canal. That question was discussed by Mr. Webster, Mr. Clay, Mr. Benton, Mr. Buchanan, and by other distinguished statesmen of the day, and no gentleman then argued that the Congress of the United States had not the power to grant the charter that it is proposed here to grant to this canal company.

Mr. HOLMAN. But that was an act in which the President of the United States and the Senate alone were concerned under the treaty-making power.

Mr. CLARDY. That is very true; but it is a most singular coincidence, I think, that while that treaty, which never in fact became a treaty, because it was not approved by the Senate, has been discussed by all the leading statesmen of this country, nobody ever suggested that Congress had not the power to grant the right to construct the canal, and no gentleman who takes the trouble to read the reports submitted by the Committee on Commerce on this subject will doubt for a moment, or if he doubts, his doubt will be removed, that this power does exist, and that Congress has the constitutional right to exercise it.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, does not go to the extent that my friend from Indiana seems to apprehend. It does not propose that the Government of the United States shall guaranty any of the bonds or shall be responsible or liable for the value of any of the stock of the company; and if a future Congress, as the Congress which preceded the centennial appropriation did, sees proper to assume an obligation that does not rest upon Congress or the American people, I know of no way of preventing that Congress from doing so. I do not believe that all virtue will die with the present Congress, and I know that all virtue will not die with the Fifty-first Congress.

Mr. KELLEY. Permit me to say that Congress assumed no responsibility about the centennial at Philadelphia. They exacted the repayment of the last cent of money advanced in aid of that enterprise.

Mr. CLARDY. I understand that.

Mr. KELLEY. And the gentleman probably refers to the New Orleans exposition. The Philadelphia exposition cost nothing to the Government.

Mr. CLARDY. I ought perhaps to have known better than to have referred to Philadelphia in this body. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that there is no provision in the pending bill that does not affirmatively show that the Government is in no wise to become involved or responsible for this enterprise; and an amendment which I regard as a work of supererogation has been already adopted, expressly negativing the idea that the Government shall under any circumstances become involved in any obligation on this account. I ask a vote on the question.

Mr. BLOUNT. I regret that so important a measure as this should only have debate under the five-minute rule for its consideration. In the Forty-seventh Congress this subject was before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and Mr. Menocal and certain associates of his, as corporators of a charter, were before that committee, urging that Congress should at that time avail itself of the great privileges then afforded by a cession from the Nicaraguan Government or they would pass away forever. They seem not to have passed away; neither have the gentlemen nor the scheme. The same parties are living, and are here to-day indoctrinating Congress by methods and schemes which are not new to persons who have had anything to do with public affairs.

The facts are that this bill simply asks for a charter, but this by no means provides that these parties, who understand well the methods of legislation, are to stop here. They undertook in the outset to get the Government to indorse the bonds of their company. They found that that created opposition that might result in absolute failure, and they withdrew it, and they are here to-day in this form.

Now, sir, reference has been made to the action of the Government in regard to the centennial exposition. It is well known that the first step here was an invitation to other nations to participate in that exposition.

It was alleged and believed that the Government was in no manner bound by it, but some gentlemen representing the concern by reason of that invitation were here and at the other end of the Capitol in the succeeding Congress, and they and their friends were everywhere molding public opinion to the point that the American people were morally bound to aid that exposition. And they triumphed. Gentlemen say that Philadelphia never asked for any contribution.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] placed an amendment on that appropriation bill designed to protect the Government against any claim that it was a donation, which was opposed by the friends of the measure. It finally prevailed, and my recollection of it is that by virtue of that amendment suit was brought and the matter went before the Supreme Court of the United States, which determined that Philadelphia was not entitled to it. My personal knowledge is that gentlemen from Philadelphia came before the Committee on Appropriations and urged, notwithstanding that decision, that it was nothing but right that the Government should release it. Now, sir, this is but an illustration. You begin to-day with a charter. Why, there is no question but these gentlemen may operate under a charter of New York or some other city.

Why have they gone on year after year when they have failed to get anything through Congress? Why have they passed by the State governments and charters and never sought aid anywhere but at this Federal Capitol? Sir, it simply means that the Government shall, as they will allege, be committed to this scheme if this bill shall pass. Then the next step will be an indorsement of the bonds of this company.

If, sir, I am correct in the proposition, that they need no charter from the Federal Government, and that they may obtain it from the States; if these difficulties are likely to arise in the future in the matter, involving the Federal Government, why not let this matter alone? This project will not be abandoned, will not be destroyed because they may not get through such a bill as they expect. They will be here in other Congresses.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. BLOUNT. If it is not too long.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the scheme was first put on foot, and when the concession was made by Nicaragua, had not the gentlemen obtained a charter from the State of New York?

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not say, Mr. Chairman, as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. RAYNER. I only desire to say a few words in reference to the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to the legality and constitutionality of this measure. After a thorough examination of this question the committee examining it came to the conclusion that Congress had an undoubted right to charter this company for the purposes specified in the charter and for the purposes specified in the concession made by the Government of Nicaragua.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there can be no question as to the right of Congress, under the power to regulate commerce between the States, and to regulate commerce with foreign nations, to give this company the charter the bill proposes to give them, and to place in that charter every provision which it now contains.

This question is res adjudicata, has been deliberately passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States in a number of cases similarly situated, and is no longer open to discussion. In the leading case of Gibbons vs. Ogden the Supreme Court held that under the power to regulate commerce between the States and with foreign nations we had a right to do every act which was necessary for the purpose of regulating commerce between the States and with foreign nations, and in the celebrated case of McCullough vs. The State of Maryland, where the question came up, what right Congress had to incorporate a national bank, the Supreme Court held that Congress had the right to incorporate a national bank for the purpose of regulating commerce between the States or for the purpose of regulating commerce with foreign nations—that it had the right to incorporate a corporation or to do anything else that might be necessary for the purpose of carrying out the general power vested in it to regulate commerce between the States or with foreign nations.

Now, the whole question is, Is this a regulation of commerce between this country and foreign nations? Is the incorporation of a company to cut a canal through this isthmus a regulation of commerce between the United States and foreign nations; or is it a regulation of commerce between the States? If it be either, then Congress has the right to incorporate a company for this purpose.

Mr. COX. And it is both.

Mr. RAYNER. Yes, it is both. It is a regulation of commerce between the States and it is a regulation of commerce between this country and foreign nations.

Why is it a regulation of commerce between the States? And why is it a regulation of commerce between this country and foreign nations? It is a regulation of commerce because it expedites commerce between the different States, because it expedites by thousands of miles commerce between foreign nations and American ports. Now, where does the objection come in that we are dealing with a doubtful constitutional question, when in two leading cases, in Vezey vs. Moore (14 Howard) and in the case of Lord vs. The Steam-ship Company (102 United States Reports) the question was raised whether this Government had a right to incorporate a company to do an extraterritorial act, and in both cases the Supreme Court held that Congress had that right. We have the right, so far as that is concerned, to incorporate a company to cut a canal through Italy. We have the right to incorporate a railroad company to build a railroad through Russia, provided it is a regulation of commerce between Russia and the United States. That is the test. The test is not the place where the act is done. It is not the locality that decides the constitutional question. The question is, is it a regulation of commerce? If it be a regulation of commerce it matters not where the act is done. We have the right to authorize the performance of an extraterritorial act, provided it accomplishes the purposes set forth in the Constitution. The authority of Congress to build a railroad through Russia would not amount to much if Russia did not give a concession to the railroad company to use lands for the purpose of building its road. What does the right to construct this canal through the republics of Central America amount to unless those republics give the rights that are necessary to the purpose of executing the powers which Congress vests in this company?

These are all different questions from the naked question of the constitutional power of this body to incorporate a company or to permit an individual to do an extraterritorial act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOOKER. I will yield to the gentleman, with the understanding that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] shall have his time afterwards.

Mr. RAYNER. There is only one other thing, Mr. Chairman, that I want to say, and that is that I think the whole discussion presents a very remarkable proposition. What does this company ask for? Why, as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has said, is it possible that when a State or when Congress grants a charter to a company for the purpose of performing a certain act it pledges in any degree or in any manner its faith to the company for the performance of that act? If that is so, then the different commonwealths of this Government are day after day and hour after hour pledging their faith to thousands of corporate charters that are authorized by the Legislatures of the individual States. What does this company want? It does not ask for a dollar of credit. It does not ask for a dollar of bounty. It does not ask for a single solitary thing except a naked charter of incorporation, and the charter of incorporation that is asked for contains an express provision that this Government does not pledge its faith or incur any obligation on behalf of the company that it so incorporates.

Why all these objections? They amount to nothing. Are we never coming to the point of permitting American commerce to grow when the parties who are willing to help it grow come to Congress and merely ask us to do what any other government upon the face of the civilized globe would be perfectly willing to do—to give to these people a simple charter (without the appropriation of a cent of money) to enable them to carry out one of the greatest enterprises that has ever illustrated the pages of history. There is nothing in this charter that now binds or can hereafter bind the Government. The charter is not worth the paper upon which it is written unless the company receives and acts upon the concessions that the republics of Central America have already given to it. What does the charter amount to? I say give men who propose to embark in enterprises of this kind as many charters as they want. I say that whenever a body of responsible men come to the Congress of the United States and say that they are willing to risk their fortunes in an enterprise of this sort it is our duty to give them authority to do so, and it is a miserable policy which opposes such a grant and would prevent us from giving to such persons a right from which we might derive such immense benefits as I see before us in this measure.

It is but a short time since America controlled the tonnage of the world. We had more registered tonnage than any nation of continental Europe. To-day our flag has disappeared from the ocean; our ships have vanished from the sea. You have presented to you now a means of doing something to restore and revive that commerce, to expedite by thousands of miles the traffic and the commercial intercourse among the nations of the earth. There is not a single objection that I have heard, legal or practical, which to men of advancing mind should form the slightest obstacle to the passage of this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I for one am decidedly in favor of the United States giving at least its encouragement to the creation of an interoceanic canal. I think it would be decidedly bad policy for this Congress to say, by a refusal to incorporate this company, that it does not propose to give any encouragement in that direction.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] made the objection that we would in some way involve ourselves in foreign complications if we authorized the incorporation of this company. I think there is no line of policy better settled in American history in the last fifty or sixty years than that this country is pledged to maintain its ascendency in the political affairs and commerce of the western continent, and that we ought, by our influence to do what we can to maintain the ascendency of this Republic in the commerce between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, so far as the Government can do it. The policy of non-intervention was only urged in reference to the affairs of the eastern continent.

A provision which has been incorporated in this bill declares clearly that we are not by this measure to incur any financial responsibility for this corporation. Gentlemen say that we may hereafter do this. The act of encouraging the organization of such an enterprise as this is one thing, but the act of pledging the finances of this Government to the enterprise is another thing; and for my part I am not yet prepared to take the latter step. But, so far as encouragement is concerned, I think we ought to give it, and do so speedily.

The objection is made that this company is already incorporated under the law of one of the States. I think there is very great reason to doubt whether the charter of a State is of any validity in Nicaragua or in any foreign country, because the States have no authority outside of their own jurisdiction; but, by virtue of a provision of the Constitution which gives to the United States Government control over foreign commerce and makes that control exclusive, I think it follows logically that we have exclusive control in the organization of companies to operate outside of the United States, and that consequently it is necessary, in order to make the charter of any validity, that such a company should be incorporated under the authority of the Government of the United States. The recent decision of the Supreme Court would seem to lead to this conclusion, for, if the States can not control interstate commerce, how can they grant charters to control foreign commerce?

There have been objections urged to this incorporation which I would like to hear answered. It has been stated that the only object of this charter is to create a corporation which does not intend to do anything, which intends to be inoperative, in the interest of the Panama Canal. If such an objection has any foundation in fact, if any one knows that such is the object of this incorporation (and it is being stated quietly on this floor), we ought to know it. I would like to hear from the chairman of the committee in reference to that subject.

Mr. CLARDY. I did not hear the question of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR]. I am under an obligation to yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. KERR. My question is whether this company is not being incorporated in the interest of the Panama Canal, and simply for the purpose of preventing other companies from taking efficient measures to construct a canal in that region.

Mr. CLARDY. I answer emphatically, no. The Panama Canal Company has been fighting this enterprise. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

Mr. KERR. I asked the question for information—not that I know anything about the matter myself.

Mr. SPINOLA. What has changed the opinion which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] expressed last session?

Mr. KERR. I have not changed my opinion on this subject.

Mr. SPINOLA. You stated at that time a good reason for not favoring this enterprise.

Mr. KERR. No, sir; you are mistaken.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] in concluding his eloquent speech remarked that a failure to give this charter would deprive the country of fruitful results which would otherwise inure to our commerce, and that the proposition could only be opposed by those who are not of the class of "advancing minds." Sir, there are certain taunts which we are getting familiar with, which originate in sources—I say it with no disrespect to any gentleman on the floor—generally known as "the lobby."

Whenever there is opposition to any scheme it is intimated that there is a lack of breadth of thought on the part of gentlemen who oppose it. Whenever there is a disposition to scrutinize a measure there is a lack of "advancing mind." Sir, such intimations will not restrain me from an honest and fair discussion of any proposition.

Now, sir, I say that I deny what the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has stated. I assert it is competent—and it has never been questioned by the gentlemen asking for this charter—for any State government in the United States to give a charter for this very purpose. I have heard these gentlemen time and again before the Committee on Foreign Affairs in urging the granting of this charter, and they have never failed to concede that under a State charter they could go forward and organize a company, receive subscriptions, elect a board of directors, and go on with this great work which they tell us will redound so much to the advancement of American commerce.

Mr. CLARDY. Does the gentleman say this company?

Mr. BLOUNT. I mean to say that Mr. Menocal, who got this concession, was there arguing before that Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-seventh Congress to which I have alluded. I mean to say that Mr. Phelps and other naval officers interested then and interested now in this concession were there urging the granting of a charter.

Mr. RAYNER. Had they not a right to do that?

Mr. CLARDY. Not under the same company.

Mr. BLOUNT. If I had the time, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to yield the floor, but my time is limited and I will need it all.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the object of it? If they can do this under any one of the States, why, then, this persistent refusal to go to any one of the States to get this great charter and do this great work for the advancement of American commerce? Why this persistence? I ask. It must be, sir, because there is something else than that which appears on the face of it.

When they shall have obtained this charter these gentlemen, intelligent and learned, not provincial, men of the world, not American citizens alone, but men who have traversed the earth; men who have had connection with great business interests, with great moneyed corporations throughout the world, these men have an object in it when they fail to take a charter from one of the State governments and ask that the Congress of the United States shall grant them this act of incorporation.

They know, sir, they can and they expect to use this charter for the purpose of having the power of this Government with them in the conduct of their affairs upon that Isthmus. They mean to come to this Congress, as has been done by others, to have the Government aid, as the phrase is, to carry out this object; they intend to come here and ask the Government to go further and to maintain it—to maintain it by contributions in the matter of issuing and guarantying its bonds.

They mean to put it on the ground indicated by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER], that this Government is interested in the commerce of the world, and is so to regulate our relations with it and to do whatever may be necessary for the advancement of that commerce. I do not think I overstrain the language of the gentleman.

It is said the majority of the directors are to be American residents. That may be true, but under the scheme presented before it was argued——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, it is well known that the first session of the present Congress did not adjourn. It did nothing of the kind, but dwindled away, as it were, and in the twilight hours of those last lingering days this bill was brought up for discussion; and my recollection is at that time it was stated nothing was asked of the General Government except the mere act of incorporation. Now the debate has seemed to drift away from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], which in my judgment secures in explicit language in the act itself the object as stated then by the framer of the bill.

It is said that they need no indorsement of their bonds, no assumption of any obligation on the part of the Government of the United States.

I ask if that is the case. I ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why he does not at once accept the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, and no longer render this House obnoxious to the charge read from that desk on last Monday, that the Congress of the United States fritters away too much of its time over private business.

Mr. CLARDY. In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey, if he expected an answer from me——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly I did.

Mr. CLARDY. I will say that the amendment presented by the gentleman from Indiana is, not only substantially but almost in identical language, the amendment that has been already adopted to this bill; and I do think that a square amendment to the bill negativing the idea that the Government of the United States under any circumstances should become responsible for any of the operations or obligations of the company ought to be enough and should be satisfactory without the surplusage which is employed by the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. BUCHANAN. May I ask when the amendment of which the gentleman speaks was adopted to the bill?

Mr. CLARDY. Some time in last October.

Mr. BUCHANAN. During the last session?

Mr. CLARDY. About the close of the last session.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Ah! In those "twilight days" to which I have alluded. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain the provisions of that amendment?

Mr. CLARDY. It has been read several times to-day.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am aware of that, but so much confusion has prevailed in committee that but little could be gleaned from the reading of any papers.

Mr. CLARDY. I will send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it read again.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope the gentleman will do so, and that we may have order while it is being read.

Mr. CLARDY. This amendment, I will state, was offered by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. CULBERSON], and was adopted as a part of the bill.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of section 5 add:

"And nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligations whatever other than in respect to the payment of tolls as provided for in this act."

Mr. CLARDY. This amendment, it will be seen, covers the point suggested by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MAISH. May I ask that all of the other amendments which have been adopted to the bill be read?

Mr. CLARDY. I ask that the pending question be first disposed of.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask consent to withdraw the amendment which I have offered temporarily until after the amendment for which it has been offered as a substitute is disposed of.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SPINOLA].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment has already been read.

Mr. PAYSON. Let it be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to commit the United States to any liability whatever for or on account of said company; nor shall the United States be held in any wise liable or responsible in any form or by any implication for any debt or liability in any form which said company may incur, nor be held as guarantying any engagement or contract of said company, or as having assumed, by virtue of this act or otherwise, any responsibility for the acts or proceedings of said company in any foreign country, or contracts or engagements entered into in the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. MCADOO. With the most profound respect for the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I must entirely dissent from his general objection to this bill. I do not think that the constitutional objections advanced by him are at all tenable. I believe that they have been very ably and fully answered by the distinguished gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]. The regulation of interstate and international commerce is a very broad power. Now, one point that the gentleman from Indiana makes is that it was the policy of our fathers that this Republic should not become entangled with foreign nations, and he declares that this bill will entangle us with foreign nations in South America and in Europe. The mistake that the gentleman makes in this is in ignoring the fact that foreign nations are now entangled with our rights and policy. We are now on the defensive. A canal through the Isthmus of Panama or through the Central American country will eventually be cut. The growth of population on the whole Pacific coast demands it.

The French nation are now constructing the Panama Canal, and we are confronted with the duty of protecting American rights there. Why, the very logic of the situation is this, that the tremendous foreign interests that are growing up in this whole region if the Panama Canal is built, or if any canal or any mode of traversing this Isthmus is constructed under foreign patronage, this Government must inevitably be entangled in protecting American interests against foreign supremacy which will then reign in these regions.

The day a canal is completed under a foreign flag, that day, willingly or unwillingly, we must of necessity be on the defensive to maintain our proclaimed determination to support the Monroe doctrine and curb European power in the Americas. We can not be indifferent. The canal must come, and come it should under American auspices.

This bill, to my mind, properly amended is a wise and a patriotic one. There will be a canal there. You can not stop it. It will have to be built by private enterprise with tremendous capital, or by Government. As between the two evils, the building of a governmental canal with taxes taken from the people and the building of a canal by private enterprise, I am in favor of individual effort and combination. But the canal must be built. The extraordinary growth of our own Pacific coast, the tremendous increase in population of the South American countries demand it.

Look at the startling growth of the Argentine Republic! A canal, or some mode of getting across the Isthmus so as to avoid the long voyage around the Horn, is the absolute logic of events, and in order that we may protect our rights in that region I am in favor of giving to an American company, with as carefully guarded provisions in the bill as the gentleman from Indiana can inject into it, the power to build such a canal under the ægis of our Government if necessary, but without committing the Government to any financial scheme of guarantying bonds such as was adopted in the case of the exposition at Philadelphia.

Why, look at it! The governments of Europe are already awake to the situation. This canal is necessary in order to enforce the Monroe doctrine. The governments of Europe are land hungry. The population of Europe is congested. They are looking for land, military, commercial, and political outlets in every quarter of the globe. India has been exhausted. Russia is assuming control of the vast territories in the eastern part of Europe and Western Asia. She is threatening English, Turkish, and Oriental supremacy alike. The eyes of all Europe are turned to this continent, and the feeble republics of South America can only be preserved from foreign aggressions and from subservience to foreign interests by the moral, political, the financial, and, if necessary, the military power of the great Republic of America. [Applause.]

Why, Mr. Chairman, the flag of Britain is already posted on naval stations at this very center. Spain, in Cuba, has military control of the great Gulf and our Mississippi Delta. France is getting a foothold there; and Bismarck, having accomplished the unity of the German Confederacy, and having laid down its military and financial policy, is now finding an outlet for the German arm and the German brain in South America and in the islands of the Pacific. Yet we are asked to remain supinely neutral! I preach no blatant jingoism. I am a conservative of the conservatives, but I am neither blind, deaf, nor unobserving.

We only ask to mind our own affairs and make happy our own people; but the bedeviled and tottering systems of Europe look with jealous eyes on these Americas. We have nothing to do with the cruelty, pomp, and artificiality of European politics, but the millions of freemen on these continents will never permit the flags of monarchical power to float on additional acquisitions on these continents. In the Northern Pacific, in the Southern Pacific, and the islands of the great Gulf we are alive to the restless activity of European aggression, open or insidious.

I would not have this great Republic embark in any wild and visionary foreign enterprise. I have contempt for wild and rhetorical declamations on un-American interference in foreign affairs. I have never believed in these dazzling foreign ventures. Our fathers wisely abjured them. We have no quarrel with Europe; but these nations must never be allowed to dominate a rod of free America. But I know that God has given us these continents as a heritage, and coupled with a duty to mankind to secure and preserve in both of the Americas, from the mystic grandeur of the northern seas to the unknown lands of Terra del Fuego, a republican form of government, a refuge for all who love liberty without license and hate the tyranny of purse or sword, and a territory pure and uncontaminated by the influence of foreign power, and therefore I favor in substance this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I agree with those gentlemen who most heartily dissent from the methods which have been adopted by the friends of this measure for the purpose of forcing it through the House. The statement has been made that this measure has been discussed ad nauseam, in spite of the fact that up to the present time, with the single exception of some few hours of the last session of this House and a short debate in the Senate of the United States, there has been no discussion of it upon the floor of Congress. The question is too large and the interests involved are too intricate and complicated to admit of anything like a just, fair, and comprehensive discussion upon this occasion. This bill involves every interest which we have in connection with what is called the Monroe doctrine, and I desire to say to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], who has just concluded his remarks, that although he undertook to defend this bill, every word that he said, every sentiment that he advanced, was really in opposition to the measure which is now pending before this House. Gentlemen who favor this bill have carefully avoided giving the House an opportunity to discuss it, although it is a measure which demands frank and full and critical discussion. It is impossible in the brief time allotted me to enter into anything like an adequate discussion of the interests and the questions involved. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] has undertaken with one remark to settle what is called the constitutional issue involved in this measure.

He has said that it is res adjudicata, that the question has been already passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States. He makes that statement in spite of the fact that this question has never been before the Supreme Court of the United States, and also in spite of the fact that it has been the policy of this Government from the beginning up to the present time never under any circumstances to grant a charter for the purpose of bringing a corporation like this into existence. Under the interstate and foreign-commerce clause of the Constitution the idea of jurisdiction necessarily goes with any grant of power. We have jurisdiction of the instrumentalities of commerce. We have jurisdiction under the interstate-commerce clause of the territory of the United States. The gentleman has referred to the cases of Gibbons vs. Ogden, Vesey vs. Moore, and Lord vs. The Steam-ship Company, but the principle involved in every one of those cases was that the Federal Government had jurisdiction as well over the territory as over the instrumentalities of commerce.

Upon that principle, to expedite commerce is to regulate it. Gentlemen might go a little further and hold that to promote commerce is to expedite commerce, and to expedite commerce is to regulate it. And in this kind of a springing-board argument they might go further, and say that to increase commerce is to promote it, to promote commerce is to expedite it, to expedite commerce is to facilitate it, and to facilitate commerce is to regulate it. Under this form of reasoning there is absolutely no field from which the Federal Government would be shut out. Under our power to establish post-offices and post-roads it would be entirely within the power of the United States Government to establish a farm for the purpose of raising horses, because horses are useful in carrying the mails. The Government could enter into any kind of business, I care not what, which might directly or indirectly facilitate the exercise of any grant of power.

Sir, we have no jurisdiction over the territory of Nicaragua. I care not what concession we may receive from that Republic, that concession does not give us authority to go beyond the power which has been granted to Congress by the Constitution of the United States.

For myself I hope that the bill now pending will be voted down, or at least postponed until this House has had fair and legitimate opportunity to examine and discuss it in all its bearings. I would especially call the attention of the House to the fact that at this time and under these circumstances we are called upon to inaugurate a policy totally and radically new, and, though I have not time to prove it, I will say absolutely and entirely antagonistic to all precedent on this subject and hostile to the very best interests of the Government of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman, to-day the construction of a ship-canal between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans is a necessity to our commerce, and to my mind this fact demonstrates its constitutionality.

Let us consider for a moment the advantages of this route and the great and growing traffic that it would accommodate. It lessens the distance between our Atlantic and Pacific ports 7,000 miles, two and one-third times the distance across the Atlantic, and it also saves the tempestuous and dangerous voyage around Cape Horn.

The Suez Canal, which has revolutionized the commerce of Europe, only shortens the distance to India about 4,000 miles. This route shortens the distance from our Pacific coast to Liverpool 6,000 miles, and from Callao, South America, it lessens the distance to western European ports 4,000 miles, and the distance to our own Atlantic coast nearly the same. It would also greatly diminish the distance of our eastern ports from the Pacific islands, and could not fail to largely increase our trade with them. An immense impetus would be given to the trade of our own Pacific coast and that of South America. The lumber export of Washington Territory and Alaska would soon become of great magnitude. When it is seen that sailing vessels leaving Europe for San Francisco, which can now only make one round trip in a year, will then be able to do that and return to San Francisco in the same time, the advantages of this transit will be obvious.

The Suez Canal was opened to commerce in 1870. In that year 486 ships passed through, aggregating a tonnage of 436,609. Its receipts were $1,031,865. In 1880 the number of ships was 3,307; tonnage, 5,775,861, and the receipts were $13,702,413. The Nicaragua Canal possesses a great advantage over the Suez Canal, which would lead to its more rapid development. The latter can only be used by steam-vessels on account of the peculiarly difficult and dangerous navigation of the Red Sea, while the former can not only be used by them, but will undoubtedly lead to a large and rapid increase of this class of vessels.

The Chiefs of the Bureau of Statistics for 1879 and for 1885 give the number of vessels and their tonnage which would have used this route as the most convenient during those years, respectively. In 1879, 2,647 vessels, with a tonnage of 2,671,886; in 1885, 4,139 vessels, aggregating a tonnage of 4,252,434. At this rate of increase at the date of the possible completion of the canal its business would amount to more than 6,000,000 tons, and equal the present traffic of the Suez Canal. It has substantial advantages for our merchant marine and particularly for our sailing vessels over the Panama route, should that ever be completed, which is extremely improbable. The Nicaragua route between our Atlantic and Pacific coasts would be 600 miles shorter than that by the Panama Canal, and it would also be north of the region of calms and baffling winds, within which the latter is situated. Then the magnificent fresh-water lake which forms a part of the route would furnish commodious and safe shelter for vessels of any tonnage.

Our naval squadrons, which it is probable in the future may be found more frequently in the Caribbean Sea and upon both coasts of Central America, could remain here when not needed for active service, and would last a much longer period of time in the fresh waters of the lake than when exposed to the corroding influence of the sea. It would indeed furnish for our Navy a safe and permanent harbor of refuge, unlike and superior to any existing harbor. What are the objections to this project? So far as its engineering features are concerned, or the feasibility and efficiency of the proposed canal, there is no serious question.

The ground is taken by some who profess to favor the canal that the grant of this charter should be accompanied with a renewed and vigorous assertion of the Monroe doctrine. One objection to this is that it would defeat the project. Perhaps this is a sufficient objection. We certainly ought not to desire by the barren assertion of a doctrine to prevent its conversion into a fact through the virtual union of our Atlantic and Pacific coast lines. This canal will be built by an American company with a national charter which provides that the president and a majority of the directors shall be citizens and residents of the United States.

It seems to me that the building of a canal across the Isthmus by a purely American company under the patronage and prestige and authority of our Government is a practical and most forcible illustration of the Monroe doctrine. It is an announcement to the world that American citizens with the sanction of their Government propose to connect the two oceans and to control if necessary the passage between them. Is not this better than a mere declaration of a policy which did not prevent France from attempting to build the Panama Canal? Declarations which are not accompanied or followed by corresponding action only excite contempt. Great Britain created her colonial system and established her power in every quarter of the globe, not by high-sounding claims of dominion, but by quiet occupation, secured through the enterprise of her subjects, whom she was very sure to protect whenever and wherever their interests were assailed.

We have already explicitly notified Great Britain that we consider the Clayton-Bulwer treaty abrogated by her violation of its terms. A restatement of our position and a fresh assertion of the Monroe doctrine attached to the charter of a private company would be inopportune, undignified, and impolitic. In closing these brief remarks let me urge that the rapid and extraordinary development of the world's commerce demands this direct route and will not longer brook the cost, delays, and dangers incident to a detour around the South American continent. Let us unite these immense oceans which wash the shores of the New and the Old World and form the great highways of commerce to the most frequented and the most remote regions of the earth.

Let it be the glorious work of the Fiftieth Congress, which completes one hundred years of our legislative history, to remove the barrier between these oceans and strike the fetters from the limbs of commerce which she has been compelled to wear for these three hundred years. Let us crown the closing years of this grandest of the centuries with what will prove to be the noblest of its achievements; and, believe me, sir, that we and our children will be proud and grateful that we have been enabled to contribute toward this result—a result which since the hour when the daring Spaniard, "standing upon a peak in Darien," gazed upon two oceans and two continents has been the dream of genius, the prophecy of science, and the hope and demand of civilization. [Applause.]

(During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when the five minutes of Mr. DAVIS had expired, Mr. DALZELL obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. DAVIS, who resumed and concluded his speech.)

Mr. COBB obtained the floor.

Mr. CLARDY. I desire to ascertain whether we can not arrive at some agreement as to the time to be consumed in the discussion of this amendment. I do not wish to interfere with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB], but suggest that we limit discussion on this amendment to ten minutes, to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. PAYSON and others. Oh, no.

Mr. SPINOLA. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. CLARDY. Then I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair had recognized the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] will be recognized next.

Mr. COBB. Mr. Chairman, as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, I offer the following:

And this proviso shall be printed on every bond, contract, certificate of stock, or other obligation issued by said company.

The object of this amendment is apparent. It is to prevent any person who may become possessed of any of the bonds, contracts, or certificates of stock issued by this company from being misled as to the obligation which the United States Government assumes in the premises, but may have notice conveyed upon the bonds themselves of the fact that the Government is in no way responsible for any of the obligations of the company.

I can not, of course, Mr. Chairman, enter at any length into this discussion in the time to which I am limited. I take it we are agreed here in the wish that there may be at some time in the near future a water communication constructed between the Atlantic and the Pacific along this proposed route. I apprehend further that we are agreed in the desire that this water communication shall be controlled by citizens of the United States; but when it comes to the methods to be pursued in effecting this desirable object we do not agree.

We have had, according to my conception, very latitudinarian views expressed here to-day as to the power of the Congress of the United States over matters of this kind. According to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] Congress can exercise any power whatsoever that may be conceived to be necessary for the purpose of facilitating interstate commerce or commerce with foreign powers. If their views are correct, Congress may authorize the construction of a line of railroad from here to the Pacific, and along the whole line may, in exercise of the power of eminent domain, seize and condemn, for the purpose of its construction, the land within the States through which the road passes. I apprehend those gentlemen will not be willing to go to that extent; and if not, how can they claim that Congress may authorize the construction of a line of travel when in that construction there must be the purchase and holding of property even beyond the United States?

The grant of corporate rights is the bestowal to some extent of governmental privileges and powers; and no government can, with propriety, attempt to make such bestowal unless it can secure through its own laws and administration the exercise of the powers granted.

In order to show that the attempt is made to confer authority which the Government of the United States itself can not exercise, and the exercise of which it can not secure to others, look at one or two provisions of the bill. Here is one in which it is said that this corporation "may receive, purchase, hold, and convey personal and real property and rights of property."

Now, what authority has the Congress to convey to any corporation or to any person the right to acquire and hold property in any State in the American Union? None whatever. No such grant of power is found in the Constitution. If there is no power in the Government of the United States to confer upon a corporation the right to acquire and hold property in the States, and to secure the exercise of that right, how much more conclusive becomes the argument when you attempt to go beyond the domain of the United States and its authority.

In this bill it is provided that the proposed corporation may acquire property in a foreign country where we have no authority whatever. You can not enter one of the States and confer this right. Much less can you exercise it in a foreign government. Not only that, but you undertake to convey to the corporation authority to issue bonds and secure the same by mortgage on its property and rights of property. Property where?——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended for five minutes longer.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that so far as I am concerned myself, I am willing to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. My only objection is the one I stated awhile ago; that is, that it is covered by an amendment already adopted. But if this amendment is adopted, then I think the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] an eminently proper one, and I shall offer no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question first recurs on the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB].

Mr. COBB's amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and then Mr. HOLMAN's amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. BLAND. I offer the amendment which I send up to be read as a substitute for the sixth section of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Congress hereby reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act, and to regulate the tolls or tariff rates for transportation of persons or property by this company or its assigns.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I offer that for the purpose of making certain the power of Congress to regulate the tolls of this company without the necessity of repealing, altering, or amending the charter. Under section 6 as it is in the bill the only power on the part of Congress is to repeal or amend the charter. It does not give the power to regulate the tolls of this company. I think we ought to reserve the right to regulate the charges of this company, and hence I have offered my amendment as a substitute for section 6 as it is in the bill.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I rise to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he would put his money into any enterprise and leave to somebody else the question of regulating what profit he should receive on the investment?

A MEMBER. You do that in railroad companies.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, the day has passed in this country when the people of the United States are willing that Congress, or any of the State Legislatures, shall create an individual—a corporation—which is greater than the Government itself. I demand, sir, the exercise of the power on the part of Congress to regulate the traffic of this company, and if we are to create a corporation bigger than the Government and Congress itself, and authorize it to exercise power of itself in violation of the law, or which can not be controlled by Congress, then I hope that this bill and every similar bill, all measures that mean the enactment of such legislation as that, will be rejected by this body.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I expected the gentleman from Missouri to make just exactly that same speech. It is identically the old speech which he has been making here ever since I have been in Congress—an attack upon corporations, and the assertion of the right of Congress to control private property.

Now, the only objection which I have to the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri offers is that it goes to the very vitality of the bill itself. In other words, if the amendment is adopted, what reasonable man would put up his money to build the canal? When men invest money in enterprises of this character they expect remuneration from it. It is a risk and may be a total loss. I agree with the gentleman that Congress should have the right to regulate the corporations it creates to a certain extent, but when you say that Congress shall have the right at any time to fix the fares and the rates and the tolls upon a railroad or a canal that somebody else is going to build with his own money, then I ask the gentleman where is the reasonable man or the man who would take ordinary care of his own affairs and of those who are dependent upon him who will venture his money in such an enterprise as that? Who will embark his means in an enterprise where the right to regulate what he shall receive for his investment is left to somebody else, and where other men shall say whether he shall receive 1 per cent. or 5 per cent. or no per cent. at all? It is not even reasonable.

Mr. BLAND. I am quite willing that the gentleman from Maine, who seems upon all questions here to represent monopoly, should represent it to-day on this question.

So far as I am concerned I propose to stand here, as I have stood in the past, demanding that Congress shall at all times preserve its right to control and regulate traffic in this country both as to transportation and the rate to be charged by any corporation which is authorized by Congress.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I do not belong to any corporation in this country. I have not a dollar's interest in any corporation in this country.

I am not any more in favor of monopoly than the gentleman from Missouri himself. This word "monopoly" has been used as a scarecrow to defeat many interests, and people have been frightened by the use of the word. If I believed that there were men here who had capital to invest who would invest it to build this canal across the Isthmus and at the same time allow somebody else to say whether they shall reap any profit or not, or whether that investment shall be profitable or a dead loss, I might be willing to agree with the gentleman from Missouri that Congress should be allowed to regulate the tolls to be charged upon the canal. But I do not believe that there can be found within the limits of the United States men who will put their money in to build this great canal across the Isthmus, a matter of so much national importance to this country, and at the same time allow this body or any other body to say whether they shall reap a profit on the investment or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute for the sixth section proposed by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I offer that as an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will agree to offer this as an addition to section 6.

Mr. BLAND. I will ask its adoption as an amendment to the sixth section.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 62.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. MAISH. I beg to offer the following additional amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That the construction of said ship-canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years, and be completed within ten years; and a failure to comply with this proviso shall cause a forfeiture of the franchise granted by this act.

Mr. KERR. I ask a division of that proposition, and a vote upon the limitation of three years and ten years separately. I agree to the first, but the limit of ten years I do not think ought to prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the question is divisible, and the gentleman is entitled to a separate vote. The first question is on agreeing to the limitation that the work shall be commenced within three years.

The amendment was adopted.

The question recurred on the second portion of the amendment, limiting the time of completion to ten years.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 49, noes 54.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. CLARDY were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided.

During the count,

Mr. CLARDY said: Mr. Chairman, the point of no quorum is withdrawn upon the condition that we shall consent to a yea-and-nay vote in the House on this amendment, and a yea-and-nay vote upon the passage of the bill as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the committee can not bind the House.

Mr. CLARDY. I hope the agreement will be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the notification made by the gentleman from Missouri is all that can be done.

Mr. HOLMAN. But he can not be heard.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I will again state for the information of the committee that the point of no quorum has been withdrawn by the gentleman from Indiana upon condition that we assent to a yea-and-nay vote upon this amendment in the House, and to a yea-and-nay vote upon the passage of the bill as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the Committee of the Whole can not bind the House to an agreement of that kind; but if the members constituting the House itself constitute the committee, the understanding will probably be as effective.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think a majority of the committee will determine the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia renew the point of no quorum?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] withdraws the point of no quorum, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] renews it.

The count was concluded; and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 103.

So the latter part of the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it but proper that the Clerk should report that portion of the amendment that has been rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be completed within ten years, and a failure to comply with this proviso shall cause the forfeiture of the franchises granted by this act.

The amendment as adopted will read as follows:

"Provided, That the construction of said ship-canal shall be commenced in good faith within three years."

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After section 2 add the following:

"SEC. 3. That no certificates of stock shall be issued until at least 10 per cent. of the same shall be fully paid for in money at the par value of said stock, and the money deposited in the treasury of said company, and said stock so subscribed shall not be assignable until the whole of the same shall be so paid in, and no payment on account of capital of said company shall be made except in money; and said company is hereby prohibited from returning or rebating any part of the money so paid. No bonds in excess of the amount of capital paid and received shall be authorized or issued until such paid capital shall amount to the sum of $5,000,000. No part of the capital stock paid in shall be at any time withdrawn or returned to the stockholders or in any manner diverted from the proper uses of the corporation. Every person violating or aiding in the violation of the foregoing provision shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine not exceeding $10,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both of such punishments, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, but I desire the amendment which has just been read incorporated. I have no doubt, sir, that a canal across that Isthmus will be built within a short time, and I feel equally certain that the United States should permit no foreign country to build or control that canal. I think that is manifest public policy. I have listened with strict attention to the argument of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and other gentlemen that we have no power under the Constitution to grant such a charter as this, and I must admit that, while I entertain doubts, I have not been convinced by their arguments. Indeed, no one can satisfactorily discuss that question in the limited time allowed to a speaker under this order (five minutes). But I incline very strongly to the opinion that the United States has the right to create this corporation, or the right to build the canal; and if I were sure that the United States could build and operate it without any jobbery, I am not ready to say that I would not favor that, so strongly am I impressed with the conviction that it is a work whose importance can hardly be overestimated. But, Mr. Chairman, we all know what has been the effect of the issuance of stock that represents no capital.

It is an injustice to the whole people to permit any corporation created to act as a common carrier to issue one dollar of stock except as the evidence of and to the amount of the capital actually paid into its treasury. Nothing has worked greater injustice to our people, and especially to the people of the West, than such fraudulent issues of unpaid-for stock. Nothing has so embarrassed the adjustment or regulation of freight charges.

Certificates of stock ordinarily soon pass out of the hands of the original holders into the hands of bona fide holders for value, who have neither knowledge nor means of knowledge that such certificates are not what they purport to be—certificates of actual stock of the company. The purchaser of such certificates reasonably expects and insists that the tolls or freights charged by the corporation shall be fixed and kept so high as to pay a reasonable rate of interest on all the stock issued. If so, the people are compelled to pay interest on a fictitious capital, on certificates of stock issued without consideration; if not, the bona fide purchaser of such stock, without any fault or negligence on his part, is deprived of any return for his money.

Wrong and injustice to the whole people, or to the purchaser of such stock, can only be prevented by preventing the issue of stock beyond the amount of money actually paid in. We should learn wisdom from the past.

Mr. WHEELER. Before this is finally acted upon I desire to have an opportunity to express myself as thoroughly in favor of the purpose of this bill. I believe, Mr. Chairman, in progress, in advancement, in civilization, and in development, and when gentlemen come here and simply ask the House of Representatives and the Senate to give their sanction to an enterprise which has for its purpose the opening of that great gateway of commerce, I do not think it is good statemanship to hesitate in giving one kind word to a matter which materially involves the best interest of our people.

There is nothing so important to the progress of American civilization as the development of American commerce, and nothing will do more to develop American commerce than the opening of this great highway between the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans. All that is asked of this Government is that it give its legislative sanction; to say to the world, as it were, that this project is a legitimate effort to develop the commerce of the world, because the success of this enterprise will not benefit one section alone, nor will its great benefits be confined to one country, but it affects the whole civilized world; and when such a request is made, I submit that American intelligence demands such recognition of the enterprise of its citizens; and this is really all that is proposed by the bill. This is all, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say on the subject. I will not further delay action. I hope the bill will pass, and this great project be put under way with the utmost possible promptitude.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Chairman, in order that there be no misunderstanding in regard to my position on this bill I desire to say that if its advocates will put it in proper form, if they will ingraft upon it the proper safeguards to protect the people who will invest their money and at the same time protect the Government, it shall have my vote with pleasure. As to the amendment which has been offered, it is a wholesome and a prudent one. It is a proposition to put a check upon the floodgates by which almost every corporation in every State in our country has been swamped with watered stock. Take our great Pacific railroads; they got money enough out of the Government to construct them, and yet their stock and bonds were swelled to hundreds of millions. Now, this is a proposition to establish a corporation with a capital of $100,000,000, with the right to double it.

Why, sir, the immortal Jackson, when he gave the order to remove the deposits from the United States Bank, took the position that there was danger to the liberty of the people from a great corporation like that, although its wealth amounted only to about $30,000,000; but here is a proposition to ingraft upon our statute-book authority for a corporation with $100,000,000 of capital, with the right to double it and also with the right to augment it further by borrowing hundreds of millions more. Does every gentleman upon the floor of this House understand the fact that the people behind this enterprise have stated over their own signatures to the House that the work can be constructed for $74,000,000? Seventy-four million dollars is what they say will complete the whole work, yet now they come and ask us to give them a charter for a company with a capital of $200,000,000, with the right to bond unlimited. Have you not examples enough before you within the borders of our own country to warn you to halt, to pause and consider what you do before you pass this bill? The requirement of the paying in of 10 per cent. in cash is a proper thing. There are other provisions in this bill in regard to the stock which they have a right to issue. They can take it out of the treasury and pay it out for swamp lands or anything else they please. We have had enough of that kind of business in the State of New York, and as a member of this House from that State I can not consent to vote for a bill which would ingraft upon the statute-book of the nation any such legislation as this.

When they issue their stock let it be for money. The stock should be issued to the people who subscribe for it upon the payment of their cash, and it should not be issued simply upon the turning over of some unimportant or valueless lands. Therefore I am in favor of this amendment because it is a wise and wholesome one and I believe it should be adopted by this House. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in on line 42. Just before the word "value," in that line, I propose to insert the words "fair and reasonable."

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have looked at this amendment and I see no objection to it, and I do not think any gentleman will object to it.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. If the amendment just proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] shall be adopted in the Committee of the Whole will it be in order to move to strike out so much of the bill as occurs after the word "act," in line 41, down to and including the word "assessment," in line 44, which will include this amendment?

Mr. BAYNE. The proposition should be perfected before it is voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would be competent to move to strike out the portion of the bill including the amendment, provided the motion included more; but it would not be competent to move to strike out those words alone.

Mr. PAYSON. That was my idea, but I wanted to be certain about it.

The amendment of Mr. BAYNE was agreed to.

Mr. STOCKDALE offered the following:

After section 2 insert the following:

"Provided, That the concessions of the Nicaraguan Government, or any part thereof, shall not be changed, nor shall the company here chartered release the Government of Nicaragua from any of said concessions without the consent of the Government of the United States first obtained; and any violation of this provision shall operate as a forfeiture of the franchise of the company."

Mr. STOCKDALE withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. STOCKDALE. I have not concluded my remarks and will take the advantage of extending them in the RECORD. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the request made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] in reference to the extension of remarks in the RECORD be made general.

The CHAIRMAN. That had better be done in the House.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, in parliamentary practice there are two well-recognized ways to defeat a measure, one by direct opposition to the measure itself, and the other by offering amendments to fritter it away and thus indirectly defeat it.

With all due deference to the gentlemen who have offered amendments—some entirely proper—to this bill, it does seem to me as if there is a settled purpose on the part of some gentlemen to defeat it in an indirect way. While admitting the importance of the object sought, at the same time tend practically to defeat it.

The gentlemen who propose to construct this canal have obtained from the Nicaraguan Government certain important concessions, and they come to Congress simply for the purpose of obtaining an act of incorporation for that company. They do not ask that this Government shall be responsible for a single dollar. They are willing, as has been said already, that there may be a provision in the charter taking away all possibility of liability on the part of the Government.

If the object to be obtained is an important one, if it is agreed, as I think it is, that the Nicaraguan Canal is of the utmost national importance, this Congress should either be prepared to grant an act of incorporation to the gentlemen who propose to control it with their own means and the concessions obtained from Nicaragua, or go forward and make suitable appropriations for the construction of the canal by the Government itself. No one, however, supposes that the Government of the United States is either now or hereafter to appropriate the large amount of money required for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus, the lowest estimate of cost being $65,000,000 and the probable cost $100,000,000. If a canal is built at all it must be built by private means. If done by private means, in consequence of the magnitude of the operation, the gentlemen who are to be associated for that purpose must have an act of incorporation, and in order to make that act of incorporation effective in raising money it must have the recognition of the Government of the United States or of some other well-known government, in order to give it character sufficient to raise funds abroad. It is agreed that the act of incorporation shall contain a provision that the Government shall not be liable for a single dollar of outlay.

Now, if the Government is not prepared to enter upon this work itself, and it is conceded that it is not, what reasonable objection can there be to granting an act of incorporation, exempting the Government of the United States from liability, couched in such terms as will give success to this enterprise?

There have been already attached to the bill amendments which must in some measure militate against the success of the enterprise, and others more injurious are to be offered. The concession of Nicaragua provides that Nicaraguan vessels in her coastwise trade shall be charged only 50 per cent. of the regular toll, and we have already provided by amendment that the Congress of the United States may fix these tolls.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HERBERT was recognized.

Mr. SPINOLA. I hope the gentleman from Maine will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like to have a few minutes longer.

Mr. HERBERT. If I can be next recognized I have no objection to the gentleman's proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to permitting the gentleman from Maine to extend his remarks for five minutes longer?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, as I was about to say, the amendment which has been adopted, giving authority to the Congress of the United States to regulate the tolls upon this canal, seriously militates against one of the conditions of the concession, because the Congress of the United States may provide a fixed toll, and that this toll shall be uniform, when the concession itself provides that the toll charged to Nicaraguan vessels engaged in the coastwise trade shall be only 50 per cent. of the tolls charged to other vessels. So we may go on with these amendments—amendments however just and proper they might be if the canal was to be built on our own soil, yet which tend to defeat the objects we have in contemplation in granting the charter.

There has been properly included in the bill a provision reserving to Congress the right to repeal, alter, or amend the charter, and this reservation affords sufficient protection against an improper use of the powers granted the company, and renders it unnecessary to attach other conditions which can do us no good, but which may deter capital, always timid, from running the risks of an enterprise of this magnitude.

Now, we are agreed that it is exceedingly important that a canal should be constructed to connect the two oceans at the earliest possible day. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAVIS] has stated the reasons which make this project so important that I need not repeat them. It is important, not simply that we may have a short route for trade with the East and with the western coast of South America, but it is peculiarly important to the citizens of the United States, because such a canal gives to our vessels in the coastwise trade an important advantage. The trade by water between the Atlantic and the Pacific States, which now goes round Cape Horn or is broken at the Isthmus, is a coastwise trade, and none but the vessels of the United States can participate in it. Therefore, the opening of this canal will give to vessels of the United States engaged in the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific States the sole advantage, because they have the exclusive trade.

It will shorten the route of our vessels which now go round the Horn, as has been stated, 7,000 miles. It is an advantage from this point of view, and it is so great that we ought not to throw any obstacle in the way of the success, and the speedy success of such an enterprise. Let the conditions that we would attach to the bill be reasonable, and let them be such as will further the enterprise and secure its ultimate success, and not hamper and retard it.

I can not understand why gentlemen in a matter of this kind—a matter in which the United States is not to invest or make itself liable for a single dollar—should press for the attachment of conditions the inevitable effect of which will be to prevent the successful completion of the great enterprise. We are liable, sir, to play the part of the "dog in the manger" in this enterprise, for assuredly we can not stand here preventing the success of this canal scheme and have the whole world look patiently on and permit us to do nothing ourselves or allow nothing to be done by others towards its completion very much longer.

The time is not far distant when some other nation of the world will in some manner take hold of this enterprise, if not directly, by the incorporation of a private company, composed not simply of alien stockholders and alien citizens, but having its place of business and the majority of its directors in some other country.

This canal, built by an American company, with its principal place of business in this country, with the majority of its directors American citizens, will in effect be an American company and subject so largely to our control that we shall have the same advantages accrue from the enterprise that would accrue from a Government canal without the expenditure.

Let us not then seek to attach to this bill unnecessary amendments that will have the effect of defeating the greatest enterprise of modern times. However great an enterprise was the Suez Canal—and the results which have flowed from it have been great—yet the plan of connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans by means of a canal is far higher in importance and far greater in the magnitude of the results to flow from it than the Suez Canal.

Let us rise to the importance of the subject here presented. Let us sink petty prejudices and narrow fears and grant such generous conditions as will secure the success of an enterprise of such magnitude as requires our friendly interest, and not the jealous antagonism of the Congress of the American people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT rose.

Mr. CLARDY. Before the gentleman from Alabama proceeds, I would like to ask if we can not agree to some limitation of the discussion on this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Not at this time.

Mr. CLARDY. We have been discussing the sections indiscriminately, but I would ask to limit debate on the second section.

Mr. PAYSON. No.

Mr. CLARDY. I would suggest that the limitation be fixed at ten minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. I object to the limitation.

Mr. CLARDY. I regret that we can not agree to fix some time.

Mr. PAYSON. We can not agree to limit the debate now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that this committee fully comprehends the great importance of the step which it seems we are about to take. The gentleman from Maine has just said that unless this charter is granted by the Congress of the United States, unless these corporators, in other words, have back of them this great and powerful Government, this enterprise now projected will be a failure. What does that mean? Will a corporation created by a State fail simply because, as has been said here, a charter from a State can not give sufficient dignity to the enterprise? No, sir. The real objection these gentlemen have to a State charter is that no State has the power to defend the rights it grants.

A charter is wanted from this Government because when Congress grants it, and when under it citizens of the United States have entered upon the work of constructing this canal, the United States Government will be behind them and bound, just as much as if it had pledged itself in the act of incorporation, to protect and defend the enterprise it will have authorized and inaugurated.

In other words, the Government of the United States is to undertake a protectorate over this canal, be the consequences and complications that may arise out of it what they may. Are we prepared to take that step? I am not here now to say that we ought not to do it, but if we do, we ought to do so with our eyes open.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is the duty of the General Government any greater to defend the rights and protect the property and persons of their citizens under a concession from the state of Nicaragua without the grant of a charter than it would be if granted? Or is not the duty embraced in the relation of the citizen with the Government?

Mr. HERBERT. I was about to state as one step in my argument that very proposition—that it is the duty of the Government to protect its citizens in their rights of person and property in every country in the world; it does not matter in what land or under what laws these rights arise. One of the first acts of this Administration was to send a fleet down to protect the property of our citizens when imperiled by a revolution in Costa Rica. All men admitted that this was our bounden duty without stopping to inquire how the rights of our citizens were acquired. If this be true, then my next proposition is, if I may use the expression, that the Government is doubly bound to protect its citizens who shall invest their money deliberately sanctioned by a charter granted by Congress.

We bind ourselves to them by a solemn contract. Here it is: They tell us by their friends on this floor that they are not satisfied with a State charter and that if we do not grant a charter they will not undertake the work. If we do grant the charter they say they will construct the canal. We grant on condition they undertake the work. They do undertake it; comply with its condition. What element of an express direct unequivocal contract of protection is wanting? Every court in the world would decree this to be a contract binding this Government to protect and defend that canal. Why, sir, we even reserve the right to regulate tolls. Now, what does all this mean? What are to be the results of this step we are invited to take?

In 1850 or 1851 the Clayton-Bulwer treaty was made. Great Britain and the United States agreed at that time to exercise a joint protectorate over any interoceanic railroad or canal or water way that was to be built along this route. It was expected at that time that these two nations, Great Britain being the strongest naval power in the world, would be able easily to protect any company that might build a way across the route now proposed. Now, that Clayton-Bulwer treaty——

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Or by the Isthmus, also.

Mr. HERBERT. No; it only contemplated the Nicaragua route.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Massachusetts. Under that treaty the railroad was built.

Mr. HERBERT. No canal was built. Nothing was done under that treaty. The United States has claimed several times, through its Secretary of State, that the treaty was practically defunct, and that we were no longer bound by it; but Great Britain has never acknowledged it. Great Britain to-day claims that this is a binding treaty.

Mr. DUNN. Great Britain has violated it herself.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not propose to discuss that. I am simply adverse to this difference between the two countries as one of the complications likely to arise through our undertaking to make ourselves a protectorate of that route.

Mr. CLARDY. Do we not do it under the treaty of 1867 between this Government and the Government of Nicaragua?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think so.

Mr. CLARDY. I think we do.

Mr. HERBERT. No question has arisen or will arise until we incorporate this company, for the gentlemen who are at the head of the enterprise tell us nothing will be done unless we give them a charter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr CLARDY. I move that the committee do now rise, with a view to limiting debate.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks leave to continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was about to say this, that when Great Britain and the United States jointly agreed by that Clayton-Bulwer treaty that they would protect any way across an interoceanic route that might be constructed across there, they were amply able to do it. Their combined navies were ample and sufficient without addition or re-enforcement. How are we situated to-day? We undertake this task by ourselves.

We have not and will not have for years a navy that will be able to defend that canal. In my opinion, unless we enter upon some foreign scheme that will involve complications of this kind, we shall never need a navy as great as that of England or of France or of the other great European nations; certainly not until a war with some of those nations is threatened.

But when we undertake to guaranty the neutrality of this canal and to protect it, we will require, in the first place, a naval station at the east end of the canal and a naval station at the west end, and then we will require a navy that will cost from fifty to seventy-five, or perhaps one hundred million dollars a year, in order to be able to cope with the great navies of Europe. Either that, or we must acquire the territory between our own country and Nicaragua; we must annex Mexico, with its mongrel hordes, and Guatemala and Honduras, with their black-and-tan populations.

We must have all the countries that lie between us and the canal, in order that we may be able to march our armies there. We can not protect the canal without either a navy which will be able to cope with the proudest navies in the world, or else some means of marching our armies to the spot in case of necessity.

I think all these consequences may come—I fear, I may even say, they are likely to come from the adoption of this scheme. It is a proposition to enter upon a new policy—something often discussed, but never yet accomplished—a departure from the traditional policy of the country, no entangling alliances with foreign nations.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the question is, Are we prepared to take such a step? These corporators know full well that when we grant them this charter, then the Government will be bound to protect them.

Are we willing to assume the conesquences which may follow

The work is a very important one, important especially to the section I have the honor in part to represent. I do not even say that I shall vote against it, yet I have not been able so far to see my way to support it. I do think, sir, that it ought to be discussed thoroughly, and that before we take a step like this we ought to weigh well the consequences that may ensue.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of every movement which will improve our commercial and social relations with the republics of Central and South America, and I am therefore heartily in favor of the bill now under consideration. I see no reason for the alarm which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has expressed. I see no "Trojan horse" in this movement which will in any way endanger the real interests of our Republic.

It seems to me that this bill has now all the safeguards that are necessary, and that it ought to pass. At the last session of Congress the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] was adopted. It declared that—

Nothing in this act shall be held or construed to in any manner involve the United States in any pecuniary obligation whatever, other than in respect to the payment of tolls as provided for in this act.

And to-day an amendment similar to that has been introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and has been adopted. I think, therefore, that we have all the safeguards on that point that we need. As regards the assertion that the bill is of doubtful constitutionality, presented by some gentlemen, I see nothing in the bill to justify such an assertion. I have failed to hear any member upon this floor show that there is anything in the bill that is unconstitutional.

And as regards the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] who has just taken his seat, that if we pass this bill and incorporate this company our Government will have to protect the company, the answer is that under international law we will extend to such a corporation only the attention and protection we would extend to the interests of any citizen of the United States who might be harshly or unjustly treated in any foreign country. Therefore I think there is no ground for that objection.

Nicaragua and her sister Central American republics have a strong disposition to affiliate their interests with the interests of our Republic. The geographical position of the republics of Central America, the fact that they have adopted constitutions in many respects similar to ours, and the fact that they are connected with us by land have induced the people of Nicaragua and of the other republics of Central America to be anxious to cultivate more intimate commercial and social relations with us; yet it seems that our Government and our people are tardy and timid in taking proper action.

It seems that when we are asked simply to incorporate a company to build a ship-canal, that is desired by the citizens of Nicaragua and needed by millions of people and intended to connect the waters of the Atlantic Ocean with the waters of the Pacific Ocean, and thereby improve and facilitate commerce, there are found those who are opposed to the concession.

There is no appropriation of money in this bill. There is nothing in it which will compel us in the future to appropriate money out of the Treasury of the United States to aid this enterprise. The people of Nicaragua have long been desirous for the construction of this canal, and they look to us first among the nations of the earth to take up the work and assist in carrying it through, so far as granting these powers asked for in the bill are concerned.

They do not ask any money. They simply ask this Congress, the Congress of the greatest Republic in the world, to come forward and assist in this great movement by granting a simple act of incorporation in which citizens of the United States occupy a conspicuous place. They have been asking this for years, and if we delay much longer we will see them turn to other countries for these powers and for this assistance. It is a lamentable fact that most of the commerce and trade of the republics of Central America and of South America now goes to Europe, when most of it should come to this country.

In this country we have a surplus of nearly every farm product, and the market for our surplus lies south of us in the republics of Central America and South America; and I am in favor, sir, of doing everything that is proper towards encouraging the friendship that should exist between our Republic and the republics of Central America and of South America, and of encouraging and strengthening our commercial relations with the people of those republics.

The passage of this bill is in the line of progress, improvement, and advancement, both for our country and our neighboring countries. I believe the time has come when we should turn our minds away from party hostilities and political strife to the grander and broader and more patriotic questions of enlarged commercial facilities, improved business relations, and extended markets for our home products; and the passage of the bill under consideration is therefore proper and necessary.

Mr. CLARDY. With the view of limiting debate, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCMILLIN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar having had under consideration the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of Senate bill 1305, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the bill and amendments be limited to thirty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, can that motion be made as to the whole bill? It seems to me it should be confined to some particular section of the bill. It can not apply to any portion of the bill which has not already been the subject of amendment.

Mr. WEAVER. I suggest to the gentleman that when by unanimous consent we have been considering this bill in a general way it is too late now to raise the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think there has been no consent upon the subject except, I presume, by acquiescence. There has been no express consent. No consent has been asked or obtained except by implication.

Mr. CLARDY. The section under consideration is the last section, at any rate.

Mr. SPINOLA. Not by any means.

Mr. PAYSON. There is pending an amendment to the second section.

Mr. SPINOLA. And quite a number of amendments are yet to be offered to the first section.

Mr. CLARDY. We recurred to the second section by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that under our rules when a bill contains a number of sections and is considered in an informal way, as this bill has been, different portions having been under consideration and made the subject of amendment, the true mode of procedure after all is for the gentleman having charge of the bill to move to close debate on successive sections. Certainly debate could not be closed in this way upon the whole bill.

Mr. CLARDY. I make my motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not conceive how it can be in order under our rules to move to close debate on the whole bill. The rule contemplates simply that the gentleman in charge of a bill may have the right to move to close debate on a given amendment or on a given paragraph and amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair understood the gentleman from Missouri to move, pending the motion to go into Committee of the Whole, that debate be limited to twenty minutes on the pending section.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood differently.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Missouri sought to have his motion apply to the whole bill.

Mr. CLARDY. I did not hear the statement just made by the Chair.

Mr. BLOUNT. As the gentleman from Missouri did not hear the statement, I will take the liberty of saying that, according to the understanding of the Chair, the gentleman from Missouri moved to limit debate to twenty minutes upon only a single section of the bill.

Mr. CLARDY. In my motion I embraced the entire bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would indicate to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] that in the opinion of the Chair it is hardly in order now to move to limit debate upon the entire bill.

Mr. CLARDY. I move, then, to close debate—upon what section were we engaged?

Mr. MCMILLIN. The second section is the one to which the pending amendment relates.

Mr. CLARDY. I move that all debate on the second section and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] moved an amendment to come in after the word "value," in line 42, page 3 of the bill, which amendment was adopted. While the amendment was pending I made a parliamentary inquiry of the then occupant of the chair whether it would be in order after the adoption of that amendment to move to strike out certain lines of the first section. The Chair stated that it would be and agreed to recognize me for that purpose. I have been on my feet a number of times seeking for that recognition, but have not received it.

Mr. CLARDY. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON]. I will modify my motion so as to reserve his rights in this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. CLARDY. I move that all debate on the first section and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. PAYSON. Does that include only pending amendments, or also amendments to be offered?

Mr. CLARDY. Pending amendments and those yet to be offered to the first section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of Senate bill 1305; and pending that motion, moves that all debate on the first section be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BAYNE. On the first section and all amendments thereto?

Mr. PAYSON. Is that motion debatable?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to limit debate is not debatable.

Mr. PAYSON. I desire to suggest, if I may be allowed a word, that the time proposed seems to me altogether too brief.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, comes up now practically for the first time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, in the chair). For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. PAYSON. I rise for the purpose of making a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is presented practically for the first time to-day, for although called up during the last session of Congress, very many members of the House, indeed more than a majority of them, were not in attendance. I recollect the accounts of it in the newspapers, for I have not read the report of the proceedings in the RECORD. It was only prevented from passing at that time by the earnest opposition of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. WASHINGTON], who insisted, as I think very properly, that a bill of this magnitude ought not to be considered in the absence of a quorum.

I regard this bill as important as any which has been presented so far during this Congress. Several amendments I know are to be offered which are not antagonistic to the purposes of the bill, and in my judgment to limit the debate on the pending section of the bill, as well as upon these amendments, to ten minutes is unseemly. It seems to me that sufficient time should be given to gentlemen who do not oppose the project, but who object to the terms in which it is proposed, in order that they present the question from their point of view. I think, therefore, the time should be extended to some more reasonable limit.

Mr. SPINOLA. Say half an hour.

Mr. PAYSON. Very well; I will suggest that debate be extended to thirty minutes on the pending section and the amendments thereto.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 74.

Mr. SPINOLA. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as tellers Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. CLARDY.

Mr. LANHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If we take a recess now, would not this bill be the unfinished business on next Friday in the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. LANHAM. Then I suggest that by unanimous consent we agree to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, as it is very evident we can not accomplish anything further this evening.

There was no objection.

Mr. MATSON rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before announcing the result the Chair will hear what the gentleman from Indiana has to say.

Mr. MATSON. I ask, by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to change the order for the evening session this evening and for Friday evening sessions hereafter, so as to have the meeting at half past 7 instead of 8 o'clock, and the adjournment at 10 o'clock instead of half past 10.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair put the question to the House on the request for unanimous consent by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM] that the House take a recess, and there was no objection, so that the House has determined to take a recess.

Mr. ROGERS. I addressed the Chair several times in order to introduce a resolution calling for information which is of pressing importance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would like to oblige the gentleman from Arkansas, but knows of no way to recall the action taken by the House by unanimous consent, and which has already been announced.

The House accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) was called to order by Mr. MCMILLIN, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1888.

SIR: Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN is designated to preside at the session of the House this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calender (Mr. DOCKERY in the chair).

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the order of proceeding this evening may be the same as that at the close of the last session; that is to say, that the names of members be called in their alphabetical order, beginning where the roll was last ended, and that each member as his name is called be permitted to ask consideration of a bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

NANCY A. HAYES.

Mr. FUNSTON (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy A. Hayes, widow of Josiah E. Hayes, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twelfth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is adopted, and the passage of the bill is recommended.

SENATE REPORT.

The claimant under this bill is Nancy A. Hayes, widow of Josiah E. Hayes, deceased, late lieutenant-colonel of the Twelfth Regiment Kansas Volunteers. The soldier enlisted September 30, 1862, and was discharged June 30, 1865. At the battle of Jenkins Ferry, Ark., April 30, 1864, while commanding his regiment, he was wounded in the left leg, near the thigh, causing amputation. He was captured by the enemy and taken to Princeton, Ark., and was held a prisoner until released, February 24, 1865, at mouth of Red River.

He died March 8, 1881, and at date of his death was in receipt of a pension of $30 per month. On May 19, 1881, the claimant made application for widow's pension, alleging "that the soldier suffered amputation of left leg near the hip-joint. Over one year afterwards the leg was cut open and a piece of the ball removed, and he was never entirely free from pain, and was seldom able to sleep unless under the influence of opiates." The Commissioner of Pensions rejected the claim May 14, 1884, on the ground "that the soldier's death, caused from disease of lungs, was not a result of the amputation of a leg for which he was pensioned, nor is it otherwise shown to have been due to his military service."

Dr. Thomas Hammil swears—

"That he was frequently called upon to treat soldier when suffering from the effects of his wound. His leg was amputated near the hip-joint, and more than a year after the operation the wound broke out and a piece of lead was taken from the stump one-half the weight of a minie-ball. He never was able to wear an artificial limb. Believes disability from wound constantly increased, and was a constant sufferer and totally unfit for any labor; that he needed continued care, especially at night, and that he seldom slept, on account of pain from the stump of his amputated limb; that during his last year valvular disease of the heart set in, and in opinion of affiant disease of heart is caused by the breaking down of the nervous system from constant pain in his amputated leg."

Dr. E. G. Ward swears—

"That he first saw the soldier March 3, 1881; found him suffering from acute croupous pneumonia, involving lower lobe of right lung, and valvular disease of heart, which, owing to the rapid heart-action, it was impossible to locate with certainty, though the murmur was due to mitral stenosis. This heart complication was so grave as to warrant at once an unfavorable prognosis. Also suffered intensely from pain in the stump of amputated leg; complained also of constant twitching of the muscles of the stump. This pain and twitching prevented him from getting any good rest. The amount of lung involved in the pneumonia process was not large. The pulse, temperature, and respiration all indicated a mild attack of pneumonia, and but for the complications mentioned there would have been no reason to have expected a fatal termination. Death occurred on March 8—five days after affiant began to treat him."

George B. Lord, in a letter to the Commissioner of Pensions, states—

"That he was present at the death of Colonel Hayes, and had known him intimately for years before, and while he may have taken cold at Eureka Springs, where he died, it had very little, if anything, to do with his death. He died from those nervous pains caused from the amputation of his leg, from which we had expected many times in the last few years of his life that he would die. Each one of the nervous spells (and he had them often) seemed to weaken him, and when the last came his vitality was so reduced that he was not able to recover. There is not a particle of doubt in my mind * * * that the cause of Colonel Hayes's death * * * was directly traceable to his service in the late war and the loss of the leg."

Your committee are of the opinion that the theory of Mr. Lord is reasonable, and taking into consideration the prison experience of the soldier, which unquestionably tended to weaken and impair the constitution so as to be unable to ward off disease, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE A. GLOVER.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 11223) to increase the pension of George A. Glover.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of George A. Glover, late a private in Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

George A. Glover served as private of Company C, Thirteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteers, from August 13, 1862, to June 8, 1865. He is now a pensioner at the rate of $8 per month for chronic diarrhea, ulcers on back and limbs, and results of the former. He claims disease of liver and general debility as additional results of the diarrhea, but this claim has been denied by the Pension Bureau.

Dr. T. Hiland, under date of January 28, 1888, testifies:

"That Glover is unable to perform mental or physical labor, or to walk any distance; has a feebleness of action of heart pointing towards fatty degeneration, enlarged liver, poor digestion, diarrhea more or less all the time. There is an ulcer in rectum above sphincter; brain works feebly; there are no marked symptoms of softening, but a feebleness and uncertainty about walking which does not seem to be spinal alone; depends upon others for decisions about the most ordinary events of life; is a broken-down man, with no hope of regaining health. Pensioner's condition is undoubtedly due to chronic malarial dysentery."

The Concord board of examining surgeons describe similar symptoms and conditions, and state:

"That if this man's record proves that since leaving the service he has suffered from chronic diarrhea, making it probable that the ulceration of the rectum is a result, he is entitled to a rating as below for his present disabilities. His general appearance is bad, his nutrition is imperfect, and he is undoubtedly incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor. Rate total, second grade, for ulceration of the rectum and results."

The fact that pension has been allowed and is now paid for chronic diarrhea is sufficient evidence that pensioner has suffered therefrom ever since discharge. Disease of liver as well as of heart are no unfrequent sequences of chronic diarrhea.

The writer of this report is personally acquainted with the pensioner and his condition, and has been for some years, and it is his professional opinion that the present pitiable condition described by the several surgeons is entirely due to the existing chronic diarrhea and disease of rectum.

Pensioner did receive a slight injury a few years ago, but it is clearly shown by the report of the special examiner that it in no way added to or aggravated the disability contracted in the service and line of duty.

It is also personally known to the author of this report that pensioner by reason of his inability to perform labor of any kind is dependent for his support upon the earnings of his wife.

Your committee are of opinion that the increase asked for should be granted, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM T. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. HUNTER (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9172) granting a pension to William T. Underwood.

The bill was read at length.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The claimant enlisted March 9, 1865, and was honorably discharged June 6, 1865. In application, filed September 12, 1870, he alleges scrofula in neck and head, leaving the neck stiff and contracted; on or about May 16, 1865, also took measles, and by exposure said measles settled in his lungs, causing cough and serious injury to those organs. The claim was rejected on the ground that the disease, scrofula, and results existed prior to enlistment. The claimant was drafted and forced into the service, and although the seeds of the disease may have been in the system, the committee believe that the radical change in the soldier's manner of life aroused the latent malady into action.

We therefore submit a favorable report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not understand from the reading of the report when this soldier enlisted.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan, in the chair). The Clerk will read that portion of the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The claimant enlisted March 9, 1865, and was honorably discharged June 6, 1865.

Mr. KILGORE. It occurs to me that March 6, 1865, was just about taking-up-hat time of the war. [Laughter.] I will have to "kick" about that. I give my friend from Kentucky an opportunity to withdraw the bill, otherwise I shall be compelled to make the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. HUNTER. I withdraw the bill, and will offer another.

ELI GARRETT.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9163) granting a pension to Eli Garrett.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed and authorized to put the name of Eli Garrett, formerly of the United States Navy, on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

Eli Garrett, the claimant, served in Company F, Eighty-fourth Tennessee Volunteers (subsequently the Twenty-eighth Tennessee Volunteers), Confederate Army, from December 1, 1862, until in September, 1863, when he was captured by the Federal Army. While a prisoner of war he enlisted in the naval service of the United States at Rock Island, January 22, 1864. He served on the Ohio from that date to July 9, 1864; on the Sabine from July 10, 1864, to August 23, 1864, and on the Ohio from August 24 to September 8, 1864, when he was honorably discharged for disability.

On the 3d day of March, 1877, an act of Congress was approved which amended the pension law so as to remove the disability of those who, having participated in the rebellion against the authority of the United States, afterwards enlisted in the Army of the United States and became disabled.

Under this act the claimant in April, 1878, applied to the Pension Bureau for pension by reason of disease of heart incurred in line of duty while serving on the United States steamer Ohio, in July or August, 1864.

His claim was rejected on the ground that the provisions of the act of March 3, 1877, applied only to those Confederates who enlisted in the Union Army, and that it did not apply to an enlistment in the Union Navy.

The honorable Commissioner of Pensions, in his annual report for 1887, recommends as follows (page 20, annual report 1887):

"I beg to call attention to the fact that the act of March 3, 1877, discriminates unjustly against claimants who, having previously served in the Confederate Army, subsequently served honorably in the United States Navy."

He then quotes the act, and adds:

"The addition of the words 'or Navy' makes the law fair to all classes intended to be covered by it."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JESSE J. CLARK.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 9654) granting an increase of pension to Jesse J. Clark.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Jesse J. Clark, late a private of Company I, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll at the rate of $20 per month, in lieu of the pension of $4 per month which he is now drawing.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The claimant herein is now on the pension-roll at the rate of $4 per month for disability caused by gunshot wound of right arm. From June 8, 1865, he was allowed a pension of $6 per month until December 6, 1882, for disease of lungs. At that date $2 for disease of lungs was discontinued, leaving his pension since that date at $4 per month. August 15, 1887, he made application for increase on account of increased disability in said right arm, alleging that he was almost entirely deprived of its use. He also alleged that he has pain in left breast almost constantly, takes cold easily, coughs and spits up freely at such times and sometimes raises blood; arm pains a good part of the time, worse in bad weather and worse after using. The claim was rejected on account of insufficient evidence to establish the allegations.

The medical examinations since 1865, and other testimony filed with the papers, indicate that the soldier is nearly totally disabled from manual labor by reason of gunshot wound of right arm, and that the disease of lungs for which he was pensioned still exists and is gradually growing worse.

In the opinion of the committee the relief asked for in the bill ought to be granted, and we therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. ELLA M. GROVER.

Mr. HERMANN (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grover.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Ella M. Grover, widow of Cuvier Grover, late colonel of the First United States Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 a month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The bill proposes to increase the pension of the widow of Cuvier Grover, who died June 6, 1885, while holding the rank of colonel of the First Regiment United States Cavalry. She is now a pensioner at the rate of $30 per month, the highest rate allowable under the general pension laws.

Cuvier Grover entered the service in 1846. At the breaking out of the late war he held the rank of captain, but was soon promoted to brigadier-general of volunteers. In that rank he served with the Army of the Potomac in the Virginia Peninsula campaign. Took part in the siege of Yorktown and battle of Williamsburgh. For gallant services in the latter he was brevetted lieutenant-colonel in the regular Army. For like services in the battle of Fair Oaks he was brevetted colonel. General Grover was at the battles of Savage Station, Glendale, and Malvern Hill. In the Northern Virginia campaign of 1862 he took part in the action at Bristoe Station and second Bull Run.

From December 30, 1862, to July, 1864, he commanded a division of the Nineteenth Corps in the Department of the Gulf and participated in the occupation of Baton Rouge and Port Hudson, where he commanded the right wing of the besieging army. From August to December, 1864, he commanded a division of the Nineteenth Corps in the Shenandoah campaign, and on October 16 he was brevetted major-general of volunteers for gallantry at the battles of Winchester and Fisher's Hill. He was severely wounded in the battle of Cedar Creek on the same day. From January to June, 1865, General Grover was in command of the district of Savannah, and in March, 1865, he was brevetted brigadier-general and major-general in the regular Army. From the close of the war until his death General Grover served most of the time on the frontier posts.

The immediate cause of his death was hemorrhage of the lungs, arising from pulmonary abscess, after having been a sufferer from nervous prostration for many years, unquestionably due to his long and faithful field services during the late war, and great exposures to which he was subjected at different times, as shown by the testimony of members of his staff and medical officers of the Army. In particular was he a great sufferer from facial neuralgia, due to extraordinary exposure during the Banks campaign.

Mrs. Grover has a very limited income, with three small children to provide for. The long and gallant services of her husband heretofore referred to, which are made more conspicuous by the testimonials of his superior officers, on file with your committee, would seem to entitle her to the relief asked for, which Congress, in many other cases less meritorious, has so cheerfully granted.

For these reasons the accompanying bill is returned with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not understand from the reading of the bill the amount of increase asked. This is a bill, I believe, to increase a pension. What amount is proposed to be given?

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to increase the pension from $30 to $50 per month.

Mr. KILGORE. If my friend will agree to put it at $45 per month I will not make any row about it.

Mr. HERMANN. Under the conditions stated, I accept the suggestion, and thank the gentleman from Texas for his courtesy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to amend the bill by striking out "$50" and inserting "$45."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES S. HARDEN.

Mr. LANDES (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 11378) granting a pension to James S. Harden.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James S. Harden, of West Salem, Ill., late a private in Company D, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11378) granting a pension to James S. Harden, beg leave to report:

They have considered this case and find from the testimony that James S. Harden enlisted February 18, 1865, and was discharged August 4, 1865. The application for a pension was rejected in the Department for the reason that the injuries were not the result of the soldier's service in the Army.

The claimant states that he was injured in the hip and back caused by a log falling on him in May, 1865. Regimental surgeon testifies that the soldier was injured as stated, and that he saw him in his quarters and sent him to the hospital. Captain Goble testifies that the soldier was hurt or injured, but he is unable to state how he was injured. Comrade L. T. Johnson testifies that the soldier was injured as he states, and that he was with him at the time assisting him to carry the log.

Several other witnesses testify to the injury. Dr. Hetzler testifies in the record that in 1865 the soldier came to him shortly after discharge for treatment for his leg and back, and he could do nothing for him; that the movement of the hip joint was impaired, and muscles wasted, etc. There is some testimony in the record tending to prove that the injury complained of was due to rheumatism, but against this prior soundness is shown, and your committee, from a careful consideration of the testimony, arrive at the conclusion that the soldier's injuries are due to his army service, and therefore report the bill back with a recommendation that the same do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE S. THWING.

Mr. LAWLER (when his name was called). I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George S. Thwing, formerly of Company E, First Regiment New York Marine Artillery.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

Your committee have considered this case and have adopted the Senate report herein as their own report, and in view of the facts of this case recommend that this bill do pass.

[Senate Report No. 909, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing, have examined the same, and report:

The case of the claimant under the bill is peculiar and lamentable. He was private in Company E, First Regiment New York Marine Artillery, having enlisted in May, 1862, at the age of eighteen years. While in service at New Berne, N. C., in November, 1862, he was furnished a leave and pass from the provost-marshal for fifteen days to visit the camp of the Thirty-ninth Illinois Volunteers, located about 5 miles from New Berne. While crossing the country in that direction he was arrested and taken to the headquarters of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Volunteers, where in spite of his leave and pass he was accused of being a spy and struck on the head with the butt-end of a musket in the hands of the adjutant of that regiment. He was placed in the guard-house, and it was several weeks before he could communicate with the officers of his regiment.

The injury resulted in insanity, and, after confinement in different hospitals as a lunatic for about six months, he was discharged from the service. He has since then been subject to insane attacks which last from weeks to months, rendering him incapable of regular labor and obliging him to live free from noise and excitement, and depending on relatives for support. His injury is described by the superintendent of the insane hospital of Cook County, Illinois, as a lesion apparent in right frontal region, extending from hair line down to external angle of right orbit, and his malady is termed "recurrent insanity."

On presentation of the case at the Pension Office it was rejected under the technical significance which has been given to the law on the ground that the injury was not incurred in the line of duty.

The case is different from that where a soldier on leave meets with an accident, or receives an injury at the hands of civilians, or in the ordinary course of business or pleasure. This soldier was engaged on a lawful errand, undertaken with the approval of his superiors. He was provided with safeguards which, certifying to his character, made his person inviolable to assault on the part of any officer or man wearing the uniform of the Army. The Government in sanctioning the use of leaves and passes virtually guaranties, within their limitations, the lawful possessor in their peaceful use and protection, and especially against the acts of its own representatives. No higher crime is known to the service than the violation of the free conduct and protection of a pass. The injury in the case under consideration is lifelong and irreparable. It is an injury for which there is no legal remedy. The claimant, in presenting his case to Congress, has taken the only course for relief open to him.

The committee approve the bill and recommend it for passage.

Mr. KILGORE was recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, addressed the Chair.

Mr. KILGORE. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Since the gentleman from Texas yields to me, I will state that I was going to make this remark: It seems, when this matter is boiled down to plain English, that an officer of the United States Army lawlessly struck a soldier on leave, from which an injury, permanent in its character, resulted. It is therefore due to that soldier to give him a pension, according to the theory on which this bill is framed.

Now, it seems to me that this is a very broad ground, and makes a very dangerous precedent in present legislation. That is the whole case in substance. This soldier, on leave of absence, is lawlessly assaulted by a man who was in the service of the Federal Government as an adjutant of a regiment. From the result of that assault the injury was incurred for which a pension is sought.

It was an absolutely lawless assault, without any justification at all; an act for which that man could have been punished and ought to have been punished. Now, this is not a technicality of the Pension Office. I do not know under what administration nor in what manner they rejected that application as not being an injury received in the line of duty. It is perfectly clear that it was not received in the line of duty any more than any other lawless assault made upon a soldier who was in camp or who was on leave. It does seem to me that it is stretching the charity of the Government, for it is a pure gratuity, given without any lawful excuse that there was an injury received in the line of duty. It was a perfectly lawless assault; and upon this ground any soldier who happened to receive an injury in the Federal service during the four years of that war by a lawless assault is entitled to a pension. It simply means that every Federal soldier is entitled to a pension whenever he becomes unable to support himself.

Mr. LAWLER. Is it not shown that he received it in the service and in the line of duty when it is shown he was traveling under a pass? I think the report shows that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. As I understood the report, the facts are that the soldier received a leave of absence for fifteen days; was wrongfully arrested and carried to the headquarters of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts Regiment, and that while there he was struck on the head by the adjutant of that regiment. It was clearly and absolutely an unjustifiable assault, and the result of that blow was a permanent lesion, producing insanity at intervals, which has been the cause of rendering the man incapable of supporting himself. These are the facts, and, as you see, the injury that man is suffering from is clearly the result of the blow given by the adjutant. What is the ground, therefore, upon which we are to grant this pension? Only strip it so that we may know what we are doing; and it is that every Federal soldier who has become, by reason of an assault of anybody, incapable of taking care of himself is to receive a pension.

Now, if Congress is ready in every case to put on the pension-roll a man who was a soldier and is incapable of supporting himself, I am not prepared to say that I will not vote to do it; but I am prepared to say that I am not willing to erect as a precedent that this is a proper ground to put it upon, and that he received it in the line of duty.

Mr. SPOONER. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to the fact that it is in line with other cases where pensions have been granted to soldiers who have been injured by wanton assaults of their comrades, the parties injured not being in fault, not being the aggressor, and not bringing the assault upon themselves.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I know that there have been precedents made here, some of which are incapable of being followed without any propriety. There are cases that have run along a line of margin, and cases that did lie upon a doubtful margin; and I have not failed to give the benefit of the doubt to a soldier who served his country.

I recollect a case where a man was shot in the back accidentally by some soldier before he was mustered into the service. He went from here to the valley of the Shenandoah, and I thought he should receive his pension, although not mustered into the service, on the ground that he was on the march to the enemy. I thought he received a blow sufficient to give him his pension. I would not stand upon the technical ground that he had not been mustered into the service; but this looks like going further than we should go.

Mr. SPOONER. I know nothing of the merits of this particular case——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Neither do I.

Mr. SPOONER. Except what I have gathered from the report; but it is in the line, as I suggest, of many cases in which the rule of action has been to proceed upon the theory, as I understand, that when the soldier has enlisted in the service he is thereby put in a position where, by reason of the brutality of a comrade, or the brutality of his superior officer, if you please, he is liable to be injured in that service; and I think that the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the consideration of cases of that kind have, as far as my recollection and knowledge go, invariably reported in favor of granting pensions where the party in such case was not himself in the wrong and not the aggressor, recognizing that in such a case the soldier was in the service of his country, and thereby was in a position where he incurred the injury by reason of the brutality of his superior officer. In such cases no question has been raised of his being in line of duty.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It seems to me that this is going very far to pay a pension on a ground that is perfectly indefensible. I can understand the propriety of paying a pension to a soldier who has been hurt improperly by his superior officer, acting at the time in the line of duty, and the superior officer overstepping his position. But where a man has been injured in a private renconter with a comrade, to say that he shall be pensioned for service rendered to his country in a time of war, seems to be a contradiction in terms. He may be an object of charity, but certainly the pension-roll does not become a demonstration of honorable service to the country when it is filled with the names of persons who are put there because they have been worsted in a fight with a comrade.

Mr. SPOONER. The gentleman drifts a little away from the facts in this case. He was not in a quarrel with any one.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am speaking of the precedent set by such legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. The precedent that I spoke of was this: Where a young fellow enlisted in the Army, and before he joined his regiment was assaulted in the night time by some ruffians there, who jumped upon him and broke his ribs without the least fault upon his part, he not having entered upon any quarrel and not having been in any sense the aggressor. What should the Government do in such a case?

The committee, looking at it, I think, in a fair and intelligent manner, said in effect: "Here is a boy who entered the service—a dangerous service—and was put into these barracks where he was in a position for this assault to be committed upon him—a boy taken away from the quietude and safety of his home life and put into the Army, where there were brutal men as well as good men," and the committee thought that an injury incurred in such manner and under such circumstances ought to be compensated for in some way by the Government which in good faith the man went out to serve. It seems to me that is a case in the same line as that, and that it is correct in principle.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not mean to say that there are not cases which come so near the dividing line that we ought to give the claimants the benefit of the doubt, but I do mean to say that it is not a good precedent, that it is not in the line of good legislation, nor is it in the line of creditable distinction to our soldiers, to put on the pension-roll persons who are put there really as mere objects of charity and not for the reasons which are laid down in the pension law.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think that we here who favor proper pensions are very much inclined to stickle upon the question whether they shall be granted as a matter of charity, when charity is needed by the pensioner, or granted simply on the ground of honorable service.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will allow me I think I can make a suggestion which will throw some light upon this case. The Pension Bureau itself would have granted a pension to this man only that under its rulings it held that he was not in the line of duty when he was on a leave of absence. His claim was rejected on that ground. During this Congress divers cases have passed this House which had been rejected in the same way at the Pension Office; cases where the injury incurred was not attributable to the fault of the party. The Department ruled in such cases that the claimant was not in the line of duty when he was on leave of absence. That was the ground of objection in this case, and I think there were more than twenty-five bills in similar cases passed by the House during the last session relieving parties whose claims had been rejected under a like ruling of the Department.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. In response to what my friend and colleague from Kentucky [Mr. FINLEY] has said, I desire to say that of course Congress must act as a sort of court, not as a court of revision or appeal, but as an additional court to the Pension Bureau, and I recognize that it is our duty in a great many cases to give pensions to persons who are not entitled to them by the letter of the pension law and whose claims have been legally and properly rejected by the Pension Bureau, but in each case the presumption is against the applicant.

Congress has made a system of pension laws, which system includes the classifications which the Congress has heretofore thought proper. Now, if a claimant does not bring himself within those classifications, it must be presumed that he is not entitled to a pension, and the burden is upon him to show to Congress that he is entitled to a special act granting him a pension. Therefore, every case, in a certain sense, stands upon its own bottom, and ought not to become a precedent for succeeding legislation, because each is a case in which Congress says: "This is exceptional; we grant a pension in this case for a special reason." Now, it struck me when the report in this case was being read that it was a case which ought not to be made one of those exceptions. I have no feeling about it, and I do not expect to make any further opposition to the bill than merely to call the attention of the House to the character of the case.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that the soldier who is to be the beneficiary of this bill was in the service, and was there attacked by an agent of the Government and injured. The Senate committee gave the case a great deal of consideration, and upon an examination of all the facts they were satisfied that a pension ought to be granted and that it should have been granted some time ago. The case is reported here by one of the most careful members of our Pension Committee, Judge LANE, of Illinois, a gentleman so careful and cautious that many of the cases committed to his charge have been reported adversely and not more than two out of ten probably favorably.

I say this in justice to him. The claimant in this case has been in the poor-house and has been depending upon charity, and he is to-day in the Cook County hospital. I think the committee have viewed the case properly even from a technical point of view, holding that while the Pension Office was debarred from granting a pension in such a case, Congress might properly grant one. Why is any pension case brought into Congress? Is it not because of some technicality which prevents the case being allowed in the Pension Office? I have been here on many occasions when bills have been passed which have been afterwards approved by the President in cases not so deserving as this one. I had hoped that as this man has been for so many years without a pension, no opposition at this late day would be made to the proposition.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not intend to interpose any objection which will prevent the consideration of the bill, nor shall I call for a quorum. I simply desired to call attention to the question involved in this case.

Mr. LAWLER. Well, I am willing to let this case go to the President; he looks pretty carefully into these matters, and I am willing to abide the result of his action.

Mr. KILGORE. From the reading of this report I understand this claimant was injured by an assault committed upon him by the adjutant of a Union regiment. Is not that correct?

Mr. LAWLER. While on leave of absence of fifteen days he suffered this injury at the hands of a fellow-soldier.

Mr. KILGORE. Now, if he had been assaulted by the adjutant of a rebel regiment there would have been a great deal more merit in the case. I agree with my friend from Kentucky that this bill proposes to carry the rule a little too far. I dislike very much to interfere with the case of my friend from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER], but to pass a measure of this kind is going a little too far in the granting of pensions.

It has been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois that the President can dispose of this matter. The President did dispose of a good many pension bills. He sat on a good many of them, and sat on them pretty heavily; and he sat on a good many cases that looked like cases of mere camp-followers, deserters, and bounty-jumpers—men not worthy of pensions.

It has been said that I antagonize all pensions. That is not true. I have never antagonized in this House a worthy case within my knowledge. There may be cases of men who did not do their duty in the war, but who have become good citizens since the war. A man may have deserted from the Army, and yet may afterward have acted the part of a good citizen. It is not every man who can "face the music" in battle. Such a man becoming a good citizen since the war may have become an active politician, Democratic or Republican. If a Democratic politician, he has some Democratic friend ready to espouse his cause and seek to procure him a pension. If he is a Republican politician, the same result follows on that side.

Now, I do not believe in granting pensions under any such influences. I do not believe in granting pensions to anybody except those who deserve them. Three things at least ought to concur to enable a man to claim successfully the bounty of the Government. First, he ought to have served the Government in the war; secondly, he should have been disabled; and thirdly, he should be indigent. He should have been disabled in the service—in the regular line of his duty—not in an altercation with a comrade or a superior officer, because it is not reasonable to assume that in such a case the blame is entirely on one side. I am inclined to go further than my friend from Kentucky and to resist the passage of this bill. I regret to have to do so, but that is the way I feel about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation. [The vote was taken.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KILGORE. I call for a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 32, noes 3.

Mr. KILGORE. I shall have to make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER].

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. LAWLER). Withdraw the bill.

Mr. LAWLER. I serve notice upon gentlemen that I will not withdraw this bill. They may work on the feelings of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILGORE] if they wish to. [Laughter.]

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 27, noes 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of no quorum further insisted upon? [A pause.] As the point is not insisted upon, the ayes have it, and the bill is laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair asks the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the reading of Rule XXVII.

The Clerk read as follows:

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports which originated in the House and remained undetermined at the close of the last preceding session shall be in order for action, and all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to call attention to the fact that under this rule Senate bills only are in order for action to-night. Four House bills have already been considered by the committee. The Chair was advised of the terms of this rule, but for the moment it passed from memory.

Mr. LONG. Can we not, by unanimous consent, agree that, as to those bills which have passed, the rule may be waived?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the rule should be enforced.

Mr. LONG. I notice that the rule does not expressly forbid the consideration of this class of business. It provides that certain bills shall be in order during the first six days of a second session, but it does not say that certain other measures shall not be in order. Will the Chair have the rule read again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he has consulted the Speaker of the House and entertains no doubt whatever as to the proper construction of the rule. The Clerk will again read the rule, as requested by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The rule was again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to suggest that by unanimous consent the House bills already considered be allowed to retain their places on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Does that rule become operative before the six days have expired?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that in view of the rule nothing but Senate bills will be in order at this session.

Mr. LONG. The rule, however, does not so expressly state.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would again suggest that he has consulted the Speaker of the House, and has no doubt as to the correctness of the ruling. Unless, therefore, some better plan be suggested, by unanimous consent the four House bills already considered by the committee will be allowed to retain their places on the Calendar.

Mr. LONG. Can they not be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. The difficulty is that if you report them to the House a point of order will send them to the Calendar of unfinished business.

The Chair is of opinion that the plan suggested will relieve the situation of all embarrassment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am no parliamentarian, but it seems to me that it might be done in this way: By having no report made from Committee of the Whole at all. Let the committee go on with its business, and let the report of the business to-night and that of next Friday night be made on that evening.

The CHAIRMAN. But the action of the committee must be reported in some shape to the House to-night; and therefore, unless there be objection, the order suggested by the Chair will be entered.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. MARY M. GIBSON.

Mr. MAISH. Mr. Chairman, if in order, I beg leave to call up at this time the bill (S. 2129) to increase the pension of Mary M. Gibson, widow of Commander William Gibson. This bill, I will say, was made a special order during the last session; and I would like to know if it may now be called up.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not be called up now. It has been considered already by the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair is informed by the Clerk that it is now on the special Calendar.

CATHERINE TATE.

Mr. MCKINNEY called up the bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catherine Tate, widow of John Tate, late of Company C, First Vermont Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate, having considered the same, beg leave to adopt the Senate report as their own, as follows:

"The applicant's husband, John Tate, enlisted November 20, 1863, and was discharged October 2, 1865, for gunshot wound to left hand. He was pensioned at the time of his death, June 18, 1885, at the rate of $16 a month for said wound. The widow's claim was rejected on the ground that the fatal disease of the soldier, congestion of the lungs, was not due to the service.

"The evidence shows that Tate, at enlistment, was a sound man. While lying on the field wounded he contracted a severe cough; when he returned home on a furlough, according to the testimony of Morton Abbott, who had long been acquainted with him, 'his health was poor and he had a bad cough, looked pale and was poor in flesh, and to all appearance suffering from a lung difficulty. Saw him after his discharge; he was still in feeble health and coughed badly; complained of pain in his side.' A comrade, Edwin B. Bardwell, testifies that soldier was sound at enlistment; was with him in hospital at Montpelier, Vt.; soldier then had 'very severe cough, and his health was very poor; hardly able to walk about.'

"The testimony of those who worked with Tate from the time of his discharge until his death shows that he was frequently sick, and never ceased to have a severe cough, often spitting blood, and often complaining of his health.

"Edwin R. Stevens testifies to having sat up nights with Tate; he coughed a great deal and raised offensive matter from his lungs; some of the doctors said he had gangrene of the lungs and others consumption.

"Tate was compelled often to employ medical attendance, from the time of his discharge down. The presumption is strong that the fatal disease was the result of the cough which, it is well established, he contracted in the line of duty, and your committee recommend the passage of the bill. Senate bill 1981, which is duplicate of the present one, is indefinitely postponed."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. LOUISA WARD.

Mr. MOFFITT called up the bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa Ward, mother of Edgar A. Ward, who served as a private in Company H, Twelfth Iowa Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward, submit the following report:

The Committee on Pensions in the Senate, in their report, show clearly that claimant is the mother of Edgar A. Ward, of Company H, Twelfth Iowa Volunteers, who died from wounds received at battle of Shiloh. The soldier died in service at the age of twenty. Claimant is in destitute circumstances, with an aged husband, and no income or property.

This case comes entirely within the rules of the committee and of Congress, and they therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. H. WELSH.

Mr. MORRILL called up the bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. H. Welsh, late of Company F, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $18 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is hereby adopted and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 1318, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The claimant was a private in Company F, Thirty-first Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He was pensioned originally at $4 per month for "gunshot wound of left foot and left ankle." This has been increased to $6 per month, the amount he is now receiving. On November 28, 1887, he made application for increase of pension on the above disabilities and resulting sciatic rheumatism and neuralgia of hip and leg. This claim for increase was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions, February 8, 1888, on the ground that he was receiving the full amount of pension, $6 per month, to which he was entitled for the then existing degree of disability resulting from pensioned cause—gunshot wound of right foot and left ankle, as was shown by the result of the medical examination had under the claim for increase, January 4, 1888, by the board of examining surgeons at Fredonia, Kans.; sciatica or neuralgia of leg and hip was not accepted as a result of the pensioned cause, as alleged.

Since the rejection of the claim, February 8, 1888, the claimant has presented to the Pension Office considerable additional testimony, which would seem to be convincing that he was entitled to some additional increase at least.

Dr. Cyrus Z. Duvall swears that he has treated the claimant for neuralgia at two or three different times during the month of September, 1874, also in September, 1877, and in April, 1878; that he believes that said disease was caused in part or, to say the least, was aggravated from a wound on the ankle, received while in the Army; that he believes, from personal observation, that said disease has since developed into constitutional neuralgia.

Dr. David R. Campbell, a physician of twelve years' experience and practice, swears that he has been acquainted with claimant since March, 1885:

"The claimant has been suffering from neuralgia ever since, and has been getting worse from year to year, and during the last year has not been able to work, and has been confined to his house a good portion of the time. I visited him June 16 and December 11, 1885, and January 20, 1888. I have prescribed for him at various times for said neuralgia, but it has done no permanent good. The neuralgia is worse in left hip and leg, and in my judgment is caused by a gunshot wound in left ankle. He also had a gunshot wound of right foot. By reason of the above-mentioned wounds, and the neuralgia, which, in my opinion, is caused or aggravated by said wounds, the claimant is not able to perform any manual labor."

John H. Richey and C. M. Waggoner, neighbors, swear that "claimant is not able to perform any manual labor."

M. S. Robertson, clerk of the district court of Greenwood County, Kansas, swears to an acquaintance of fourteen years, and that the claimant has never been able to do a full man's work, and that a great part of the time wholly unable to do any work, his ailment being in the form of rheumatism or neuralgia, and at times he would be confined to his bed, and that he is not now able to perform any manual labor.

John W. Storke swears to an intimate acquaintance of fourteen years; that he has been suffering from neuralgia or something of that character, but he has been getting worse for the last few years, and for the last year or two he has not been able to perform manual labor of consequence. Has always understood that the neuralgia was caused by gunshot wounds received while in the Army. I get this understanding from statements made by the soldier and by physicians who have attended him.

The board of examiners at Fredonia, Kans., January 4, 1888, conclude their report by saying the wounds are comparatively insignificant. There is no atrophy of legs, and rate as follows: Injury to the right foot, one-eighteenth; injury to the left ankle, one-eighteenth; sciatica, four-eighteenths; equal to six-eighteenths.

If the sciatica is the result of the wounds received in battle, as alleged, and that he is now, as appears from the recently filed testimony—pretty conclusive—that the claimant is unable to perform manual labor, his present rating is too low. The physicians, who are of the opinion that such is the fact, are reputable gentlemen of good standing in their profession and as citizens. They have had personal observation of the case for years, and their opinion, in the judgment of the committee, is worth more than that of a board of examiners, who only see a man a few minutes, and equal, at least, to the medical reviewer, who renders an opinion from a paper report.

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAROLINE M. M'DOUGAL.

Mr. NEAL called up the bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline M. McDougal, widow of the late Admiral David P. McDougal, United States Navy, at the rate of $100 per month, on account of her total blindness and the necessity of constant personal attendance and assistance.

The report (by Mr. BUTLER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal, adopt the Senate report in this case and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 2211, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant is now in receipt of a pension of $50 a month by special act passed during the Forty-seventh Congress, and now asks that that pension be increased to $100.

A precedent for this increase exists in the case of the widow of General Gabriel R. Paul, whose pension was increased from $50 to $100 at the beginning of this session; and in the case of Mrs. McDougal there is the further consideration, not present in the case of Mrs. Paul, that she is now totally blind, and requires the personal aid and attendance of other persons, much of the time of two.

A copy of the report made in the Forty-seventh Congress is appended hereto, exhibiting the services performed by Admiral McDougal and the other considerations upon which this application is based.

Your committee, in view of all these facts, recommend the passage of the bill.

The following is taken from former reports when original pension was allowed:

Rear-Admiral McDougal entered the Navy in 1823, and passed successively through all the grades to that of commodore on the active-list, in which latter grade he was honorably retired on attaining the age of sixty-two. During his forty-three years of active service he filled with credit all the positions to which a naval officer is ever assigned in the grades through which he passed, and whether as a subordinate officer, as commander of a vessel, of a naval station, or of a squadron, left an unblemished record. In 1863, whilst in command of the Wyoming, on the Asiatic station, he was ordered to avenge an insult to our flag offered by the Prince of Negato, who had rebelled against the liberal policy of the Tycoon toward western nations, and had fired upon vessels bearing our flag. Commander McDougal's vessel, carrying but six guns, and with a crew of about one hundred and sixty men, had to encounter a hostile force, consisting of six shore batteries, masked on commanding heights, and mounting three guns each, a steamer of two, a bark of six, and a brig of eight guns, making in all thirty-four guns, mostly 32-pounders, and worked and supported by a force of eleven hundred men.

The battle had to be fought in a narrow strait, full of dangers from sunken rocks and rapid currents, which his enemy was perfectly familiar with, but of which Commander McDougal had no chart. Yet, notwithstanding the appalling dangers of the situation—a combined land and sea force aggregating seven times as many men and working nearly six times as many guns as he had, and with the certainty of torture and death if captured, he engaged and destroyed his enemy, achieving a victory which, if ever equaled in our country's history, has not been excelled. From 1869 to 1871, the day of his honorable retirement from active service, he commanded the South Pacific squadron. Of his forty-three years on the active-list, thirteen were spent on shore duty and twenty-four at sea; a greater proportion of arduous duty than has been performed by any officer senior to him in the service, with a single exception. During his life he never received any recognition for his services except a routine promotion on the retired-list, which carried with it none of the emoluments of the grade.

Mrs. McDougal is much in need. Congress has on many occasions made precedents. Not to go further back than 1876, the following instances are cited in which this has been done: In 1876, to the widow of Commodore Elliott; in 1877, to the widows of Admirals Bell and Winslow; in 1878, to the widow of Admiral Wilkes; in 1879, of Commodores Frailey, Gallagher, and McKeever, and of Admiral Stringham; in 1880, of Admiral Davis; in 1881, of Admiral Paulding, and Commodores McCauley and Guest; and finally, last winter and summer, to the widows of Admirals Goldsborough, Hoff, Reynolds, Lardner, Spotts, and Rodgers, Commodore Wood, and Rear-Admiral Beaumont.

David McDougal was appointed a midshipman in the Navy, July 1, 1828; August 20, 1828, ordered to the naval school at New York; May 16, 1829, detached and ordered to the New York station; April 21, 1830, detached and ordered to the Boston; December 15, 1832, warranted as a midshipman; October 4, 1833, permitted to attend the naval school at Brooklyn; May 14, 1834, ordered to examination preliminary to promotion; June 14, 1834, promoted to passed midshipman; March 11, 1836, ordered to the receiving-ship at New York; July 1, 1836, ordered to the sloop Natchez; February 16, 1839, detached and granted leave; March 16, 1839, ordered to the receiving-ship at New York; September 14, 1839, detached and granted leave of absence; December 14, 1839, ordered to the Consort; October 12, 1840, detached from the Consort and will remain on duty with Lieutenant Glynn, working on charts; February 19, 1841, detached from duty on charts; February 25, 1841, promoted to lieutenant; May 19, 1841, ordered to the Fulton; December 6, 1841, detached and ordered to the Falmouth; March 21, 1843, detached on account of ill-health; July 18, 1843, ordered to the Falmouth; January 27, 1844, detached and granted leave of absence; June 29, 1844, ordered to the Michigan; January 16, 1847, detached and ordered to the Mississippi; war with Mexico, at capture of Vera Cruz; June 11, 1847, detached from the home squadron and granted leave of absence; February 30, 1848, ordered to the St. Mary's; March 8, 1848, transferred to the Bainbridge; July 6, 1850, detached and granted leave of absence; June 18, 1851, ordered to the Michigan; March 2, 1854, detached and ordered to command the store-ship at San Francisco, Cal.; April 10, 1854, assumed command of the Warren; served on the John Hancock from February to August, 1856; January 24, 1857, promoted to commander; October 26, 1857, detached from the command of the Warren, and ordered to the navy-yard, Mare Island, California; May 11, 1861, detached and ordered to New York; May 27, 1861, ordered to command the Wyoming. While in command of this vessel engaged six batteries and three vessels of war at Simonosaki, Japan, on the 16th of July, 1863, sinking a brig and exploding the boilers of a steamer, with a loss of 11 killed and wounded aboard of the Wyoming; March 2, 1864, promoted to captain; July 20, 1864, detached from command of the Wyoming, and placed on waiting orders; October 17, 1864, took temporary command of the navy-yard, Mare Island, California; August 11, 1866, detached and placed on waiting orders; April 24, 1867, ordered to command the Pensacola; July 17, 1867, detached and placed on waiting orders; December 2, 1867, ordered to command the Powhatan; June 12, 1869, promoted to commodore; December 23, 1869, detached from command of the Powhatan and ordered to command the South Pacific squadron; September 27, 1871, placed on the retired-list; February 28, 1872, detached from command of the South Pacific squadron and placed on waiting orders; July 5, 1876, commissioned as rear-admiral on the retired-list from the 24th of August, 1873.

He died at San Francisco, Cal., on the 7th of August, 1882.

There has also been filed with this committee a certificate, under oath, of a medical inspector of the United States Navy to the following effect:

"I, the undersigned surgeon, United States Navy, hereby certify that I was the attending physician of the late David McDougal, rear-admiral, United States Navy, for many years prior to and at the time of his death, which occurred August 7, 1882, in this city. The said David McDougal died of Bright's chronic disease of the kidneys; and I further certify that said disease had been contracted by him while in the line of duty as an officer of the United States Navy.

"W. E. TAYLOR.

"Dated San Francisco, August 31, 1883."

Your committee recommend that the bill do pass.

Mr. KILGORE. I did not understand from the reading of the report exactly what this proposes. I believe it is proposed to increase from $50 to $100 per month.

Mr. NEAL. That is the provision of the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not understand the name of the claimant or the nature of the claim.

Mr. NEAL. McDougal. It is the widow of Rear-Admiral McDougal.

Mr. KILGORE. I do not think that I can agree to let that bill pass.

Mr. NEAL. I call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the fact that this widow is absolutely helpless, totally blind, and requires the attendance all the time of one person and frequently of two, as shown by the report in the case. Her husband served in the Navy for forty-two years. It is a most meritorious case.

Mr. KILGORE. If you will say $75, I will let it go through.

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, no!

Mr. NEAL. Let it go through at one hundred.

Mr. KILGORE. I think not; say $75.

Mr. NEAL. Imagine you can see this poor old woman, totally blind, helpless, and requiring the constant attention of two individuals, and I am sure you will not object.

Mr. KILGORE. But she can live on $75 a month.

Mr. NEAL. I do not know that she can. She has to provide for this attendance. I do not know anything except what is shown by the report. The report shows that she is in needy circumstances. She can not last but a year or two.

Mr. BUTLER. I hope the gentleman from Texas will let this pass. I know it is a very meritorious case.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, what does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] say?

Mr. NEAL. Never mind that; let the bill pass.

Mr. BUTLER. It is all right.

Mr. KILGORE. Very well.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PHILIP RAY.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I would like very much to call up the bill (S. 1614) granting a pension to Philip Ray. It passed both Houses at the last session of Congress, but, unfortunately, it did not pass this House in time for the President to act upon it. It went to the President but was one of the bills that was not acted upon. It got to the Executive Mansion about a day or two before we adjourned on the 20th of October. Now, I would like to call it up and pass it again.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will state only with a view of keeping ourselves in regular order that the bill is not before Congress, according to the gentleman's own statement.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I know it is not before Congress, but I have given a statement of the facts as to its situation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no disposition to do injustice to my friend from Philadelphia, but I feel that it is proper that we should at least keep within the forms of legal proceeding.

LEMUEL S. SKINNER.

Mr. PETERS. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lemuel S. Skinner, late of Company I, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. MORROW) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions in this case sets forth the facts fully, and is therefore adopted and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 1306, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Claimant enlisted in Company I, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteer Infantry, August 11, 1862, and was mustered out of the service June 26, 1865.

The records of the War Department show him treated while in the service for chronic diarrhea and intermittent fever.

The claim was rejected March 3, 1879, because claimant was unable to furnish evidence of origin or treatment in the service or at discharge.

* * * * * * *

In affidavit filed February 9, 1888, claimant states that when he became convalescent from chronic diarrhea he was placed in charge of the linen department of the laundry in the hospital at Jeffersonville, Ind.; that many thousand soldiers were sent to said hospital from the battle of Nashville, Tenn., which occurred on the 15th day of November, 1864, and while in the discharge of his duty, trying to supply the demand for clean linen, his strength was overtaxed, and from the strain occurring under the circumstances hernia was incurred.

In affidavit filed August 16, 1886, Catharine Skinner and Rhoda Wimer, of Washington County, New York, testify that claimant was a sound man at the date of his enlistment into the service.

In affidavit filed August 3, 1883, O. S. Wilson, acting assistant surgeon, United States Army, testifies that he was surgeon in the United States General Hospital, located at Jeffersonville, Ind., and that some time in May, 1864, one Lemuel S. Skinner came under his treatment for chronic diarrhea and inguinal hernia; that he at once ordered claimant to use a truss as the only cure for his hernia; that claimant had the appearance of having been a robust man prior to his enlistment into the service.

In affidavit filed August 16, 1886, J. D. Sherman, a comrade, testifies that claimant was a sound man at the time of his enlistment, and that he sustained a hernia of his right side while in the service and in the line of his military duty.

In affidavit filed October 16, 1886, W. G. Fisher, a comrade, testifies that claimant was treated for rupture while in the service.

In affidavit filed December 8, 1886, Albert Shiland, second lieutenant Company I, One hundred and twenty-third New York Volunteer Infantry, testifies that he was made aware, through information that he deemed reliable, that claimant sustained a rupture of his right side while in the service and in the line of duty, and that he had been compelled to wear a truss ever since.

In affidavit filed September 4, 1884, George S. Sherman, of Cambridge, N. Y., testifies that claimant was sound at the time of his enlistment into the service, but since his discharge from the Army to the year 1875 claimant has been in ill health and unable to perform manual labor.

In affidavit filed September 4, 1884, J. L. Kelley, of Burlington, Iowa, testifies that in the spring of 1887 claimant was in his employ, and had a severe attack of chronic diarrhea, disabling him to ride in the saddle, and consequently had to abandon his occupation.

In an examination made by the board of United States surgeons at Burlington, Iowa, May 14, 1884, claimant is rated one-half on account of hernia of right side and one-fourth on account of chronic diarrhea. In examination made February 24, 1886, claimant is given a total rating for hernia.

Claimant has a record of chronic diarrhea in the service, and the testimony of his second lieutenant and two comrades, showing the origin of hernia in the line of duty, and the testimony of the surgeon who treated him for the same while in the service. This, in the opinion of your committee, is conclusive proof that the applicant's disabilities are of Army origin, and that he is entitled to a pension on account of both disabilities alleged by him.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call up for consideration the bill (S. 3135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Eliza J. Alexander, widow of Francis Alexander, formerly lieutenant in United States Navy, from $25 to $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. CHEADLE. In order to save time, I give notice that I shall call a quorum on that bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the bill.

WINEMAH RIDDELL.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 2126) to pension Winemah Riddell. I could not find the bill when my name was called, and I would now like to call it up.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky to consider this bill at this time? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Winemah Riddell, and to pay her, from and after the passage of this act, during life, the sum of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. FINLEY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2804) to pension Winemah Riddell, having considered the same, report as follows:

The report of Hon. A. B. Meacham, chairman special commission to the Modocs, upon the late Modoc war, and contained in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for the year 1873, shows that the objects to be attained by the Modoc Peace Commission were—

"First, to ascertain the causes which have led to the difficulties and hostilities between the United States troops and the Modocs; and, secondly, to devise the most effective and judicious measures for preventing the continuance of these hostilities and for the restoration of peace.

"Messengers were employed to visit the Modocs and arrange for a meeting: First, Bob Whittle and wife, Matilda (an Indian woman), were sent February 19 with instructions to announce to them the presence of and desire of the commission to arrange for a council meeting with the view of adjusting the difficulties that existed and to prevent a reopening of hostilities; also to ascertain with whom the Modocs would prefer to arrange the contemplated council.

"Whittle and wife returned on the 20th, and reported the Modocs willing and anxious to 'meet Riddell and Fairchilds to conclude details' for the proposed meeting. Fairchilds was intrusted with the message, and accompanied by Riddell and Artina (a Modoc woman), visited the Modoc camp, a distance of 20 miles from headquarters, with a 'message to Modocs,' as follows: 'Fairchilds will talk for the commission; what he agrees to we will stand by. He can not tell you any terms, but will fix a time and place for a council talk, and that no act of war will be allowed while peace talks are being had; no movements of the troops will be made. We come in good faith to make peace. Our hearts are all for peace.' This message was signed by Meacham, Applegate, and Case, with the approval of General Canby.

"Fairchilds and party returned on the 23d, and reported the Modocs as willing and anxious for peace, but had not arranged for a meeting, because they were 'unwilling to come out of the lava-beds.'

"This proposition was not agreed to, but a request for Judge Steele, of Yreka, to visit them was made, and in compliance he was sent for, with the hope on our part that, from his intimate acquaintance with these people, he might secure the meeting. Judge Steele arrived at headquarters of commission on the 4th of March, and the board of commissioners were called together, now consisting of Applegate, Case, Meacham, and Judge Roseborough, who had been added at the request of General Canby. Steele, being present, accepted the mission as messenger to arrange for the meeting of commission and the Modocs, but unwisely was authorized to offer terms of peace, which was 'a general amnesty to all Modocs on condition of their full and complete surrender, and consent to remove to a distant reservation within the limits of Oregon or California.'

"He was further instructed to say to them that 'General Canby would make peace and conclude terms.'

"On the 5th of March, in company with Riddell and Toby Fairchilds, and R. H. Atwell as reporter, Judge Steele visited the Modoc camp.

"Failing to secure a meeting of the commission and Modocs, made then, under instruction, the proposition above referred to, also stating that General Canby was authorized to conclude the arrangement for the surrender and removal. The propositions were not well understood and created some discussion among the Modocs.

"Captain Jack, speaking for the people, accepted the terms offered, though protests and evidences of dissatisfaction were evidently made. Steele had not, however, seemed to have been aware of this fact, for on his return to headquarters he reported that 'peace was made; they accept.' A general feeling of relief followed, couriers were summoned to bear dispatches, when Fairchilds, who had been with Steele, declared that 'there was some mistake; the Modocs have not agreed to surrender and removal.' The Modoc messengers who had accompanied Steele and party to headquarters were questioned, when it was discovered that some misunderstanding existed. Steele, however, confident that he was correct, proposed to return to the Modoc camp and settle the matter beyond question. On Steele's second visit Fairchilds declined going, fearing, as he said, 'that the Modocs would feel outraged by Steele's report.'

"Atwell again accompanied Steele, who, on arrival, or soon thereafter, discovered that a great mistake had been made in reporting the first visit. The demonstrations were almost of hostile character. He was accused of reporting them falsely and working against their interests. His long acquaintance with Captain Jack and Scar-faced Charley, and consequent friendship, saved him and party from assassination, these two men and one or two others standing guard over him throughout the night. The following morning he averted the peril by proposing to return and bring the commission with him, and on this promise he was allowed to depart. On his return to headquarters he made a full report of the visit, stating the facts above referred to, and warning the commission of the danger of meeting the Modocs except on equal terms and on neutral ground, and expressing the opinion 'that no meeting could be had, no peace could be made.'

"The substance of these reports and conclusions was forwarded to the honorable Secretary of the Interior, who replied as follows:

"'WASHINGTON, D. C., March 5, 1873.

"'I do not believe the Modocs mean treachery. The mission should not be a failure. I think I understand their unwillingness to confide in you. Continue negotiations. Will consult the President, and have the War Department confer with General Canby to-morrow.

"'C. DELANO.

"'To A. B. MEACHAM,
"'Fairfields Ranch, via Yreka, Cal.'

"On the day following Steele's return from the second visit a delegation of Indians from the Modoc camp arrived. Mary (sister of Captain Jack), acting as messenger, proposed that if General Canby would send wagons to meet them, the Modocs would all come out and surrender on the terms proposed by Steele on the first visit. General Canby, then acting under the authority of the vote of the commissioners transferring the whole matter to his care, accepted the proposition and named a day on which the final surrender should be consummated. However, before the time appointed messengers arrived from the lava-beds, asking for further time, to arrange for leaving camp, alleging that they were then burying their dead and could not come at the time appointed, but would comply at a subsequent period.

"General Canby appointed another day, and assured the messengers that unless they were faithful to the compact he would take steps to compel compliance.

"The day before the appointed time Toby Riddell informed General Canby of intended treachery on the part of the Modocs, saying 'no Modocs come; may be come to steal teams; they no give up.' Her warning was not accredited.

"The wagons were sent. Applegate, sanguine of the surrender, resigned and returned to his home, believing that 'peace was made.' Mr. Case, who had been relieved at his own request, had also left headquarters. Messengers had been sent to the Department at Washington announcing the anticipated result, and the whole country was rejoicing, when, late on the evening of the appointed day, the wagons sent out by General Canby returned without the Indians. All of which was made known to the Department. Further negotiations seemed to be hopeless; nevertheless, knowing the anxiety for a peaceable solution of the troubles, we continued to seek a meeting. Instructions were received from headquarters from the honorable Secretary of the Interior, 'to continue negotiations,' and further continuing the commission, General Canby moved headquarters to 'Van Bremens,' and with him the commission moved.

"Soon after, Dr. Thomas was added to the commission, also L. S. Dyar, United States Indian agent, of Klamath. Meanwhile a herd of Indian horses had been captured by Major Biddle, notwithstanding the commission had informed the Modocs, through messengers, that no act of war would be permitted. Failing to arrange on satisfactory terms for a council meeting, the commission was notified by General Canby of the intended movement of troops nearer the Modoc camp. The movement was made and headquarters again changed, this time to the foot of the bluff, and within 2 miles of the Modoc stronghold. On the 2d of April the commission, including General Canby, met the Modocs for the first time, about midway between the Modoc camp and headquarters. No conclusions were arrived at, a severe storm coming up compelling adjournment, not, however, until an agreement had been made for the erection of a council-tent.

"Riddell and his wife, Toby, expressed the opinion, on our return to camp, that treachery was intended; but the warning was not respected. On the 4th of April a request was made by Captain Jack for me to meet him and a few men at the council-tent. After a consultation with the board I went, accompanied by Judge Roseborough and J. A. Fairchilds, Riddell and his wife Toby, as interpreters.

"The Modoc chief was accompanied by six warriors and the women of his own family. He (Jack) remarked that he felt afraid in presence of General Canby and Dr. Thomas, saying, 'But now I can talk.' He reviewed the whole question from the beginning, mentioning the Ben Wright treachery, the insults of the Klamath Indians while his people were on the reservation, the failure of Captain Knapp, the acting agent of Klamath, to protect him, and his several removals while there, but made no complaint of want of subsistence, denied ever killing horses for food, but insisting that Agent Knapp 'had no heart for him;' complained that Superintendent Odeneal had not visited him, and that Odeneal's messengers had promised to come again before bringing soldiers; that Major Jackson had attacked him before he was up in the morning of November 29, 1872; complained also of the citizens taking part in the battle at that time, declaring that had 'no citizens been in the fight, no Indian women and children would have been killed, no citizens would have been murdered,' saying his young men had done a great wrong while in hot blood, but that he could not control them any more than bad white men were controlled by American law; and feeling that he could never live in peace with the Klamaths, but wanted a home 'just the same as a white man on Lost River, the soldiers taken away and the war would stop.'

"On being assured that, since blood had been spilled on Lost River, he could never have it in peace, unless the Lost River murderers were given up for trial, he abandoned the request so far as his old home was concerned, saying, 'I give up home; give me this lava-bed; no white man will ever want it.' Again assured that no peace could be made or soldiers removed while his people remained in the lava-bed, but was informed that a new home would be given him, and provision made for clothing and subsistence. He was unwilling to surrender his men who killed the citizens, saying that the 'governor of Oregon had demanded their blood, and that the law of Jackson County would kill them;' remarking that the 'law was all on one side, was made by the white man, for white men, leaving the Indian all out,' finally declaring that he could not control his people, and that he would die with them if no peace was made.

"No terms were agreed to or further meetings arranged for at that time.

"On the day following Toby Riddell was sent with a proposition to Captain Jack to surrender with such others as might elect to do so. He declined the terms. On her return the messenger was warned of the intended treachery, which she reported to the commissioners and General Canby. This warning was not treated with the respect due the informer. Dr. Thomas questioned a Modoc afterward as to the truth of the report, which being denied, and the name of the author demanded, he replied, 'Toby Riddell.' The same party, of whom Dr. Thomas had made inquiry, was informed by General Gillem 'that unless peace was made very soon the troops would be moved up nearer the Modoc stronghold, and that one hundred Warm Spring Indians would be added to the army within a few days.' All of which was reported in the Modoc camp.

"On the 8th of April a messenger visited the commission, asking for a 'peace talk,' saying that six unarmed Modocs were at the council tent in the lava-bed, anxious to make peace, and asking the commission to meet them.

"The signal officer at the station overlooking the lava-beds reported the 'six Indians, and also in the rocks behind them twenty other Indians, all armed.' Treachery was evident, and no meeting was had; further negotiations appeared useless and unsafe.

"On the morning of the 10th of April a delegation from the Modoc camp arrived with renewed propositions for a meeting. The terms proposed were, that if the commission, including General Canby and General Gillem, would come next day to the council-tent, unarmed, to meet a like number of unarmed Modocs, thus proving the confidence of the commission in the Modocs, 'that they (the Modocs) would all come to headquarters and surrender on the day following.' Dr. Thomas, who was then acting as (temporary) chairman, submitted the propositions to General Canby. After consultation, they decided to accept.

"On the fatal morning of Friday, April 11, the commission held a meeting, and the propriety of keeping the appointment was discussed; Dr. Thomas insisting that it was a duty that must be performed; General Canby saying 'that the importance of the object in view justified taking some risk;' Commissioners Dyar and Meacham recounting the evidences of premeditated treachery, and giving opinions adverse to the meeting. The interpreter, Frank Riddell, appeared before the board, and repeated the warning given by Toby, his wife, and saying further, 'that if the meeting must be had, he wanted to be free from responsibility; that he had lived with Toby for twelve years, and she had never deceived him; that if the commission went, it should be armed.' However, General Canby and Dr. Thomas insisted that the compact should be kept, the general remarking that from the signal-station a strict watch had been kept, and 'only five Indians, unarmed, were at the council-tent;' and further, that a 'watch would be kept on the council-tent, and in the event of an attack the army would come to the rescue.'"

Without following further the report, the result of the appointment above referred to is more comprehensively stated in a lecture prepared by Colonel Meacham, and which he delivered in Park Street Church, Boston, Mass., on the 24th of May, 1874, the substance of which is as follows:

"The preparations for keeping the appointment were being made when Winemah Riddell and her husband made a last protest against the fulfillment of the unwise compact. Dr. Thomas was unwilling to abandon the effort. Commissioner Dyar agreed with me (Colonel Meacham) that the meeting should not take place. General Canby maintained his views, and gave orders for a watch to be kept at the signal station; then, giving some private instructions to his secretary, he dressed in full uniform, without arms, and called for Dr. Thomas. Together they walked off, side by side, towards the peace-tent, 1 mile away. Having failed to dissuade them from going, I had no honorable alternative but to follow. * * *

"I prepared to go, and caught the halter of my horse, intending to mount, when Winemah, unable to suppress her fears, snatched the halter, and winding it around her waist, threw herself upon the ground and cried most earnestly, 'Do not go; you will be kill. The Modocs mad now. Meacham, you no go.' Her entreaty moved me, and I relaxed my grasp of the halter, and calling to General Canby and Dr. Thomas, went to them and renewed my protest against going unarmed.

"They were immovable. I then, for the first and only time in my life, made use of my fraternal relations to induce them to assent to a promise on my part, as chairman of the commission, to withdraw the army if we found satisfactory evidences of premeditated treachery. This proposition was emphatically rejected also.

"Seeing no alternative, I returned to the commissioners' tent, handed my valuables to Mr. Fairchilds, and securing a promise from him that if my body should be badly mutilated it should be buried in the rocks of the lava-beds and not sent to my family, I sought again to mount my horse, when Winemah caught me by the coat and endeavored to detain me.

"Firmly refusing to remain in camp, I bade Winemah and her husband follow, and rode off to the council tent in the lava-beds, accompanied by Commissioner Dyar. Winemah parted with her boy, and with steady nerve mounted her horse and joined Mr. Dyar and myself. Mr. Riddell hastily arranged his business affairs, and also joined us on his danger-fraught ride.

"General Canby and Dr. Thomas were the first of our party to arrive. They were greeted by the Indians with extreme cordiality, General Canby giving to each a cigar. Instead of five unarmed men, including Scar-faced Charley, as promised by Boston Charley in negotiating for the council, we found eight well-armed desperadoes, including the notorious cut-throats Hooker Jim and Black Jim. Captain Jack seemed anxious and ill at ease, and did not exhibit the friendship the others of his party pretended.

"General Canby was calm and thoroughly self-possessed. Dr. Thomas did not appear to note any suspicious circumstances, but was endeavoring to impress the Indians with his good intentions. I made my election to abide by the consequences. I knew that the horse beneath me was one of the fleetest in the Modoc country, and notwithstanding the rocky trail could carry me out of danger with a few bounds, which he seemed more than willing to make at the slightest invitation. I made up my mind that Canby and Thomas should not be endangered by cowardly flight on my part.

"Withdrawing my overcoat and hanging it upon the horn of the saddle I dismounted, dropping the rope-halter to the ground, leaving his horse free. Mr. Riddle secured Winemah's horse, and we all gathered round the council-fire.

"Before the talk began I sat down facing the chief and opened the council by referring to the proposition made the day before by Boston Charley, and continued by saying that we were ready to complete the arrangement for peace. Captain Jack asked if we were willing to remove the soldiers from the lava-beds and give his people a home in the country. I felt that if his demand was met we could escape, and although General Canby had refused to allow me to make this promise, I thought that, convinced as he must be of intended treachery, he would feel justified in assenting to the request. Cautiously turning to him I asked him to talk. After a moment's waiting he rose and stood erect. Every eye was upon him. All seemed to feel that if he assented to the withdrawal of the army the trouble would be passed over.

"Whether General Canby realized the situation with all its fearful possibilities and would not swerve even then from his purpose, or if he still thought the Modocs had not the desperate courage to execute this plan, can never be known. If he said the soldiers can be removed, the phantom would pass as a dream. If he said they should not be withdrawn, the phantom must soon become a terrible reality. With dignity that was peculiar to that brave soldier, he firmly pronounced his own death-sentence as well as that of Dr. Thomas, by saying that the 'soldiers could not be withdrawn.'

"Again and again the Modoc chief repeated the demand for the removal of the soldiers. General Canby, having once refused, was mute. Turning to Dr. Thomas, who was sitting at my left, I asked him if he wished to talk. The doctor dropped forward on his knees, and made the last proclamation of peace. He assured the Modocs that he was a friend to them; that God had sent us to them as messengers of peace.

"The Modoc chief leaned forward and touched me on the arm. He once more declared that no peace could be made until the soldiers were taken away, as he rose and turned his back to General Canby. I believe that to this time Captain Jack had hoped it would be granted, and thereby bloodshed avoided. Schonchin sprang to the seat vacated by Captain Jack, and in loud, angry tones repeated the ultimatum. Winemah had thrown herself on the ground in front of Dr. Thomas and was interpreting Schonchin's speech at the moment when Captain Jack gave the signal, 'Kau-tux' (All ready). Almost at the same instant the Modoc yell broke from the rocks and two braves sprang forward, bearing rifles.

"Captain Jack drew a pistol and shot General Canby, the ball striking him in the face. 'Ellen's man' joined him in the attack. General Canby did not fall until he had run 40 or 50 yards, when a shot struck him in the back of the head. His assailants came upon him, and, shooting him again, stripped him of his clothing, turned his face downward, and then left him.

"Dr. Thomas received a shot from the hand of Boston Charley. He sank slowly, catching by his right hand. He was permitted to get upon his feet and stagger away a few rods, his murderers taunting him with not believing Winemah, jeering him, and ridiculing his religion and the failure of his prayers. Finally, pushing him down, they shot him through the head, stripped him, and turning him also upon his face, gathered up the dripping garments, and joined the other murderers at the council fire.

"Dr. Dyar, having his horse for a cover when the attack was begun, made good his escape, although pursued by Hooker Jim. Mr. Riddell escaped by running, covered by Scar-faced Charley's rifle, who declared that it 'was unworthy of a Modoc to kill unarmed men.' Simultaneously with the attack on General Canby and Dr. Thomas, Shonchin sprang to his feet, and, drawing both a knife and a pistol, shouted 'Chock-e-la' (Blood), pointed at my head and discharged the pistol, the bullet tearing through the collar of my coat and vest. Before the next shot Winemah was between him and his victim, grasping his arms and pleading for my life. I walked backwards 40 yards while my heroic defender struggled to save me. Shacknasty Jim joined Schonchin in the attack, while Winemah, running from one to the other, continued to turn aside the pistols aimed at me until I went down.

"After I fell I raised my head above the rock over which I had fallen, and at the instant Schonchin aimed at me so correctly that this shot struck me between the eyes and glanced out over the left eye, which was blinded. A shot from Shacknasty Jim struck me on the right side of the head over the ear, which stunned me and I became unconscious. From Winemah and Scar-faced Charley I learned that Shacknasty Jim robbed me of my clothing in part, notwithstanding Winemah's expostulations; that while Jim was unbuttoning my shirt collar one of the other murderers came up with a gun and pointing at my head was just in the act of touching the trigger when Jim pushed the gun up and said, 'Don't shoot any more. Him dead; he not get up; I him hit high up; save the powder.' Having taken my coat, pants, and vest, they left me, saying to Winemah, 'Take care of your white brother.' Winemah wiped the blood from my face and straightened my limbs, believing me dead.

"Boston Charley drew a knife, which, however, was a dull one, and began the difficult task of scalping a bald-headed man, and what added to the difficulty was the strong arms of Winemah, grasping him and hurling him, as though he was but a boy, to the rocks beside me. But Boston had Modoc persistency, and springing to his feet, with his pistol he struck her a blow upon the head, at the same time threatening to shoot her should she again interfere, and resumed the delicate task. Winemah, dazed by the blow for a moment, in half bewilderment saw the dull blade cutting down to the bone, while Boston, enraged and impatient, set one foot upon the back of my neck, and muttering curses in broken English, succeeded in cutting a circle almost around the upper part of my head, and had already so far lifted the scalp that he had inserted the fingers of his left hand beneath it, preparatory to tearing it off, when Winemah, recovering her presence of mind, resorted to strategy, shouting exultingly, 'Kap-ko Bostee-na-soldier' (Soldiers coming), and Boston left his work unfinished."

From the foregoing statement of facts, it is evident that had the Modoc peace commissioners listened to the persistent persuasions of Winemah Riddle, reiterated by her over and over again, the families and friends of the lamented Dr. Thomas and General Canby would not have been called upon to mourn their atrocious death; and in view of the fact that Winemah Riddle saved the life of such a useful and noble man as Col. A. B. Meacham, and proved herself to be the friend of the white man at the risk of her own life, your committee feel constrained to report these facts for the consideration of the House, with the following amendment: In line 7 strike out the words "twenty-five dollars" and insert in lieu thereof "twelve dollars;" and, with the bill so amended, beg leave to submit the facts, with the bill, for action of the House. The committee being equally divided, their report is adverse to the passage of the bill, but recommend the same be placed on the Calendar and printed.

During the reading of the report

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio, said: I move that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. KILGORE. Oh, no. Let it go on.

The reading of the report was concluded.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Chairman, there is an adverse report in that case, as I understand. I do not believe in going back on a committee in an important matter like this; and besides that, there are thousands of cases on the frontier of Texas which are just as meritorious as this. If it was for a general law, permitting these people to go before a proper court or officer and prove up their cases so as to give them a reasonable pension, I do not know that I would make objection. But such claims are generally managed by unscrupulous men who take charge of these claims, and not only manipulate them through, but collect the money. That is my experience so far as claims for the relief of Indians on the frontier are concerned. I have lived many years on the frontiers of Texas, and I know of numbers of cases where Indians have espoused the cause of the white man, and know there are thousands of cases on the frontier as meritorious as this; so that I can not see any cause for singling out one such case. And then, again, we have also an adverse report on this case; and I would feel compelled to obstruct the passage of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. If the gentleman will allow me to explain the case I will get him out of his error. There was an adverse report as read, the House committee being divided 4 and 4. It was not a full committee, and the chairman of the committee voted for the bill. The same bill has passed the Senate and has gone before the committee of this House, and the report is there again adopted. The Senate bill has been before the committee, and they indorsed the action of the Senate. Now, it can not be considered, as I think, an adverse report in the case. I trust my friend from Texas will not interpose an objection. I want to appeal to him in a few words. There is not only a precedent cited there, as far back as 1834, cases of the Cherokee Indians and the Creek Indians, parallel with this, or substantially so. I would also call his attention to the case of Pocahontas, where she made a rescue, having appealed only to her father, and he, the chief, risking nothing at all. Her friendship for the white man has been everywhere read of and lauded by this entire nation of people.

Here is an Indian woman who risked her life against her own friends and her own tribe and tried to save the lives of good and grand men, and would have saved the men who perished there, and also the lives of upwards of thirty others who were killed in consequence of that transaction, and the lives of a hundred gallant soldiers. I trust that in such a case the gentleman will not interpose an objection. I know he is a good man; he has a kind heart and means to do what is right, and I trust that he will withdraw his objection and let this bill follow the usual course.

Mr. KILGORE. I appreciate the fact of this woman's fidelity to the white people on that occasion, and as much as any man living I deplore the massacre of the distinguished soldier who was slain there, and the sufferings that were consequent upon the transaction. But that is not the question here. The question is, ought Congress to single out one of perhaps ten thousand meritorious cases and grant a pension in that instance, leaving the balance unprovided for? I think not. Besides, this woman is a married woman now. She has a husband living—a white man. So she has derived that much benefit from the affair, if he is the right sort of a white man.

Mr. FINLEY. I will say to the gentleman that the report discloses the fact that they were married at the time this tragedy occurred.

Mr. KILGORE. Married at the time? Well, that fact breaks somewhat the force of the case made for the heroic nature of the deed. [Laughter.]

As for the gentleman's reference to Pocahontas, she married a white man, and has become the ancestress of probably a greater number of distinguished persons than any other woman that ever lived in this country; so she has been amply rewarded for all that she ever did for Capt. John Smith, if that transaction ever took place, for they tell us now it is all a fiction. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I can not agree to the passage of this bill. I do not think it is just to thousands of others who might present equally meritorious cases. If Congress would pass a general law reaching all cases of this kind, I do not believe I should object to it, but I can not let this bill pass.

Mr. MANSUR. Will the gentleman from Texas instance one other case as meritorious as this—just one?

Mr. KILGORE. I could instance a hundred, if I had time to think them up, cases that have occurred on the Texas frontier. Besides, this is going outside of the regular rule for granting pensions. The rule is to grant pensions to people who served in the Army and who were injured there, and who are needy, but if we are to go outside of the rule and grant pensions to everybody who has on any occasion seen proper to favor or to undertake to protect our soldiers, I can not agree to it.

Mr. FINLEY. Then I ask unanimous consent that the bill be ordered to a third reading, and that it go over to be voted upon in a full House.

Mr. KILGORE. I can not agree to that.

Mr. FINLEY. What will you agree to, then?

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I will agree to let you withdraw the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. Is that all?

Mr. KILGORE. That is all I can agree to to-night.

Mr. FINLEY. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that as the gentleman from Texas controls this body, we shall have to submit. I withdraw the bill.

ELIZA J. ALEXANDER.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I again call up the bill which I withdrew awhile ago (S. 135) granting an increase of pension to Eliza J. Alexander. I propose to offer an amendment which will obviate the objection to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill has been read. The Clerk will now read the report.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions was read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to amend the bill by striking out in line 6 the word "fifty" and inserting "thirty."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I would ask the gentleman who calls up this bill to state the ground upon which an increase of pension is sought. I think there is nothing in the report to justify it. I may have overlooked it, but I tried to give close attention to the report and I failed to hear anything which removes the case from the general category of other cases on the pension-roll.

Mr. SHERMAN. Inasmuch as the Clerk made a mistake and read the wrong report, I will ask that he now read the House report. It is fuller, and sets out the facts more clearly than the one which was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the committee reported an amendment striking out "$50" and inserting "$40." The gentleman from New York now moves to amend by striking out "$50" and inserting "$30."

Mr. MCMILLIN. I have no objection to that amendment; if the bill is to pass I think it very important the amendment should be adopted. But I was seeking to get at the foundation of this claim. As I have said, I see nothing to place it in a different category from very many other cases; and there does not seem to be presented any reason which ought to be sufficient to induce Congress to make a distinction in favor of this claimant. The relations of the applicant are mentioned in the report, and mentioned in a very honorable way; but a similar case might be presented in behalf of many other pensioners.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is an old lady without a male relative in the world. Her husband served in the Navy with unusual distinction for a quarter of a century. Besides, her father and her brother, after very honorable careers, died in the naval service. The lady is to-day without a child or any male relative on whom to depend. She is seventy years of age. I think these circumstances present a sufficient reason in favor of the claim.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the gentleman will not insist that this is a more meritorious case than one where the husband was killed in battle.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, I do. This is a case where there are three relatives who have died in the service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I supposed that the strongest claim which any woman could present in favor of a pension would be that her husband had been killed in the service of the country.

Mr. SHERMAN. But where a father and a brother have also given their lives for their country, it adds to the claim.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] to strike out "$50" and insert "$30."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York states that the House report is more explicit than the one which was read, I hope we shall hear that report. I would be glad to obtain more explicit information as to the merits of this case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the House report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, which is as follows:

The claimant, Mrs. Alexander, is in receipt of a pension at the rate of $25 per month as the widow of Francis Alexander, formerly a lieutenant in the United States Navy. She applies to Congress for relief by granting her an increase of pension to $50 per month, upon the ground of the services of her husband, of her brother, and of her father, all of whom were eminent officers in the United States Navy.

The services of these officers are shown by the following statements furnished by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, namely:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, June 12, 1888.

"Francis Alexander was appointed midshipman May 27, 1835; August 15, 1835, ordered to the West India squadron; July 6, 1838, granted three months' leave; September 13, 1838, ordered to the Ohio; December 3, 1838, detached and placed on waiting orders.

"December 18, 1838, ordered to the navy-yard, New York; May 25, 1839, ordered to the Brandywine; August 19, 1841, detached from the Grampus and granted leave; October 13, 1841, admitted to the Naval School, Philadelphia; June 9, 1842, ordered to the steamer Missouri; July 14, 1842, warranted as passed midshipman, from June 22, 1841. October 19, 1843, detached and ordered to the rendezvous, Norfolk; July 23, 1844, detached and granted leave.

"September 2, 1844, ordered as naval storekeeper at Porto Praya; July 10, 1846, detached from duty as naval storekeeper at Porto Praya; June 28, 1847, ordered to the receiving-ship, Boston; May 22, 1848, detached and placed on waiting orders.

"May 24, 1848, warranted as master, from 29th April, 1848. October 28, 1848, ordered to the Raritan, 10th November; March 7, 1849, promoted to lieutenant from date.

"He died on board the Raritan, at sea, May 11, 1849.

"George W. Young was appointed a midshipman in the Navy on the 19th of October, 1841; November 26, 1841, ordered to the receiving-ship at Norfolk; January 5, 1842, detached and ordered to the Levant; June 18, 1842, detached and leave; June 28, 1842, ordered to the Constitution; March 14, 1843, detached from the Brandywine and to the Levant; April 29, 1847, detached and leave; June 2, 1847, to the Naval Academy; July 24, 1848, detached and to the Portsmouth; September 29, 1848, warranted a passed midshipman from the 10th of August, 1847; June 28, 1851, detached from the Portsmouth and leave; September 30, 1851, to the receiving-ship at Norfolk; October 15, 1851, detached and ordered to the St. Lawrence; April 21, 1855, detached and leave; July 27, 1855, to duty on the Coast Survey; September 14, 1855, promoted to master; September 15, 1855, promoted to lieutenant; November 14, 1855, detached from Coast Survey schooner Gallatin and to receiving-ship at Baltimore; December 21, 1855, detached and ordered to the Despatch; July 1, 1856, detached and placed on waiting orders; July 11, 1856, detached and ordered to the release; October 2, 1856, detached and wait orders; October 21, 1856, ordered to the receiving-ship at Norfolk; January 9, 1857, ordered to the East India squadron; May 31, 1859, detached from the Minnesota and leave; August 19, 1859, to the receiving-ship at New York; November 23, 1859, detached and ordered to the Portsmouth; August 2, 1861, detached from the prize brig Falmouth and wait orders; September 16, 1861, ordered to the Lancaster; July 16, 1862, promoted to lieutenant-commander; July 20, 1864, detached from the Wyoming; September 12, 1864, to navy-yard, Philadelphia; October 4, 1864, detached and to command the Maratanza, North Atlantic blockading squadron; June 17, 1865, detached and wait orders; August 11, 1865, to the navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal.; June 2, 1866, detached and ordered as general inspector of supplies at navy-yard, Mare Island; July 25, 1866, promoted to commander, to rank from date; [under the act of July 25, 1866, made by selection from the grade who have rendered the most efficient and faithful service during the war of the rebellion and who possess the highest professional qualifications and attainments;] March 8, 1867, detached and to command the Suwannee.

"Had performed twenty years and four months' sea service.

"Died on board the Suwannee at sea, August 30, 1867.

"John Jay Young was appointed a midshipman in the Navy on the 1st of January, 1812; June 23, 1812, ordered to the Congress; May 25, 1814, resigned; June 17, 1814, reinstated; December 21, 1814, granted furlough; April 1, 1815, ordered to the frigate Java; September 19, 1816, to the schooner Noumeh; February 26, 1817, ordered to the Hornet; September 17, 1817, ordered to schooner Asp; December 15, 1817, ordered to the Hornet; February 17, 1818, ordered to the Cyane; September 27, 1819, to the naval rendezvous, Baltimore; March 28, 1820, promoted to lieutenant; May 23, 1821, ordered to the schooner Shark; December 30, 1822, ordered to report at New York; November 11, 1824, granted three months' leave; August 10, 1825, ordered to the Hornet; November 1, 1826, detached from Hornet and granted leave; December 3, 1828, ordered to the Hornet; August 11, 1829, granted sick leave.

"While discharging his duties on board the sloop-of-war Hornet, he met with an accident which resulted in the loss of both of his legs, as is shown by the following extract from a letter from Commodore Charles G. Ridgely, commanding the West India squadron, dated July 10, 1829, at Pensacola, Fla.:

"'I have the honor to report the arrival of the Hornet, Captain Norris, yesterday, the 9th instant, after a laborious cruise of fifteen weeks off the north side of Cuba, during the whole of which time she has been actually engaged in giving convoy from Havana and Matanzas, and occasionally searching the keys with her boats. Captain Norris reports that in firing to bring to a suspicious vessel, which proved to be a vessel from Havana to Matanzas with slaves on board, the gun recoiled with such violence that Lieutenant Young had both his legs so dreadfully shattered as to require amputation just below the knee. It therefore became necessary, to preserve the life of so deserving an officer, to put into Havana and land him, and procure for him suitable accommodations and surgical attendance.'

"February 1, 1832, ordered to duty at Norfolk, Va., as superintendent of the Naval Hospital, and continued in charge until July 21, 1840; promoted to commander, to rank from April 15, 1840; October 22, 1840, ordered to rendezvous at Norfolk; November 1, 1843, detached and wait orders; May 2, 1844, ordered to command rendezvous at Baltimore; September 13, 1855, placed on the reserved-list; December 3, 1864, ordered to command naval rendezvous, Brooklyn, N. Y.; February 21, 1865, detached and wait orders; March 2, 1867, promoted to commodore on retired-list.

"Died at Brooklyn, N. Y., November 4, 1875."

It will be observed that the husband of the applicant died nearly forty years ago. By his death Mrs. Alexander became dependent upon her brother and father. The brother remained unmarried and died in March, 1867, holding the rank of commander at the date of his death.

For many years prior to the death of the claimant's father, Commodore John Jay Young, he was in very feeble physical condition from the effects of the wounds and loss of his legs. His daughter was his constant attendant and companion.

The deaths of these three officers left Mrs. Alexander without the protection of any male relative. They had all rendered their lives to the service of their country.

Your committee are of the opinion that the country should afford a competent pension to Mrs. Alexander while she may live, and therefore report back the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out the word "fifty," in line 6, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "forty."

Before the reading of the report was concluded,

Mr. MATSON said: I rise to a privileged motion. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report various Senate bills with sundry recommendations.

SENATE BILLS PASSED.

Bills of the following titles, reported without amendment from the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, were severally taken up, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes;

A bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing;

A bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate;

A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;

A bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh;

A bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal; and

A bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner.

The bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grover (having been reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendment) was taken up, the amendment agreed to, the bill as amended ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the several votes by which bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 4, noes 5.

Mr. MATSON. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

GENERAL S. W. PRICE.

Mr. CARUTH. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 433) granting an increase of pension to General S. W. Price.

Mr. MATSON. That is too important a bill to be passed in this way. I shall object to its consideration now.

Mr. CARUTH. Then I withdraw the bill.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House, in pursuance of its previous order, adjourned till Monday next.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. G. A. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 11659) granting a pension to Anna Kuffer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JEHU BAKER: A bill (H. R. 11660) for the relief of Martha E. Flesschert—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 11661) for the relief of William Jackson, Amanda Querry, and Wilkins Querry, heirs of Gibson Jackson, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11662) for the relief of Henry Hake—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 11663) granting a pension to Mrs. M. Josie McClain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BOUND: A bill (H. R. 11664) granting a pension to M. M. Muckler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 11665) granting a pension to Charles H. Morse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: A bill (H. R. 11666) for the relief of William T. Moore—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DUNHAM: A bill (H. R. 11667) for the relief of John Boyle—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11668) for the relief of Mrs. Maria McMurdic—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GIFFORD: A bill (H. R. 11669) for the relief of Harriet Young—to the Committee the on Public Lands.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11670) granting a pension to Alexander Bushnell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: A bill (H. R. 11671) for the relief of A. B. Hunton—to the Committee on War Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. ARNOLD (by request): Petition of H. N. Phillips, of Hope Valley, R. I., against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of William Jackson and others, heirs of Gilson Jackson and Lavisa Jackson, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BOUND: Remonstrance of C. M. Bowman and others, of Lebanon, Pa., against the passage of an international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BUNNELL: Petition of druggists of Honesdale, Pa., for repeal of the internal-revenue law classing druggists as liquor dealers—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DAVENPORT: Petition of S. H. Parker, of Geneva, N. Y., against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Petition of N. C. Nash, of Canton, and of B. M. Price, of Iroquois, Dak., against the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HARE: Petition of sundry citizens of Wise County, Texas, for the establishment of a branch Federal court—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HEARD: Petition of heirs of Alexander Barclay, of Benton County, Missouri, for reference of their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Petition of L. M. Goen, against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. KERR: Petition of David Brant, against the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of John W. Fisher, of Shenandoah County, Virginia, one of the heirs of Isaac Fisher, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SENEY: Memorial of New York Board of Trade, in favor of naval reserve bill—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, remonstrance of John M. Myers and E. B. Myers, of Tiffin, Ohio, against the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. SPOONER: Petition against the passage of the international copyright bill—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. W. L. WILSON: Petition of Samuel J. Rowland, of Jefferson County, West Virginia, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 10, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

THOMAS M. BOWEN, a Senator from the State of Colorado; EPHRAIM K. WILSON, a Senator from the State of Maryland; CHARLES B. FARWELL, a Senator from the State of Illinois; JAMES F. WILSON, a Senator from the State of Iowa; WILLIAM M. EVARTS, a Senator from the State of New York; JOHN W. DANIEL, a Senator from the State of Virginia; and JOHN E. KENNA, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, appeared in their seats to-day.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, transmitting a note from the minister of Chili, communicating a request of the speaker of the Chilian Chamber of Deputies for a regular exchange of publications between the legislative bodies of the United States and Chili; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of September 14, 1888, a report of the Chief of Engineers in regard to the navigation of the Detroit River and the St. Clair Flats, at the mouth of the St. Clair River, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, with accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. My recollection is that the resolution calling for that information was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], and if so, perhaps he would like to have it referred to that committee. Perhaps it had better lie on the table until he comes in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will lie on the table until the Senator from Illinois comes in, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. He will be here in a few minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore subsequently said: The communication from the Secretary of War, with accompanying papers from the Chief of Engineers, laid over to await the arrival of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I think it ought to go to that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made.

Mr. CULLOM. It relates to water ways.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the 5th of December, 1888, in relation to alleged outrages and restraints of liberty committed upon Alaskan Indian females or other persons in Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. I would prefer that it should not be referred at present. It seems to embrace a matter which the Committee on Territories might as well consider as the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I prefer that it should lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution to which this is an answer was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. With his consent, I should like to have it printed and lie on the table until I can have some conference with him as to the reference of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I have none.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, transmitting a general statement of all the appropriations placed under the Department of Justice which were available, and those from which payments were made, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, as required by section 3 of the act approved June 30, 1888, etc.; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CERTIFICATES OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate four communications from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainment of the vote for President and Vice-President of the United States of the States of Alabama, New Jersey, Missouri, and Louisiana; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying certificates, to lie on the table.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and law filed by that court under the act of January 20, 1885, in certain French spoliation claims; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of Lucy C. Morse, widow of Ralph W. Morse, late second lieutenant in Second Maine Volunteers, praying to be allowed increase and arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL presented the petition of W. H. H. Thackston, M. D., and other citizens of Virginia, praying for the removal of the duty on dental and surgical goods; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the Virginia Packing Company and other citizens of Roanoke and other places in Virginia, praying for the passage of a law providing for the payment of drawback on tinplate; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BERRY. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3648) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes, to report it favorably with amendments.

Inasmuch as this bill passed both Houses of Congress during the last session without objection, and was not signed by the President for the want of time, I presume, I am instructed by the committee to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the bill reported by him may be now considered. It will be read at length for information subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a very important bill, Mr. President. I think the amendments had better be printed and the bill go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be printed and the bill placed on the Calendar.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back adversely the bill (S. 3647) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; and the bill (S. 3652) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes. These bills relate to the same subject-matter and are precisely the same bill as the one reported favorably. All three having been introduced and the one recommended to be passed, the committee ask that these two bills be indefinitely postponed.

The bills were postponed indefinitely.

Mr. DOLPH. By direction of the Committee on Public Lands I report back favorably the bill (S. 3646) for the relief of William R. Wheaton and Charles H. Chamberlain, of California. Inasmuch as the bill passed both Houses at the last session of Congress and was sent to the President on the 10th of October, but failed to receive his approval, and therefore failed to become a law, I am instructed by the committee to ask that the bill be placed upon its passage now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better go on the Calendar, Mr. President. I should like to see it. I do not remember that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11042) for the relief of Motier Howe, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS IN UTAH.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report a resolution, and to ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to communicate to the Senate as soon as may be all information in his possession concerning the execution of the provisions of section 17 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes,' approved March 22, 1882," and that he report also the names of all officers of the United States who have had any connection with the execution of said section and in what capacity, and what compensation has been claimed by them or agreed to be paid to them, and what compensation, if any, they have received, and whether any of such persons at the same time have held any other office or employment under the United States, and, if so, what.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The explanation is that by the seventeenth section of the act of 1887 the Attorney-General was directed to cause proceedings to be instituted in the proper courts to forfeit to the United States for the ultimate use of schools in Utah the property of the corporation called the Church of the Latter-Day Saints in that Territory which that corporation should have been found to have acquired contrary to law.

It appears from the newspapers and from correspondence I have received that the Attorney-General did direct such proceedings to be instituted in the courts of Utah, and they were instituted. It is stated that the judge in charge appointed the marshal of the Territory to be the receiver of this property. The marshal of course was the executive officer of the court who made the seizure of whatever property the judicial proceedings applied to, and he was appointed receiver.

It is alleged that the district attorney of the United States was immediately employed by the marshal as his private and particular counsel as receiver, and that the property, or some of it, has been sold and a fund obtained, and that now proceedings are going on by the marshal in his character as receiver, and by the district attorney of the United States in his character as private counsel to the receiver, to get what is alleged to be an enormous and exorbitant allowance out of this fund for their services as receiver and as counsel to the receiver, etc.; and that the school board, who would have charge of the interest in the ultimate fund if it should be held forfeitable and applicable to schools, have been obliged to employ private counsel to resist these demands of the marshal and district attorney of the United States (both of whom, I will humbly suggest, ought to be on the other side of any such question), in their attempt to get what is alleged to be enormous slices out of this fund.

Therefore the Committee on the Judiciary thought it was due to the Attorney-General and due to the public interests that we should have full information as to what has been going on there.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think so, too.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply want to say that I have had letters indicating the same state of facts stated by the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to it.

The resolution was agreed to.

POWERS OF ATTORNEY-GENERAL IN PATENT CASES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, which was directed at the former session of the present Congress to inquire and report to the Senate whether in the then state of the law the Government has the power, or the Attorney-General of the United States the authority, to institute judicial proceedings to vacate a patent for an invention on any ground whatever, to report back the resolution with the statement that while the matter has been in the committee and pressed out of consideration by other more practical questions, we are advised and believe that the Supreme Court of the United States has settled the question in the affirmative, and has held that it is within the competence of the President of the United States in the due execution of the laws, and through his direction of course the Attorney-General, to institute a suit without any special act of Congress to vacate a patent for an invention upon any ground that affects the public interest or affects the regularity of the issue of the papers. We therefore ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the annual report of the Secretary of the Senate as to receipts and expenditures with the recommendation that the usual number be printed. I make that motion, and ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE, ETC.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the resolution to print 1,000 extra copies of the message of the President, with the reports of the heads of Departments without the appendices, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted by Mr. MORRILL December 5, 1888, was read, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form, for the use of the Senate, 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President and the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and the Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on agreeing to the same.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask in what form the documents are to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. In pamphlet form.

Mr. COCKRELL. Each one of them separately, or all in one volume?

Mr. MANDERSON. All together, in one pamphlet, the President's message and the reports proper of the heads of Departments. I may add that the cost of printing a thousand copies is under $500, being about $304 or $305.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House requested the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate copy of Senate concurrent resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, the original having been lost.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing;

A bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catherine Tate;

A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;

A bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner;

A bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh;

A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes; and

A bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grover with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3681) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 3682) for the relief Mrs. Anna E. Pennebaker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3683) granting a pension to Mrs. Angeline Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 3684) to provide for the erection of a building for the use of the Geological Survey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 3685) granting a pension to Martin Baer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FARWELL introduced a bill (S. 3686) appropriating prize-money due the survivors of Farragut's fleet for captures made on the Mississippi River in April, 1862; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3687) to increase the salaries of the Chief-Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 3688) granting a pension to Edward M. Lees; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3689) for the relief of Frederick Freidley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 3690) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the construction of a refracting telescope of sixty inches aperture under the directions of Theodore Ruggles Timby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HISCOCK introduced a bill (S. 3691) to provide for the payment of certain claims heretofore allowed, and so forth; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3692) for the relief of sailors and soldiers who have lost both hands or both feet, and providing for other specified disabilities; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (by request), introduced a bill (S. 3693) to amend chapter 206 of the laws of 1888, approved April 30, 1888, entitled "An act to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

I ask that the proposed substitute be printed and referred to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission.

I beg leave to say in regard to the proposed substitute that its purpose is to provide in one piece of legislation for the adjudication and ascertainment of the present indebtedness, and for a refunding and security of the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, and the Central Pacific Railway Company, as the successors of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California, and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, to which subsidy bonds of the United States were advanced in aid of the construction of the Pacific Railroads and branches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported. Does the Senator desire a reference of his amendment to the special committee, the bill having been reported?

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire a reference of the proposed substitute to the committee, so that they may consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interstate Commerce be, and it is hereby, directed to continue the investigation ordered to be made by the resolution of the Senate of August 3, 1888, and such committee is hereby given all the authority conferred by said resolution and power to sit during any recess of the Senate prior to December, 1889, the necessary expenses of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE SAMOAN ISLANDS.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the condition of affairs in the Samoan Islands so far as it affects the interests and rights of American citizens resident or doing business there; the relations of the United States with and their obligations to said islands under existing treaties; the necessity of maintaining their neutrality or independence, and our duty in this regard; what steps have been taken in this direction by our Government, and what further action, if any, is demanded. To this end said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer the necessary oaths, employ stenographers if required, cause its proceedings to be printed from time to time for its own use; and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee, and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, in my judgment a thorough, careful investigation of the subject referred to in this resolution is an imperative necessity at this time, although I admit it may disclose an exceedingly discreditable chapter in the history of American diplomacy.

The interests of the United States in the preservation of the independence of Samoa no American citizen can question for a moment. These islands are the dominating power in that portion of the Pacific Ocean and the center of commerce. They are about as far from the Sandwich Islands as the Sandwich Islands are from San Francisco, and about 1,300 miles from Australia. They are in the line of all our commerce with New Zealand and Australia.

A long while ago we obtained a concession of one of the most magnificent harbors in the world in those islands, and we established a coaling station. We made a treaty with Samoa in 1878, and Great Britain and Germany in the following year each made a treaty. It was understood and agreed that the independence and neutrality of these islands should be forever preserved. In 1886 Germany and England made an agreement for the preservation of their absolute neutrality.

The King of the Samoan Islands, Milatoa, was a very warm friend of the United States, so warm a friend that it provoked the jealousy of the German business men of that island. He was a warm friend because he looked upon us as bound under our obligations to him to maintain the independence of that country, and he received that impression from article 5 in our treaty, which I desire to read:

If unhappily any differences shall have arisen or shall arise between the Samoan Government and any other government in amity with the United States, the Government of the latter will employ its good offices for the purpose of adjusting these differences upon a satisfactory and a solid foundation.

In 1886 Tamassi rebelled against Milatoa, the King of Samoa. Milatoa could have put down the rebellion in a day's time. He would have had no difficulty at all. He is the king of one of the bravest people to be found in that part of the world. But our representatives in Samoa and the representatives of Great Britain, desiring to prevent bloodshed, called the attention of Milatoa to the obligations of the United States and of Great Britain under the treaties, and persuaded him to do absolutely nothing, and to allow Tamassi's rebellion to proceed as far it could. It was a feeble one, unaided, and its procession could not be long. So King Milatoa did nothing, thus affording Germany a pretense, which she subsequently availed herself of.

But trouble was brewing in Samoa. Complaints came to the State Department from our consuls there. We sent a commissioner out there, Mr. Bates, from Wilmington. An investigation was made. Finally it was considered an absolute necessity that there should be some settlement of these matters, and a conference was agreed upon to be held in the city of Washington in 1887 between the United States, Great Britain, and Germany.

That conference was held. The representatives of those three Governments were present.

In the progress of the conference the German representative demanded or asked that Germany might control absolutely these islands for five years. Secretary Bayard refused to comply with such an unreasonable request as that urged by the German ambassador or the German minister. The conference took a recess. It did not dissolve; it simply took a recess; and while that recess was in being a German fleet, in less than ten days, sailed for Samoa, entered the harbors, took practical possession of the islands, undoubtedly with the consent of Great Britain, undoubtedly with a full understanding in advance with Great Britain that Germany would so act; because, if there had not been an understanding, Great Britain never would have allowed a day to pass without a peremptory demand that the status quo should be restored; her fleets would have gone to Samoa, and Germany would have retired. It was an outrage to the United States, and an insult which no great country ought to submit to for a single moment.

I say they took practical possession. They espoused the cause of Tamassi. They seized or rather compelled the surrender of King Milatoa. They deported him to a remote island, and afterwards took him to Berlin, where I understand he is to-day.

They espoused, I say, the cause of Tamassi. They placed him in power in that island. They appointed a German consular clerk his premier. They boycotted American business men. They picketed with German guards the American consulate. They hauled down, or compelled to be hauled down, the American flag. They committed every conceivable outrage upon these poor people who were friends of Milatoa. They seized them, incarcerated them in jails; sent them off to remote islands; killed some. They broke up the business of the American business men there. They treated our consul with contempt. They imposed fines, levied taxes, violated the agreed neutrality of the municipality in which the public buildings were erected by contributions from each of the nations.

Finally when that government was apparently established that fleet sailed away leaving Tamassi in power.

I understand very well indeed that our Secretary of State defined distinctly to the Germans or to the German authorities the position assumed by the United States, but having done so he has rested absolutely from that time to this, and nothing has been done to restore the rights of American citizens in Samoa or prevent the aggressions of Germany.

A short time ago Madaaffa, a legitimate successor to Milatoa (which Tamassi was not), raised troops, friends of Milatoa, and, as I understand from the last advices, gave battle to Tamassi, routed him, conquered him absolutely, and a legitimate king is to-day on the throne of Samoa.

But by the same steamer came the news that the German fleet is once more sailing for Samoa. What for no one knows, but from the policy which Germany has illustrated in those islands for the last two years no one has any reason to believe other than this, that Germany intends to take now absolute possession. And why should she not? Great Britain interposes no objection, and the United States of America has done absolutely nothing within the last five or six months in relation to it. Why should not Germany then assume that the United States and Great Britain are ready to permit her to take possession of those islands—she undoubtedly intends to do so—and raise the German flag over them?

Mr. President, it is well undoubtedly to fit out ships of war and send them down to that poor, weak Republic of Hayti, a half dozen of them, if you please. It is well enough for this great Republic, when Mexico takes and imprisons some American tramp, to threaten war, even to go to the very ragged edge of it. But would it not be more consistent with the dignity and power of this Republic to protect the rights of its citizens against equals—a country like Germany or a country like England? One vessel seized in Hayti; hundreds of vessels seized by Canada. One backed by Great Britain; the other backed by no one.

In my judgment, the American people demand, if we are to show our power as a country, that we shall exhibit it against our equals, not against our inferiors.

Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of this resolution, and I hope the Committee on Foreign Relations will be active and industrious in finding out the condition of things in these islands and determining what duty requires of the United States.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state, before the Senator proceeds, that under the rule all resolutions constituting a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate should be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. But that provision can be waived by unanimous consent. The Senator from Delaware will proceed.

Mr. GRAY. I do not know, Mr. President, that I should object to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine; but under the circumstances and because of the attitude assumed by the Senator from Maine and of the remarks with which he chose to accompany the presentation of his resolution, I shall feel called upon to object to its present consideration, and ask that it shall go, as suggested by the Chair, to the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Whether the Government of the United States under this impulse of jingoism (which I use for want of a better word to characterize the feeling which seems to be rampant now in regard to our foreign affairs) should interfere in the matters that concern the islands of the Pacific Ocean and should embroil itself with the powers of Europe, governments where foreign affairs are controlled by the executive entirely, without the intervention of the legislative branch of the government, is a question to be determined by the people of the United States through the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled. Fortunately no such power was ever lodged with the Executive of the United States or in any of the Executive Departments as to commit this great Government to a foreign policy that predicated the use of force or of the war powers of the Constitution except by the consent and authorization of Congress.

If we are to embark upon a policy of territorial aggrandizement or of entangling alliances contrary to American precedents and American traditions, it will be well to have the resolution discussed before the American people in the halls of Congress, but there is certainly no power lodged with the Executive or in any of the Executive Departments to commit the Government of the United States to a policy that involves the assertion of physical force in interference in matters of that kind without the consent of Congress and without legislation by the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Notwithstanding the statements of the Senator from Maine, I am not as yet aware that any American interest or the rights of any American citizen are affected here otherwise than they are affected in any foreign country when a revolution takes place.

So it seems to me that if this general policy is to be inaugurated we may as well discuss it upon the resolution of the Senator from Maine as in any other way or at any other time. But I simply want to enter my carcal against the criticisms which he has seen fit to accompany his resolution in regard to the conduct of the State Department, which had no power, and could not, without the most flagrant usurpation, pretend to commit the Government of the United States and its people to a policy that antagonized all its former traditions and history.

I therefore shall object to the present consideration of the resolution, for it is an important one, and I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. FRYE. Of course, Mr. President, I shall be obliged to assent to the reference suggested.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, if there be no objection.

COLUMBIA RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate what action has been taken in pursuance of a clause in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," received by the President July 31, 1888, and which subsequently became a law without executive approval, authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of three engineers from the United States Army to examine the obstructions to navigation in the Columbia River at The Dalles and Celilo Falls, and at Three and Ten Mile Rapids, and to report thereon, and which authorized and directed the Secretary of War to transmit such report to Congress at this session, with his views and those of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, thereon.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution introduced by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], and reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which comes over under objection from a former day.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to; as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a messenger for the Committee on Foreign Relations, whose services shall be devoted exclusively to the business of said committee, and that the messenger so appointed shall be selected by said committee.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business that order is closed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HARRIS to the amendment of the Committee on Finance in Schedule C, metals, lines 446 and 447, to strike out the words "one and one-tenth cents" and insert "six-tenths of 1 cent;" so as to make the clause read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts, or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this bill, and the Senate also, to give consent to go back to the beginning of the metal schedule, Schedule C. My reasons for making this request are many. In the first place, I think we ought to begin at the bottom to make some reduction, and it will be very much easier for us to take intelligent action on the bill if we can first know whether the Senate will or will not consent to make some reduction in the clause which precedes the one now under consideration.

It will be seen that on a valuation of something over $55,000,000 of importations in 1887 under the metal schedule, the Senate bill only makes a reduction of duty of about $100,000, based upon like importations. There is an increase of duty on very many things where there should be a decrease, as I think I shall be able to make plain.

I therefore desire to go back to the beginning of Schedule C in order that I may offer some amendments to the bill preceding the paragraph now under consideration. I make the motion that we begin with the reading of the bill this morning at the commencement of Schedule C, on page 101.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I do not see why we should go back and begin again with the reading of Schedule C. Schedule C has already been read up to the one hundred and thirtieth paragraph. If the Senator desires to offer some amendments to this schedule back of paragraph 130, for myself I will not interpose an objection. I suppose that can be done by unanimous consent. The Senator perhaps was not here when that portion of the bill was read, and if he desires to offer an amendment after the pending amendment is disposed of I shall not object myself.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then, I desire to offer an amendment on page——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause one moment. The pending question is on the amendment that has just been stated by the Secretary.

Mr. REAGAN. On that amendment I desire to make a few remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request of the Senator from New Jersey can not be entertained except by unanimous consent.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas objects.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection, but I desire to make a few remarks on the section to which that amendment is offered, and I understood the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to say he would have no objection, after we had acted upon this amendment, to going back.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from Texas will permit me to suggest that we shall then reach that particular paragraph, and the action of the Senate on the amendment I propose to offer would probably have some effect upon the Senator from Texas in concluding his judgment.

Mr. REAGAN. I have a reason for desiring to submit my remarks at this stage of the debate, and it will not affect the action desired by the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas is recognized by the Chair as entitled to the floor on the pending question, the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, pending the question of adjournment at the last meeting of the Senate the Democratic Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] expressed some views which it seems to me ought not to pass without notice. In the discussion of the paragraph of the bill then and now under consideration he observed that there were but two or three rolling-mills in the country that are equipped for the manufacture of many classes of structural iron. He mentioned that the Carnegie works at Pittsburgh were prepared to manufacture all sizes and all forms of this description of iron. He mentions that a contractor for a moderate-sized building in Cleveland would be compelled to purchase a large portion of such iron from the Carnegie works, and that the whole western country is dependent on the Carnegie works for iron structures.

Now, when it is remembered that of the iron and steel "beams, girders, joists, angles, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts, or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, with other structural forms of iron and steel," many millions of dollars' worth are required annually in the construction of public and private building, bridges, etc., and when it is remembered that the Government subsidy allowed to the makers of these descriptions of iron and steel, in the form of a duty on imports, is now 102.75 per cent.—that is, that for every $100 worth made and sold the manufacturer gets $102.75 of other people's money; and when it is remembered that capital is so abundant in this country as to seek investment in 3 per cent. Government bonds; and when we remember the unlimited supply of iron and coal in this country, and that thousands of laborers seek employment without being able to find it, we can hardly fail to be surprised at the statements made by the Senator from Ohio.

I do not assume to challenge directly what he said on this subject; but under all these circumstances it seems strange that those who have millions of dollars invested in bonds which yield from 3 to 4½ per cent. should not invest them in a business like this, which pays over 100 per cent. Possibly this may be explained by reference to the practice now prevalent of forming syndicates and trusts in all the great departments of production and commerce in this country to enable the parties engaged in them to limit production and supply and to dictate prices to consumers.

This Mr. Carnegie mentioned by the Senator is a person who it is understood has in a few years made a fortune of many millions of dollars in the establishment referred to by the manufacture of structural iron and steel. Indeed, it seems he has become so rich by the help of an American protective tariff that he can not afford to spend his summers with plain American people, and that he has purchased or built a splendid castle in his native Scotland, where he can enjoy life in a sort of royal splendor and entertain distinguished American tourists of the high-protection persuasion, and from whence he can air them in his coach and four with liveried drivers in lordly style.

I thought the Senator not quite fortunate in introducing Carnegie as a sample of self-sacrificing patriots engaged in trying to build up an American infant industry. And it occurred to me at the time that if the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], who are two special champions of this bill, were Episcopalians, when their Democratic friend from Ohio came to their relief by introducing Carnegie, they might well desire to amend the common prayer by adding, "From our friend, good Lord, deliver us."

Such a provision as the one under consideration ought not to pass without the attention of the country being called to the fact that the American people are now required by a high protective tariff to pay $202.75 for every $100 worth of these descriptions of iron and steel which now go into use in this country. It is proposed by the House bill to reduce the duty on such articles to 49.32 per cent., thus offering the high bonus of nearly $50 on every $100 worth which go into use. This, it seems to me, is unnecessarily high. But the Senate committee in the bill now before us proposes to fix the rate of duty at 90.42 per cent., and thus to give a bonus of more than $90 of other people's money to the manufacturer of every $100 worth which go into use.

Very recently we have heard a great deal in this Chamber and elsewhere about the protection of the interests of agriculture and about securing good wages for labor. Republican Senators propose to accomplish these desirable ends through the instrumentality of the bill before us by a system of class legislation and by the creation of grinding monopolies in nearly or quite every branch of manufacturing industry. And it seems they are to have some Democratic help.

On woolen goods they propose to give protection as they term it, ranging from 70.67 to 186 per cent.; cottons, from 35 to 50 per cent.; hemp and jute goods, from 60 to 166.66; iron and steel, from 33 to 100 per cent., and so on.

And this is proposed when the country is crying out against class legislation and monopolies, when the people see and know that such a policy is creating a large class of millionaire men and corporations, and when these favored classes are by trusts and combinations redoubling their vast wealth and aiding high protection to impoverish the middle classes of the people and to reduce the poorer classes to the condition of tramps and paupers. Senators may refuse to recognize the poverty, debt, and discontent which pervades the agricultural and working classes everywhere. But such a course is not statesmanship; it is in aid of selfishness, avarice, unpatriotic greed. Wise and patriotic legislators would recognize such a condition of things and remedy it by the adoption of a just policy, and thus prevent the dangers which must follow continued injustice and oppression.

This policy of fostering the interests of classes of citizens at the expense of the country at large has gone on until agriculture has become a degraded pursuit and the sons of farmers seek any employment which will relieve them from the cultivation of the soil. And labor in this country is steadily sinking to the degraded condition in which it is found in the Old World.

Among the many wise and judicious utterances of President Cleveland in his recent annual message to Congress is the following:

Our farmers, long-suffering and patient, struggling in the race of life with the hardest and most unremitting toil, will not fail to see, in spite of misrepresentations and misleading fallacies, that they are obliged to accept such prices for their products as are fixed in foreign markets where they compete with the farmers of the world; that their lands are declining in value while their debts increase; and that without compensating favor they are forced by action of the Government to pay, for the benefit of others, such enhanced prices for the things they need that the scanty returns of their labor fail to furnish their support or leave no margin for accumulation.

In another portion of that message he says:

We discover that the fortunes realized by our manufacturers are no longer solely the reward of sturdy industry and enlightened foresight, but that they result from the discriminating favor of the Government, and are largely built upon undue exactions from the masses of our people. The gulf between employers and the employed is constantly widening and classes are rapidly forming, one comprising the very rich and powerful, while in the other are found the toiling poor.

Senators may choose to disregard the grave and solemn warnings implied in these utterances, but every day's experience will burn them into the hearts of the people. And in this connection it should not be forgotten that the American people are now too enlightened and have drank too deeply at the fountain of liberty to be enslaved by bands of greedy Shylocks, wise and cunning and unscrupulous though they be, and willing as they have shown themselves to be to corrupt the very fountains of justice.

The constitutional duty is devolved on Congress to provide revenues for the support of the Government and for the payment of the public debt. But the bill before us makes this but a secondary object, and makes the protection of domestic manufactures its controlling purpose. This policy is not authorized by the Constitution, and is operating to withdraw the money of the country from the channels of trade, cripple industry, and add to the hardships of labor. And it is stimulating extravagant, wasteful, and corrupt legislation, as was abundantly demonstrated during the last session of Congress.

I need not argue to prove the evil effects of such a policy.

The House bill proceeds on the theory that it is for revenue, but in truth it is a high protective tariff. The bill before us, the Senate substitute, has protection for its main object, and is greatly more objectionable than the House bill as a measure of protection; and its protection is for the benefit of a comparatively few persons at the expense and by the sacrifice of the interests of the great body of the people.

The House bill has for its aim to reduce the surplus of revenue by the reduction of taxes. The Senate bill aims to reduce the surplus of revenue by making duties so high as to exclude imports; a reactionary policy at war with the enlightened spirit of the age, and against the true interest of all commercial nations. It is a negation of justice and wise policy for the benefit of narrow selfishness and debasing and corrupting avarice and greed.

On this subject I make the following quotation:

I am in favor of such a revenue as shall be equal to all the just and reasonable wants of the Government; and I am decidedly opposed to all collection or accumulation of revenue beyond this point. An extravagant Government expenditure, and unnecessary accumulation in the Treasury, are both, of all things, to be most studiously avoided.

Our protectionist friends are doubtless ready to exclaim that this view is another quotation from President Cleveland or some free-trader. Not so. It is the well-matured expression of Daniel Webster, an avowed protectionist, who was also an honest patriot and a great statesman; made in the course of a speech delivered at Niblo's Saloon in New York on the 15th of March, 1837, pursuant to a formal invitation and in a great meeting, of which Chancellor Kent was chairman.

But why proceed in this line of discussion? No amount of facts, reason, or argument will convince the beneficiaries of unjust legislation that they ought not to be made rich off of the labor and earnings of other people. They will balance the moral and political account by putting the shame of such a course in one pocket and the gold derived from such practices in the other. There is no use to appeal to them to observe the rules of justice and right. And the people must, at last, if they would save themselves, secure protection by superior numbers and their ballots.

The issue between a tariff for protection and a tariff for revenue is an issue between a limited class and the general body of the people, between money and men, between selfishness and patriotism, between injustice and justice; and if the people are worthy to be free the correct settlement of this question can not much longer be delayed. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee may prevail, though I should have liked it better if it had proposed a duty of 30 per cent. instead of 49.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Now, Mr. President, I move, as no objection has been offered to my doing so, on page 102 of the bill, line 393, to strike out "three-tenths of 1 cent per pound," and insert the words "six dollars per ton."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the motion except by unanimous consent. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRIS. As that amendment is in respect to items appearing in the bill before the item that the Senate now has under consideration, in order that the Senator from New Jersey (if the Senator from Iowa consents to go back to that item) may test the sense of the body upon the amendment he proposes, I will temporarily withdraw the amendment that is now pending, so as to give the Senator from New Jersey the opportunity to offer his amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will state my purpose in offering the amendment. I propose to offer a series of amendments beginning at the bottom, at the lowest stage of manufacture, in order, if reductions are made there—and I trust and believe they will be made—that the result will be to make some difference as to the measure of duty that ought to be imposed upon the other preparations or manufactures of iron all the way through the schedule.

If it is the purpose of the other side of the Chamber to reduce this metal schedule only to the extent of $100,000 under this measure, as based upon the importations of 1887, then let the country and the Senate understand it. If this great schedule, in which the duties have been higher perhaps than any other and more oppressive upon the people, is not to be reduced at all, then let us understand it; but certainly the first thing to do would be to reduce the price of the iron in pigs if we propose to make further reductions in the bill. Therefore I move, on line 393, to strike out the words "three-tenths of 1 cent per pound" and insert "$6 per ton."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] having been withdrawn, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] moves to amend as will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 102, lines 393 and 394, it is proposed to strike out the words "three-tenths of 1 cent per pound" and insert in lieu thereof "$6 per ton;" so as to read:

Iron in pigs, iron kentledge, spiegeleisen, wrought and cast scrap-iron, and scrap-steel, $6 per ton.

Mr. McPHERSON. This would be a reduction of 72 cents per ton upon iron in that shape and form. This is the provision for $6 per ton as contained in the House bill. It is quite high enough, and by making that reduction of 72 cents per ton upon iron in that state of preparation we shall be enabled to make some further reductions without any particular injury to the industry whatever.

A tariff of $6 per ton upon iron certainly represents a great deal more than the entire labor cost involved in the manufacture of the iron, and then leaves in addition quite a large margin to the manufacturer. Therefore, if this reduction is made it may be followed by other reductions which will not interfere materially with the manufacturers of different kinds of iron, as provided in this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the vote is taken I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New Jersey to the fact that the amendment proposed by him is not the House provision. The House provision reduces the duty upon pig-iron and iron kentledge. The Senator from New Jersey proposes to make the reduction apply to all forms of scrap iron and scrap steel, and I understand the Senator from New Jersey to give as the reason for this particular amendment that it may influence his vote when he shall come to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey, I think, does not materially affect the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMERON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. HALE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I announce the pair of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. CHANDLER. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT] not now in his seat. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK (after having voted in the negative). I should like to inquire if the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He is not recorded.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana, and I therefore withdraw my vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska withdraws his vote.

Mr. CALL. I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. CAMERON. My colleague [Mr. QUAY] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—22.

Aldrich,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hoar,	Plumb,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Chandler,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Colquitt,	Hearst,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Brown,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Teller,
Butler,	Faulkner,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Call,	George,	Palmer,	Voorhees.
Cameron,	Gibson,	Quay,
Chace,	Hale,	Ransom,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McPHERSON. I now call the attention of the Senator who has charge of this bill to paragraph 121:

121. Bar-iron, rolled or hammered, comprising flats not less than 1 inch wide nor less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

It is not that I propose to object to the rate of duty there imposed on bar-iron where it is subject to the process of rolling and hammering on such small sizes as are here provided for, but let me compare, if you please, this with the difference in sizes in paragraph 130, which has been under consideration—beams, girders, joists, and all those larger forms of iron which require far less labor in their preparation, the weight is so much greater, the labor so much less, that the committee propose a rate of duty of 1.1 cents per pound on one form where the least labor is performed, and a duty of eight-tenths of 1 cent a pound where there is greater labor employed and greater expense.

That is all I wish to say with regard to paragraph 121; simply to call the Senator's attention to that.

In the proviso contained in paragraph 122, which immediately follows, on line 416, I find:

Provided further, That all iron bars, blooms, billets, or sizes or shapes of any kind, in the manufacture of which charcoal is used as fuel, shall be subject to a duty of not less that $22 per ton.

I desire to move to strike out the word "two," leaving the rate of duty at $20 per ton. That is about the duty, I believe, provided in the House bill, and I can see no reason whatever why there should be a higher rate of duty imposed where charcoal is used as fuel. It would seem to me, unless the purpose be to denude the whole country of forests, that inasmuch as this steel is necessary for certain purposes it would be better to make the rate of duty in such a way as not to be too great an inhibition upon those who wish to use it, and $20 a ton is certainly high enough. If the duty is made $20 per ton it may reduce the cost upon very many of the articles of manufacture into which these blooms and billets are put.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey move an amendment?

Mr. McPHERSON. I move to strike out "two;" so as to read:

Subject to a duty of not less than $20 per ton.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the Secretary report the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, line 419, it is proposed to amend the proviso by striking out "twenty-two" before the word "dollars," and inserting "twenty;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided further, That all iron bars, blooms, billets, or sizes or shapes of any kind, in the manufacture of which charcoal is used as fuel, shall be subject to a duty of not less than $20 per ton.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask a question there. Does that imply that somebody has the right to make the duty different from that which the committee have made it here, "not less than $22 per ton," or shall it be as much as $22, or shall it be more? With whom is this discretion lodged?

Mr. ALDRICH. It is not a discretion. It is 1 cent a pound.

Mr. PLUMB. That is to say, if there is anything that has not been enumerated before, it shall bear a duty of not less than $22 a ton. Does not that term "less" imply that somebody may impose a duty not more than $22 a ton? If so, I want to know who that person is.

Mr. HISCOCK. There is a provision in the bill fixing a specific duty upon particular iron. This would not change that specific duty.

Mr. PLUMB. I know; but I understand this is a sort of omnium gatherum clause that may take in something which may possibly have been omitted elsewhere by enumeration.

Mr. ALDRICH. The first clause in paragraph 121 fixes the duty on bar-iron at eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound. Taking these two products together, if the bar-iron was made with charcoal-iron it would be $22 per ton instead of eight-tenths of a cent a pound.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand. Would that be by virtue of this proviso?

Mr. ALDRICH. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is a change to specific rates.

Mr. PLUMB. Would it not be as well to strike out "not less than" and leave it $22 a ton?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. McPHERSON].

Mr. McPHERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire

[Mr. BLAIR]. I do not think it necessary that I should repeat this announcement again to-day.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to announce the pair of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. The senior Senator from Nebraska, if present, would vote "nay."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], and will be absent for several days. I take this occasion to announce once for all the pair between the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. If they were both present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. CHANDLER. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey, not now in his seat [Mr. BLODGETT]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I desire to ask if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has not voted.

Mr. WALTHALL. I withdraw my vote, being paired with him. I also inadvertently voted on the last vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his vote.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vance,
Berry,	Harris,	Payne,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Voorhees.
Coke,	McPherson,	Reagan,
Daniel,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—19.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hiscock,	Sherman,
Allison,	Evarts,	Hoar,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Frye,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hawley,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—39.

Beck,	Chandler,	Hearst,	Ransom,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Brown,	George,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Butler,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Call,	Gorman,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Hale,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Chace,	Hampton,	Quay,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the vote discloses the absence of a quorum, the roll of Senators will be called.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aldrich,	Davis,	Kenna,	Reagan,
Allison,	Dawes,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Bate,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Morgan,	Stewart,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Call,	Frye,	Paddock,	Vance,
Chandler,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Gray,	Payne,	Walthall,
Coke,	Harris,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Pugh,
Daniel,	Hoar,	Ransom,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty Senators have answered to their names. There being a quorum present, the question is upon the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], upon which the yeas and nays have already been ordered. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

Mr. EVARTS (when his name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] not being present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. QUAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. FAULKNER]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. I transfer the pair that I have with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT] to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who has not voted, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Daniel,	Pasco,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pugh,	Vest,
Call,	Harris,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—20.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,
Allison,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Chandler,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Frye,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—36.

Beck,	Eustis,	Hoar,	Quay,
Blair,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Brown,	George,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Butler,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Payne,	Turpie,
Davis,	Hearst,	Plumb,	Walthall.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I now call attention to paragraph 123, which reads as follows:

Cast-iron pipe of every description, nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

If, sir, you will turn to the importations of cast-iron pipe during the year 1887, there were in quantity 1,699 pounds which came to this country at a value of $58.83. Of the hundreds of thousands of tons of cast-iron pipe used in this country for all purposes less than a single ton was imported. There are different sizes of pipes. It is a kind of freight more easily handled than any other. It could come very largely in ballast. It is one of those things that represent the very lowest possible labor cost in its manufacture. The duty under existing law is 1 cent a pound, and, as the illustration shows, absolutely prohibitory, only $58 worth of iron pipe having been imported into the country in 1887, and the number of hundreds of thousands of tons used can scarcely be computed.

The committee on the other side of the Chamber have taken a gigantic stride downward. They have reduced it one-tenth of 1 cent a pound, the very first stopping place they could find between 1 cent a pound and a reduction. In other words, the prohibitory tariff on cast-iron pipe is to be continued, and the people of this country are to be compelled to pay this excessive tax of $22.40 per ton upon every ton of it imported. The cast-iron pipe manufacturers have formed also a trust or a combination, under which the price of cast-iron pipe is the foreign cost plus the tariff and all expenses.

Now, Mr. President, I think a little less protection will answer that industry. I move to strike out the word "nine" and insert "six," so as to make the duty on pipe six-tenths of a cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, line 420, it is proposed to strike out "nine-tenths" and insert "six-tenths;" so as to read:

Cast-iron pipe of every description, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON]. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let us have the yeas and nays on that. That is an important question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. HOAR. The pair which was transferred to me by the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT] is transferred again to him, and those two Senators are paired. I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. PADDOCK. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Berry,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Call,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	Vest,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Voorhees.
Daniel,	McPherson,	Reagan,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Quay,
Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Frye,	Palmer,	Stewart,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,	Stockbridge,
Dolph,	Hiscock,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—33.

Bate,	Chandler,	Hearst,	Spooner,
Beck,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Stanford,
Blackburn,	Davis,	Jones of Nevada,	Teller,
Blair,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Turpie,
Blodgett,	George,	Manderson,	Walthall,
Brown,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Wilson of Md.
Butler,	Gray,	Payne,
Cameron,	Hale,	Riddleberger,
Chace,	Hampton,	Sabin,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It seems to me that if, in a case of this kind, so apparent as this one, in which the duty is so very high, with no importation, and with apparently no intention upon the other side of the Chamber to do justice to the consumers of any kind of metal, is to stand, all opposition might as well cease to this bill. If a case so apparent as the one I have stated is to receive the united vote of that side of the Chamber, it is scarcely worth while to offer any further amendments to the bill. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] nods his head. Then we are to understand, I suppose, that the manufacturers of iron pipe may appear before a committee of the Senate, and may fix any price they wish upon their product, without any regard to what the consumer may say about it. In other words, the manufacturer of iron pipe may fix his own price upon his manufactured goods. It seems to me as though the time must come when perhaps the consumer will have something to say about it.

As I said before, here is an absolutely prohibitory duty. The consumption of this kind of goods is perhaps greater than that of any iron product upon the whole list by private individuals, and it is also used by corporations in great water-works. A duty of $22.50 a ton is here imposed upon it. The cast-iron pipe industry is able, under this bill, to fix its own terms and nobody can interfere.

Now, I will offer one further amendment to see if a single step downwards may be taken, even so small as one-tenth of 1 cent per pound. I will ask to make it eight-tenths of a cent instead of nine-tenths. I shall be able then to form some kind of an idea whether it is intended to stick rigidly to this measure, all common sense to the contrary notwithstanding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 103, line 420, it is proposed to strike out "nine-tenths" and insert "eight-tenths;" so as to read:

Cast-iron pipe of every description, eight-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. DAVIS (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bate,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Vest,
Berry,	Gray,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Call,	Harris,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Coke,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Daniel,	Morgan,	Vance,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Frye,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hiscock,	Quay,

ABSENT—32.

Beck,	Chandler,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Davis,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada	Spooner,
Brown,	George,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gibson,	Manderson,	Teller,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Chace,	Hale.	Payne,	Walthall.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the committee to paragraph 124:

124. Cast-iron vessels, plates, stove-plates, andirons, sad-irons, tailors' irons, hatters' irons, and castings of iron, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 1.2 cents per pound.

Here are articles very small in size, very little in weight, on which the committee have imposed a duty of only 1.2 cents a pound as compared with the protection afforded to cast-iron pipe in paragraph 123 of nine-tenths of 1 cent per pound, where the weights in the case of cast-iron pipe are so great that they even have to use derricks to move them; and really the cost of making an entire iron pipe 10 to 12 feet long in point of labor is about equal to making a stove-cover or an iron kettle. Would it be right for me to inquire why this discrimination is made? Would it be right for me to assume that the poor fellows who are engaged in the small industries have not contributed so liberally to the campaign fund of the Republican party as those in the larger industries? Or what is the reason? Why should there be such a discrimination made in favor of the cast-iron pipe industry as against the poor fellow who makes kettles and pots, and pieces of stoves, and hatters' irons, and andirons, and tailors' irons? As that seems very low compared with paragraph 123 I dare not touch it.

Now, Mr. President, we will proceed to paragraph 126, beginning with line 429:

126. Anvils, or parts thereof, of iron or steel, 2 cents per pound.

I move to strike out "two" and insert "one and one-half."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of line 429 it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and insert the words "one and one-half;" so as to read:

Anvils, or parts thereof, of iron or steel, 1½ cents per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], whom I do not see in the Chamber at this moment. I therefore withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Bate,	Daniel,	McPherson,	Vance,
Berry,	Faulkner,	Morgan,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Pasco,	Voorhees.
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Reagan,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—21.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Allison,	Farwell,	Palmer,	Stockbridge,
Bowen,	Frye,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Quay,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Davis,	Ingalls,	Sabin,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Brown,	George,	Mitchell,	Teller,
Butler,	Gibson,	Paddock,	Turpie,
Cameron,	Hale,	Payne,	Walthall,
Chace,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Hawley,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I now call attention to paragraph 127, a most important one, and a most important one also when you consider the amount of importations during the past year:

127. Iron or steel anchors, or parts thereof of iron or steel, mill-irons and mill-cranks of wrought-iron, and wrought-iron for ships, and forgings of iron or steel, or of combined iron and steel, for vessels, steam-engines, and locomotives, or parts thereof, weighing each 25 pounds or more, 1.8 cents per pound.

We have heard much of late in this Chamber about an attempt to increase the importance of the merchant marine. We have heard much of the destruction of the American shipping industry. Here is a duty imposed upon these articles which is absolutely prohibitory. I say "absolutely," because I think I am not too extravagant in my statement when out of all the different articles included in this item of the schedule the value placed upon the entire importations in 1887 was only $3,393. The rate of duty imposed then was 2 cents a pound under existing law. That was prohibitory. The rate that I intend to ask for I think will also be prohibitory practically, but at the same time it will prevent the trusts and combinations from charging within half a cent a pound of what they do now under existing law. Therefore I move to strike out "1.8 cents a pound" and put in "1½ cents a pound."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out in line 436 the words "eight-tenths" and insert "one-half;" so as to read:

One and one-half cents per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall vote for that amendment, though I would have preferred that the Senator should have made the rate of duty 1 cent instead of 1½ cents per pound. It is true, as he has stated, that we have heard here of the necessity of building up our shipping interests, and Senators have gone so far as to desire to tax the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of doing that in the way of subsidies. Here is an opportunity now to relieve the ship-building interests by reducing the tariff rates upon such iron materials as go into ships. Yet Senators who have clamored loudest for subsidies to aid our commerce, to aid our shipping interests, are now voting steadily against any reduction of the duties upon these materials which go into ships, and which reduction would aid to some extent in the construction of vessels and in the advancement of our commercial interests.

If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me to amend his amendment, I will offer to amend by reducing the duty to 1 cent per pound. These heavy articles, in addition to the duty, will have to pay very considerable freight if they are brought here from abroad, and even the 1 cent duty, in my opinion, would not permit as large an importation of these articles as ought to be allowed.

The trusts that we have heard of in the newspapers of the country, as well as from the Senator from New Jersey this morning, are combining to put up the prices wherever there is an exclusion of importation. It is so with sugar, and it is so with every interest in this country; and if you keep up these high rates of duty and prohibit the importation of these articles so necessary to the commerce of the country, these combinations and trusts will put up the price of these goods and thus take from our shipping industry and from others the advantages they ought to have in their business. I therefore move to amend the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey and ask that the duty be reduced to 1 cent a pound.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I would call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that the rates of duty have already been fixed by a vote in the Senate this morning upon other paragraphs in this metal schedule, and fixed at a very high rate. While I think that 1 cent a pound would be a sufficient protection, I simply propose 1½ cents in order to keep the bill as nearly proportionate as possible. I am unwilling for my part to have a rate of duty imposed in one particular paragraph of this schedule which is absolutely prohibitory and which gives to the manufacturer a monopoly of the business or the right to fix the prices at which his goods shall be sold, and at the same time fix the price of his competitor's goods. I am unwilling to have one more monopoly built up and then reduce the rates very much below the proportionate rate in some other industry. If the surplus is to be reduced by prohibitory tariff, let it extend to the entire list.

Mr. SAULSBURY. We have a duty to perform. If the other side of this Chamber choose to fix the duties on certain articles at enormous rates, we on this side of the Chamber, representing, as I believe, the great interests of the people of this country, have a duty to perform to the country, and whether we are successful in it or not, we ought not to shrink from performing it, for we are, as I said, laboring in the interests of the people of the country. I therefore insist upon amending the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey so as to reduce the rate to 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. The Secretary will report the proposed amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out "and one-half;" so as to read:

127. Iron or steel anchors, or parts thereof or iron or steel, mill-irons and mill-cranks of wrought-iron, and wrought-iron for ships, and forgings of iron or steel, or of combined iron and steel, for vessels, steam-engines, and locomotives, or parts thereof, weighing each 25 pounds or more, 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. I should vote "ay" if he were here.

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to ask if the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON] is recorded as having voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is not.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] recorded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. He is.

Mr. HARRIS. I call the attention of that Senator to the fact of the absence of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Both Senators appear to be out of the Chamber now.

Mr. HARRIS. I understood they were generally paired. That was the reason I called attention to it. I supposed the Senator from Iowa was in the Chamber.

Mr. ALLISON. My colleague [Mr. WILSON, of Iowa] is out of the Chamber now. I am quite sure if he were here he would respect his pair.

Mr. HARRIS. I am quite sure of that, too.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator can not suggest some other Senator to pair with my colleague, I will pair with the Senator from Maryland myself.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw my vote, and pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his vote.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Berry,	Daniel,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Pasco,	Turpie,
Call,	Gray,	Pugh,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Ransom,	Voorhees.

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Cullom,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Davis,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Hoar,	Platt,

ABSENT—33.

Allison,	Colquitt,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Beck,	Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Blair,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Teller,
Blodgett,	George,	McPherson,	Vest,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.
Cameron,	Hale,	Quay,
Chace,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,
Chandler,	Hearst,	Sabin,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The question now recurs, I believe, on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not like to allow this opportunity to pass without thanking the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and also the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] for their great interest in the American merchant marine and its revival. I like to see that spirit manifested, and I will assume that their amendments have been offered with a view to furnish cheaper iron for the building of ships for the merchant marine of the United States; but I desire to call their attention to the fact that there has been a law on the statute-book for a good many years which admits, free of duty, all foreign materials used in the building of ships for the merchant marine except angles and bars, and that they are provided for in this present bill.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if the legislation to which he refers is not confined to a rebate of duty on the materials used for vessels to be employed in the foreign trade?

Mr. FRYE. What is called and known as the "merchant marine," about which, and about which alone, has anything been said in the Senate of the United States in favor of subsidies or assistance in any way.

Mr. GRAY. I was asking for information. The Senator from Maine has not answered my question, at least I do not understand that he has.

Mr. FRYE. Of course it is for ships used in the foreign service.

Mr. GRAY. I know it applies beneficially to the coastwise trade.

Mr. ALDRICH. It does to the extent that that trade is between the Atlantic and the Pacific ports. It applies to the domestic service between the Atlantic and Pacific ports.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to ask whether the enactment of this bill into a law, fixing the duties upon articles which enter into ships and vessels, will not of itself be a repeal of the very law to which the Senator from Maine referred?

Mr. FRYE. No; it will not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It is a subsequent act, and it does not make any exception with reference to that law.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Delaware will look at section

2510 of the Revised Statutes as amended on page 195 of the bill which he holds in his hand—I assume he is asking for information—he will find that the law is re-enacted in this bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The paragraph applies not only to vessels, but applies also to mill-irons and some other things besides iron used in vessels and ships. I say, however, that while we are attempting to build up the merchant marine, while we are desiring to build up our commerce, we ought not to tax any of those things which enter into any class or description of vessels. This goes into locomotives and steam-engines of every description, mill-irons and mill-cranks of wrought iron, as well as those things which enter into the construction of ships and vessels.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the roll-call will proceed.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Bate,	Coke,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pasco,	Vance.
Call,	Harris,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,

NAYS—24.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Davis,	Hawley,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—34.

Beck,	Daniel,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner,
Blair,	Evarts,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Blodgett,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Teller,
Brown,	George,	Plumb,	Vest,
Butler,	Gibson,	Quay,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Chace,	Hale,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Chandler,	Hampton	Sabin,
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Sherman,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, before proceeding to offer an amendment to the next paragraph, I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island, who called our attention to the exemption in section 2510, on page 195 of the bill, if he will say to me that there has been no change in that section from the existing law touching exemptions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Angles, bars, and billets of iron and steel have been added to the provisions of the section.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does the present law make any provision for the admission of wrought iron for plates for ships when used in the foreign trade, and also for beams and girders and everything employed in the construction of the hull of a vessel?

Mr. ALDRICH. The present law, as the Senator will see in section 2510, beginning in line 2689 of this bill, provides for the admission of iron and steel plates.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I understand; but I simply want to say that it seems to me as though there was a great big nigger in the wood-pile. Section 2510 limits, as I understand it, the exemption to such an extent that it is practically valueless in so far as it affects the paragraph now under consideration. Section 2510, to which our attention has been called, provides that in case these vessels are to be used in the foreign trade the material for their construction shall come in free of duty, and that paragraph 127, which we now have under consideration, shall not apply. As I understood the exemption, it allowed wrought-iron for ships, when intended to be used in the foreign trade, to come in under the exemption. Am I correct?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then I call attention to section 2510. Let me read it.

SEC. 2510. All lumber, timber, hemp, manila, wire rope, and iron and steel rods, bars, spikes, nails, plates, angles, bars, and bolts, and copper and composition metal which may be necessary for the construction and equipment of vessels built in the United States for foreign account and ownership or for the purpose of being employed in the foreign trade—

I need not go any further—and upon proof that such materials have been used for such purpose, no duties shall be paid thereon.

But maintaining still the duty under paragraph 127 on all the wrought-iron used in the construction of ships, the beams, the girders, the frames are left out of the exemption. In other words, if inventive genius were paid at public cost to devise some way to conceal the facts, it could not have accomplished it better than it has been accomplished by taking paragraph 127 conjointly with the amended section 2510, as found on page 195 of the printed bill.

I have heard some criticisms made within the past few days and I have read some criticisms in the newspapers about the dilatoriness of Senators upon this side of the Chamber, and their manifest indifference to everything that was being done and allowing the other side of the Chamber to proceed with the consideration of this bill without offering even a protest against the extravagant duties levied here, which are prohibitory and under which great trusts and combinations may be formed. Now, I wish to call the attention of that side of the Chamber and of the whole country to this fact: When the House bill was referred to the Finance Committee, a subcommittee was appointed, of which I was not a member, which proceeded to take testimony and formulate a tariff bill. They formulated a bill which, so far as I am concerned, I never saw until on one occasion I was invited to attend a meeting of the whole committee and hear it read. It occupied a single hour or more in its reading. I know nothing of what it contained except by a cursory examination. That bill was reported to the Senate. A few days after the report was made the Senate adjourned and we went home to enter into a political campaign. Speaking for myself I have had no opportunity since to examine the bill until we were forced to meet it on the first day of the present session and the Senators on the other side continue to force it upon us.

Therefore it is that if opposition has not been made to this legislation it simply arises, I think, from the fact that the Senators who composed the subcommittee on this side of the Chamber, and others of us in whose hands is lodged the responsibility to detect its errors and its faults, and I may say further its misfortunes—because I do not think there ever could be such a misfortune inflicted upon the people of this country as to have this tariff bill placed upon the statute-books of the country as a rule and guide for governing taxation, and in my opinion it would bankrupt the whole country in less than five years—have not yet had a full opportunity to scan and consider the details of this measure.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me, in connection with the suggestion he has just made, I desire to state once again a fact which I have stated once or twice on this floor before, that the Democratic members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance knew no more of the provisions of the substitute reported by that committee than did the Senator from New Jersey or any other Senator. The Democratic members of the subcommittee were called at the same time the Senator from New Jersey was called to a meeting of the full committee, and then for the first time the Democratic members of the subcommittee ascertained the provisions of the substitute reported by that committee.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That is as I supposed, and that I understood not only from the Senator from Tennessee, but from the Senator from North Carolina. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was absent and ill, and therefore he had no opportunity whatever to familiarize himself with the measure.

Mr. President, as we proceed with the consideration of this bill we perceive certain things are being done here, not in an open, bold way, as they ought to have been done, but we find lodged in one section of the bill something which is concealed in another part. I suppose, sir, it would do no good to ask that the consideration of this whole matter be postponed until after the holidays, in order that some of us might have an opportunity to study it, which we have not had up to this time. In order to bring the matter before the Senate, I will move now that the consideration of the bill be postponed until after the holiday recess, to be taken up the first day after the recess.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, a single word as to the last statement made by the Senator from New Jersey.

Prior to the adjournment of the Senate before the recess the Senator from Missouri whom I now see in front of me [Mr. COCKRELL] and several other Senators on that side of the Chamber charged the Committee on Finance with unduly delaying their report upon the bill which came to us from the House of Representatives, stating in the course of their charge that we had taken a longer time to consider the bill in the committee than had ever been taken before, or for a great many years, in the consideration of a tariff bill.

The measure which is now under consideration is a new bill, an entire revenue measure, affecting every item of the customs revenue and a number of items of the internal revenue. The original bill was before the Committee on Finance sixty days from the time it passed the House of Representatives until it was reported by the subcommittee to the full committee. It was reported to the full committee on the 25th of September, nearly three months ago, and if it was a dereliction of duty on the part of the members of the subcommittee that they took sixty days to prepare this measure and present it, what have those gentlemen to say if they are not able to understand it now after nearly three months have elapsed from the time when it was first brought to their attention?

As to the other point made by the Senator from New Jersey, I confess it seems to me a little misty, but as near as I could understand his idea it was that while section 2510 proposes to remit the duties upon certain kinds of iron and steel used in the construction of ships, the paragraph now under consideration proposes to assess a duty upon all iron and steel used in the construction of ships, and this provision would render the other provision nugatory. Was that what the Senator from New Jersey meant to say?

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from New Jersey meant this, that when the question was stated the Senator from Rhode Island rose in his seat and called attention to the fact that that exemption was made in a certain section of the bill, but the Senator from Rhode Island was very careful not to state also to the Senate, as I claim it was his duty to do, exactly the modification the committee made in that exemption, that they had exempted 99.99 per cent. of everything that the present law contains. I say that it was the duty of the Senator from Rhode Island, when he rose to point out to this side of the Chamber that the exemption still continued, to tell us exactly what they had done.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from New Jersey shows as little knowledge in regard to the statement which he has made with regard to this item in the bill as he has shown as to all the other features which he has discussed. Instead of restricting the number of articles of iron and steel that can be used in the manufacture of ships, in section 2510, free of duty, we have greatly enlarged it by the provisions of this bill. We have inserted plates and angles and bars, instead of restricting it. So if the bill becomes a law a very greatly increased number of articles of iron and steel can be used free of duty in the construction of ships for the foreign trade, and for the trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports of the United States. Paragraph 127 does not apply so far as the assessing of duty upon iron and steel used in such ships is concerned. For iron and steel used in the construction of ships for the foreign trade, and for the domestic trade between the Atlantic and Pacific ports, section 2510 proposes a remission of duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain the motion made by the Senator from New Jersey as submitted.

Mr. COCKRELL (to Mr. MCPHERSON). Fix a specific day.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I then move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the 10th day of January next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the 10th day of January next. Is the Senate ready for the question? [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Jersey whether he does not apprehend that the condition of the surplus is such as to bring peril upon the country and make it necessary for us at the earliest possible moment to remedy that evil?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I did not understand the Senator; I was otherwise engaged.

Mr. DAWES. I was inquiring of the Senator whether he did not have some apprehension that disaster was coming upon the business interests of this country because of our long neglect of remedies for the surplus accumulating in the Treasury, and whether we ought not to have addressed ourselves to this early and constantly and without interruption? Is it not a condition and not a theory that confronts us?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will say to the Senator from Massachusetts that his question is hardly worth an answer except in this form: I make the motion in the interest of enabling that side of the Chamber to hasten the consideration of their bill. I think we shall progress much faster by giving the time from now until the 10th of January, particularly to those of us on this side of the Chamber who claim not to be conversant with the details of the bill as much as we ought to give it intelligent consideration. I think it will hasten its consideration in the Senate.

Mr. DAWES. It is for purposes of education, is it?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It is for purposes of education. It has been an educational campaign all the way through, and it seems you are still ignorant.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest that the Senator accompany it with a provision for commentators and teachers.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise for the purpose of asking my friend from New Jersey to withdraw his motion to postpone the consideration of the bill, for the present at least. It is a motion that he can make subsequently if he should choose to do so.

Mr. MCPHERSON. At the request of the Senator from Tennessee, I ask the privilege of withdrawing my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn. The reading will proceed.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Line 437, paragraph 128, reads:

Axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks, or forgings for axles, whether of iron or steel, without reference to the stage or state of manufacture, 2 cents per pound.

I move to strike out "2 cents per pound" and insert "1½ cents per pound."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 439 it is proposed to strike out the word "two" and insert "one and one-half;" so as to read:

128. Axles, parts thereof, axle bars, axle blanks, or forgings for axles, whether of iron or steel, without reference to the stage or state of manufacture, 1½ cents per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. VEST (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH]. He is not in the Chamber, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. COLQUITT. I am paired generally with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but my pair having been transferred to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT], I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DAVIS. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. CAMERON. I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Colquitt,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Berry,	Eustis,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Faulkner,	Pasco,	Voorhees,
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Reagan,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—26.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hiscock,	Palmer,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Platt,

NOT VOTING—28.

Beck,	Daniel,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Edmund,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	George,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Teller,
Cameron,	Hale,	Pugh,	Vest,
Chace,	Hampton,	Quay,	Walthall.

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The CHIEF CLERK. Paragraph 131——

Mr. VEST. Has there been any vote by yeas and nays or otherwise upon paragraph 130?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No vote has been taken upon paragraph 130.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion to amend that paragraph was withdrawn to enable the Senator from New Jersey to offer some amendments to previous parts of the bill, I will state to the Senator from Missouri, intended to be renewed when that paragraph is reached.

Mr. VEST. Paragraph 130 is in regard to the tariff duty upon beams, girders, etc.

Mr. HARRIS. Has that clause been reached in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I renew my amendment. I moved the other day to reduce the rate to six-tenths of a cent per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been reached, unless the Senator from New Jersey desires to propose an amendment to paragraph 129.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will offer no amendment to paragraph 129.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, having been temporarily withdrawn, will now be submitted. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 446 and 447 it is proposed to strike out "one and one-tenth cents" and to insert "six-tenths of 1 cent;" so as to read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT, columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. VEST. The average rate of duty on these articles under the existing law is 102.75 per cent. The average rate of duty proposed by the House bill is 49.32 per cent. The rate of duty proposed by the Senate substitute is equivalent to either an ad valorem rate of 90.42 per cent. or of 91.66 per cent. The experts differ as to the amount, but it is either the one or the other, and for the purposes of my few remarks I am willing to accept either as the proper ad valorem duty.

The Senator from Rhode Island declared upon Thursday last that this was a crucial point in this bill. He said that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee prevailed it would strike down the whole tariff schedule as to metals, and would necessitate the bill being sent back to the Committee on Finance. For one, sir, utterly opposed to the present tariff, utterly opposed to anything else than a tariff for revenue with the equitable and fair arrangement of such protection as is necessary under such a tariff, I accept the issue tendered by the Senator from Rhode Island. There is no better point in this bill upon which we can test the directly antagonistic systems and determine whether the principles enunciated by the Committee on Finance and by the Republican party are to prevail as to this entire legislation.

I repeat deliberately, there is no point in this bill upon which the two parties can join battle more fairly, more deliberately, and more fully than upon this item. Steel beams enter into the construction of the larger buildings in our towns and cities. Year by year their consumption is increasing, because the danger from fire is avoided, because the decay of wood-work is avoided, not only in the construction of the larger buildings of the country but in the construction of bridges built for railways and other traffic.

What is the taxation upon this most important article of production in the United States? In 1887, when there was one of the periodic and constantly recurring conflicts between labor and capital in this country, when that exemplar of the protective system who has been so often alluded to upon this floor, Mr. Carnegie, with a mixed nationality in both Scotland and the United States, had a difficulty with his workmen in regard to their wages, they entered into an arbitration to determine what would be a just and equitable basis between the employer and the employed in the manufacture of steel rails and of steel beams. Finally, after the usual amount of aggression upon one side and defense upon the other, and vice versa, an article of agreement was entered into between the Knights of Labor representing Mr. Carnegie's employés and himself and his associates that the price of labor in turning pig-iron into steel rails at the Edgar Thomson Works, of which Mr. Carnegie is the principal, amounted to $4.09 on the ton. If it is necessary I can produce that agreement in the Senate.

I anticipate the reply to my assertion as to that agreement, for it was made here in October by the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Iowa; and it was to the effect that whilst the labor of turning a ton of pig-iron into steel rails was $4.09, that figure ignored entirely the cost of the labor, because we should, to use the language of the Senator from Rhode Island, go back to the mine and take the cost of the iron as it came from the earth and the cost afterwards of changing it into pig-iron, so that the cost of changing a ton of pig-iron into steel rails, although it might be $4.09 a ton, as I have stated, did not at all represent the amount of the cost of labor in the transaction.

It seems to me, with the greatest respect to the Senators from Iowa and Rhode Island, that the proposition is utterly absurd and without the shadow of logical foundation. The pig-iron came to the manufacturer of steel rails a finished product. The cost of the pig-iron had paid all the antecedent cost of manufacture, and it would be just as forcible as an argument to say that if the tailor who makes my coat is to be protected we are not to take as a basis of calculation the cost of the cloth as it comes to the tailor shop, but we are to go back to the wool of the sheep, to the cost of the shearing, to the cost of the washing, to the cost of the carding, and all this is to be added to the cost of the cloth, although the tailor has already paid it.

Four dollars and nine cents, by every rule of arithmetic and logic, was the cost of labor in turning a ton of pig-iron into a ton of steel rails in the Edgar Thomson Steel Works in 1887, as agreed upon by employer and employed. It was further agreed between the Knights of Labor and Mr. Carnegie that the labor cost of steel beams was 30 per cent. more than that of steel rails. That would make on a ton $1.23, which added to $4.09 would make $5.32 as the cost of labor in making a ton of steel beams. The cost of putting down a ton of steel beams in the United States of foreign make was, in 1887, $26.88, exclusive of the tariff duty.

If I understood the position of the Republican party in the late canvass, reiterated in every Republican paper and by every Republican speaker, it was to the effect that the tariff imposed for the protection of American labor was intended as an equivalent for the difference between the cost of labor abroad and the cost of labor in the United States and a fair profit to the employer. Everywhere our Republican friends denied most emphatically the charge that they intended to put money into the pockets of the capitalists and manufacturers, and their only cry was protection to American labor and the building up of American industries.

The cost of labor in steel beams is, as I have said, $4.09, with 30 per cent. added, or $5.33 per ton. If that amount be doubled to cover the difference between the cost of labor in making a ton of steel beams in this country and in England, it would make in round numbers a protective tax, or an equivalent to make up the difference between the price of labor in this country and abroad of $11. Make it $12, or even make it $15, and then put on a fair profit of $5 a ton to the capitalist, or $10 a ton, and what would be the result? Would it be anything like the result that we reach now from the tariff taxation proposed in the Senate substitute or in the existing law?

The selling price in the United States in 1887 was 3.3 cents per pound, making $66 to the ton, when it did not cost more than $28.02. The production of the Carnegie works for 1887 was in steel beams 30,000 tons, and at the estimate which I have put of $5 profit per ton Mr. Carnegie and his associates pocketed $1,000,000 clear annual profit upon this item of their production alone.

The Senator from Rhode Island admits that there is a trust in regard to steel beams, but he says it will be discontinued if we keep this enormous tariff tax upon the statute-book, and that domestic competition will at last destroy the trust. I think I have heard the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] say that the remedy for a trust was to decrease the tariff tax, but here we have a decrease from the existing tariff of only the difference between 102.75 per cent. and 91 per cent., and an increase from 49.62 per cent., under the Mills bill, to 91.66 per cent. under the Senate substitute.

Mr. President, this trust is hoary with age. For sixteen years it has existed in the United States. How much longer will it exist? One million of dollars clear profit annually upon this article of steel beams to one company alone gives no assurance that the trust yielding such profits will be abandoned.

There is no point in this bill at which the two parties can meet face to face more fairly than upon this item of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I wish now once for all to state the grounds of my several votes on the details of this measure, because I take it that it is neither the pleasure of the Senate nor of public interest for us to waste time in repeating over and over again the same arguments upon different clauses of the bill.

Undoubtedly the Mills bill, as it is called, represents the general sentiment of the Democratic party. That bill was passed after full debate in the House of Representatives by nearly the aggregate vote of the Democratic party, and it receives the approval of the great body of Democrats in the Senate. The bill that is now upon our table, called the Senate bill, has also been approved by Republican Senators who have had the opportunity to investigate it, to examine it in all its details. It has met their approval and has been carried by them before the people of the United States, and been there debated, advocated, and supported.

There are some fundamental differences between the two bills, without looking into the details. The one looks to a tariff for revenue only; the other looks to a tariff for protection as well as for revenue. What the precise definition of a tariff for revenue only is I shall not undertake to give. I shall allow gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber to do that themselves. We know what a tariff for protection means from our standpoint at least. It is a tariff the rates of which are so fixed as not to prohibit importations, but to secure a sufficient revenue from importations and also by every provision of it to extend protection, encouragement, and hope, and to invite free competition among American producers. That is our idea of a protective tariff. This bill we claim represents and embodies a protective tariff as distinguished from a purely revenue tariff.

Take up the schedule of metals alone as a sample of the whole. What are the provisions of this schedule? On the whole there is a reduction of about 10 per cent. of the present duties. On this particular item of beams, girders, and other structural forms for building purposes there is a reduction of more than 10 per cent.; it is about 12 per cent. It is from 1¼ cents a pound down to 1.1 cents a pound, or fifteen hundredths.

Therefore it is a reduction of about 12½ per cent. So it is on most of the leading items of the schedule.

But there are some peculiar features of this particular clause which ought to excite the attention of the Senator from Missouri. It necessarily embraces a large variety of articles for building bridges, mills, ships, and buildings of all kinds, the use of which is largely increasing. It therefore embraces a great variety of articles of very different values. Some of these beams would be worth $70 or $100 a ton in our market; some of them probably could be made in this country for $40 or $50 a ton, and perhaps less.

If it were possible to classify these articles so as to make an ad valorem rate depending upon the value of each article, that would be more just, but it is impossible to do that. The experience of the Government of the United States with ad valorem duties, especially on articles of varying value, is not satisfactory. Evidence has been produced before the Senate by a committee of the Senate to show that in every case the ad valorem duties are evaded and avoided. Therefore the committees, both of the House and the Senate, have felt it to be their duty to establish specific duties on the metal schedule almost all through. The Mills bill has specific duties also. On the article in this particular paragraph it imposes six-tenths of a cent a pound. The Senate committee propose eleven-tenths of a cent a pound, a difference in degree, but it must be remembered that each propose a specific duty on a great variety of articles of very different cost and value, but all alike intended for a common use in the structure of buildings.

The ordinary heavy beams that are made for house-building and bridge-building are not very expensive. Hitherto they have been only made by four or five manufacturers, but the number of manufacturers is constantly increasing. Some of these articles do not cost so much per pound as other forms of iron, perhaps not so much as even the common bar-iron. Why? Because in some cases the molten metal is transferred directly from the furnace to a convertor, and there, by the Bessemer process, is converted into steel, and then is put into the form of ingots or blooms, or other large form of iron, and either rolled into the form of beams, girders, or the like, or, where special forms are required, the molten metal, being converted into steel, is put into molds of a particular form or pattern. All this involves great expense, first, in the costly plant necessary for such heavy masses, and secondly, in preparing the form or patterns. But this is not all. After these special forms have been cast they then must be shaved or planed by great, mammoth machines, by which the chip is taken off the iron or steel as easily but not so rapidly as the shaving is taken off the wood. Then they must be bored or punched. In some cases, for certain purposes, they must have steel caps and a steel plate that is put over them of a different kind and of finer material, so that in some cases these forms, especially in ship-building, will cost two or three times as much as the ordinary beam, etc.

Therefore, you have as to these articles to prescribe a rate of taxation that will not only protect the manufacturer of the beam of the ordinary forms needed for house-building, but also all those special shapes designed for ship-building or for bridge-building, or for various forms of work.

The Senator from Missouri has fallen into a trouble which sometimes occurs. He assumes that the statement of the average value of imported iron of this form is a test to show what ought to be the proper duty on all the class of articles embraced here. That is not correct, and these two items taken together will show that it is not correct. For instance, the one hundred and twenty-ninth paragraph says:

Blacksmiths' hammers and sledges, track tools, wedges, and crowbars, whether of iron or steel, 2½ cents per pound.

That is a pretty high rate of duty. Under that rate of duty there have been but very few articles brought into this country, but those articles were of the value of 15.8 cents per pound. They were probably special tools of a particular kind for a particular trade that have not been made here. They were worth 15.8 cents a pound, and they were brought in from abroad.

As there were but very few of those articles, and only of the very highest cost, brought in, when you come to estimate the unit of value, or what is called the equivalent ad valorem duty, you find that on that article the present rate of duty is only 15.81 per cent. ad valorem, which is a very low rate of duty. The reason is that the American producer already occupies the field, commands the markets, and makes all the blacksmiths' hammers and sledges made in this country, and thousands of them are exported, because we have, by long experience, so demonstrated our ability in this particular class of industry that we export them, and very few are imported. Therefore the statement that the duty is only equivalent to 15.81 per cent. ad valorem is erroneous.

So it is with the next item. Under the existing law the duty is 1¼ cents a pound on the forms of beams, girders, joists, angles, etc. There are imported only the cheaper qualities of these articles, the very cheapest, those that will probably be made by the single continuous process of converting pig-iron into steel through the converter and then into the ingot. In such cases the articles imported from abroad are only of the very cheapest kind, and it would appear the duty was very high, but as the rate of duty applies not only to the cheapest articles, but also to the most expensive, so as upon the general average to secure protection to all branches of this varying valued kind of goods, the ad valorem rate, as a matter of course, would appear to be erroneous when based only on the cheaper forms.

Therefore when the Senator says that the present duty is 102 per cent. he falls into an error, because that is based upon the importation of the cheaper grades of these articles, the only kind that are imported now from Europe, where they are sometimes the refuse of iron, sometimes defective iron which is passed through their great machine-shops into the forms of beams, girders, etc., and where the defects of the iron from the very size of the article produced are disguised.

So these tables, though perfectly correct in point of fact, showing the value of articles imported in both cases, yet are erroneous and misleading. The average duty on these articles, beams and structural articles made for building purposes, is really much less than 102 per cent.; it is much less than 90 per cent., and probaby it is not over 50 or 60 per cent. based on real average values, which is about the average of the iron schedule.

So with the article of hammers; instead of being 15 per cent., as laid down by these tables, it is actually probably 50 or 60 per cent., and these figures though not intended to mislead, do mislead.

Now, take this paragraph, and it probably is as good an illustration of the difficulty of fixing rates of duty on these articles of iron as any other. Although these articles vary immensely in value, in size, in shape and form, they must be embraced in one list. You can not undertake to define and separate all the various articles and put a specific rate of duty on each one of them, because sometimes even the ordinary girders may be for a particular use, of refined steel; they may require the strongest tensile power, or they may be of the rudest form and material, yet they must be admitted at the same rate when brought to our custom-house. We can not undertake to fix a different rate of duty upon the same article, one made with the very strongest and finest steel, of strength and power, the other by its bulk and metal made only to uphold weight. You can not provide different rates of duty to meet these various contingencies; you must take a general rate.

Here in this schedule the committee recommend eight-tenths of a cent a pound on bar-iron, nine-tenths of a cent a pound on other forms of iron or steel, and 1 cent a pound on still different iron, and they recommend on these structural forms 1.1 cents. Perhaps they may be a little too high on some, but certainly not too high on forms of these same articles. They therefore took what they regarded to be an average rate which would give protection to the manufacturer of all grades of these articles. If they put this article down so low as bar-iron, for instance, then no article of higher class and higher cost put into structural form for ship-building would be manufactured in this country, but it would be all imported from abroad.

The rate is therefore fixed not upon the cheapest articles, such as we can manufacture easily in this country, but it is fixed upon the average or perhaps the superior article of these forms of iron; and it must be so necessarily.

But the Senator says that under the present law at 1¼ cents a pound there has been a monopoly, and Mr. Carnegie has had that monopoly. Mr. Carnegie seems to be the man who is drawn in here to represent monopolies. I do not know anything about that; it may be so; but there is this about him: Mr. Carnegie was the first man in this country who applied the continuous process in the manufacture of steel. He may have had the benefit of inventions; probably he had patents and protected himself in various ways. He had an immense establishment with great capital there in Pittsburgh, and he took the ordinary iron ore, put it into a furnace, smelted it, drew it from that furnace, transferred it at once to a convertor, and then by this new process converted it into steel, and then rolled it into these great beams, etc. He may have been protected by patents.

I desire to break down all monopolies. I desire to take from him every advantage that he possesses not secured to him by law. We can not take away from him his patents. So far as they protect him he must enjoy them. We have no more right to take his property in a patent than we have a right to take your homesteads or your farms. We can wait until the time expires, and the time has expired, as we are informed, in nearly all these patents; and now there is a sharp and growing competition in the production of all these forms of valuable and useful materials. These articles are increasing tenfold, perhaps more than any other article on the tariff list, in use and value.

They are used now for ordinary buildings, so that private families wishing to protect themselves from fire use these steel beams; and so far as the cheaper forms of steel beams are concerned they do not cost probably more than the ordinary forms of bar-iron. When you take other forms of iron, other forms of structural work, they do cost a great deal more. As you know, all this expensive work of planing, preparing, and fitting has to go through a great machine-shop. It has to be put under the power of great machines. The man or men who first applies this power, or invents new devices for cheapening cost or saving labor is apt to make money. When time makes invention the common property competition comes in and reduces prices. You have got to make your law to encourage all kinds of industry, leaving the disposition of the product and its division among its producers to the law of demand and competition.

The people of this country are beginning to adapt their industries to that necessity, and now in Cleveland, in Chicago, instead of six or eight establishments, as was stated here in the debate last Thurday, there are about twenty of these establishments. They are being started in different places, and as the demand for these articles increases in this country, they will be made. This duty is only intended to protect them in the outset. The time is not far distant when all these structural forms, multiplied to an amazing extent, will be used for all the ordinary purposes of building, not only in the ordinary buildings in the country, but in every other form of construction.

As wood decays, is burned up and is destroyed and rises in price, iron is becoming cheaper and cheaper, and iron therefore is becoming the common building article used in the country. If you will only give the American manufacturer a chance, an inducement to enter with large capital in large establishments for the manufacture of these structural works, you will reduce the price.

That is about all I have to say. The Committee on Finance, through its subcommittee, have carefully analyzed all these different forms and articles made of metal. They have endeavored to classify them. They have heard the men who are interested in making them; they have heard the men interested in using them. They could have no motive in the world to favor Mr. Carnegie or anybody else.

The object is to fix such rates as will induce the manufacture of these things. This rate, in my judgment, is probably a little higher than the average, and a little more perhaps than I would be willing to make it. Yet after all it is better to take the judgment of this committee, given when they are considering and equalizing and molding these various grades so as to secure equal and exact justice among the different producers of this country—it is far better for us to vote to sustain them in their classification of these rates than blindly, upon haphazard debate here in the Senate, without the information they possess, undertake to change or modify them to conform to the particular ideas expressed by a single Senator here, without probably as much information as they had about it.

Mr. CULLOM. And then confuse the whole schedule.

Mr. SHERMAN. And then confuse the whole schedule. If you reduce these structural works below a rate that is fair and just, then the manufacturers would only go into those branches of the iron trade that are profitable, where they can compete with England and Belgium.

I will say here, too, that it is not England; it is Belgium. Belgium is now supplying structural forms to Great Britain, and it has been a matter of complaint in England that the Belgians have superseded them in this important branch of the iron industry.

Now, we desire to compete with them, and we will do so if you give inducements to our home producers, the manufacturers at our large cities, in St. Louis, Chicago, and the West, especially where they are able to build and mold these great structural forms. Pittsburgh is now the center, because they have had many advantages. It must be remembered, too, that as the foundation of the large fortune Mr. Carnegie has probably made—I do not know anything about it, but taking the statement as true—he has reaped greatly the advantage of natural gas. He has had the most subtle fluid, the most powerful genius that has ever yet been evoked by man, to heat his fires. He has by ingenious mechanism transferred the raw iron ore laid in his blocks into every form of structural device, having capital enough to make it. We do not wish to build him up, but we wish to induce others to engage in competition with him.

The Senator from Missouri says something about trusts. I believe that the form of contracts between corporations commonly known as trusts is one of the most dangerous and subtle inventions of man to cheat, or rather to take advantage of the wants of the people of this country. I am, therefore, in favor of breaking up these trusts. I believe that agreements between corporations to raise the price of any article, whether it is whisky or sugar or anything else, and especially to increase the cost of any of the necessaries of life, is wrong, contrary to the spirit of the common law of England, and against public policy.

I will do anything to unite with others in striking down these trusts, but the best way to do it is by competition, by inviting competition, for nothing is so surely a destruction of a trust as free and open competition. Where a few manufacturers can combine together and undertake to regulate the prices and advance them beyond a reasonable rate, then I say let others have all chance to compete, and have a temptation and the promise of support in our law that will induce them to build works to compete, and so break down these trusts.

If that is not sufficient, I am willing also to go to the extent of passing a law that will prevent and punish as a crime these trusts to raise the cost of the necessary wants of life. That is all I have to say about it.

Senators may be surprised that on this side of the Chamber we have followed in almost every case the recommendation of the committee, but I submit to you whether it is not wiser for us to take the judgment of the committee on matters of detail—not of principle, but on matters of detail as to whether this rate should be lowered and that should be increased—rather than to take any information that we can gather here in the Senate of the United States.

I believe that the issue between the two parties has been fairly made. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], with a sagacity that has always marked him since I have known him in public life, struck the nail on the head when he moved to lay this bill on the table. The majority of the Senate refused to lay it on the table. That is an expression of its opinion that it is a better bill than the Mills bill, and the principle of this bill having been determined, it is far better for us to leave the details to the committee that framed it.

If it should appear that there is a plain, palpable error in the classifications we ought to correct it, and if we can not do it in that way we ought to recommit the bill until they will report such schedules as will suit the common judgment of the Senate. But the Senate having decided that they were satisfied with the general principles of the bill as against the Mills bill, our Democratic friends ought to be satisfied. Let them abide the judgment of the people upon this question, which so far as it can be expressed upon such a question has been expressed in favor of the system of protection to American industries. That system is more beneficial in all its results to the people of the South, represented so largely by the Senators on the other side, than to any other portion of our country.

Give to Birmingham, Ala., the same opportunity to make these structural forms. I know from my observation that they have there in Alabama better facilities for this kind of work than in almost any other place, because they have the raw material for the manufacture of iron nearer at hand than I have ever seen anywhere else. They have the coal near by, the iron ore near by, and the limestone near by, and they have now, I am told, more furnace power in Birmingham or in the neighborhood round about in North Alabama than they have at Pittsburgh. They can make these forms there, and the people who go down there to help them develop their country can show them how to make them, and let them undersell the Pittsburgh people or any other. That is the only way to bring down the price of these articles.

To lower the rate of duty, in my judgment, would only be to invite increased importation, for with the rate of duty at 1¼ cents a pound there has been imported goods to the value of $168,000; and a great many more of this kind of goods will be imported if you should reduce the duty one-half. The result would be that we would be flooded by this form of production from both England and Belgium, and there would be no temptation, no inducement for our people to embark in this enterprise.

I, therefore, shall vote to sustain the committee, although if I had been drawing the bill myself, as I have said, I think probably 1 cent a pound would be nearer the general average.

Mr. VANCE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn. ["No!" "No!"]

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] spoke to me a while ago respecting an early adjournment, stating there were some reasons why an early adjournment was required to-day. For myself I consent to that adjournment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the question be taken without the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 11, 1888, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 10, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. HAYES, of Iowa.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Mississippi.
Mr. MORSE, of Massachusetts.
Mr. COLLINS, of Massachusetts.
Mr. CARLTON, of Georgia.
Mr. SYMES, of Colorado.
Mr. CULBERSON, of Texas.
Mr. GREENMAN, of New York.
Mr. MCSHANE, of Nebraska.
Mr. LYMAN, of Iowa.
Mr. NORWOOD, of Georgia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. O'FERRALL, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. WHITTHORNE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (S. 3462) granting a pension to John Watson was improperly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It should go to the Committee on Pensions; and if there be no objection the proper order will be made in regard to it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PURCHASES OF REAL ESTATE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a resolution at this time for present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is stated in certain newspapers that the commissioners of the District of Columbia have, in recent purchases of real estate within and for the use of the District of Columbia, paid to and through certain agents appointed or employed by them prices above that asked or received by the vendors or owners of such property, contrary to law: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a special committee of five members to investigate the matter and report to the House in writing at any time by bill or otherwise; and that said committee be furnished a stenographer by assignment by the Speaker from the roll of stenographers now in the employ of the House; and that they be authorized to employ a clerk at a compensation of $6 a day, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House; and that said committee be authorized to sit during the sessions of the House, and authorized to administer oaths, and send for persons and papers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WILKINS. That had better go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask consent to make a brief statement in this respect. I wish to state that a resolution covering a part of this ground has been heretofore introduced and referred to the Committee on Rules, and I trust that the Committee on Rules as well as the other members of the House will understand, in view of the difficulties that that committee has heretofore had in procuring the attendance of a quorum and the combination of other circumstances preventing the consideration of such resolutions at the last session and at this session as well, that there is no intention on my part, nor have I any such desire, to reflect in any degree upon that committee. I appreciate the difficulties that have surrounded them. I apprehend that the members will readily understand also that in a case like this expedition should be had in the matter of the investigation, if any is to take place at all. This is the short session of Congress, and this investigation would necessarily cover a period of several days. Afterwards, if in the course of the investigation anything is found incorrect in the matter alleged in the resolution regarding these purchases, it would be necessary perhaps for the House to take some other proceedings covering the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio has objected.

Mr. WILKINS. Yes, sir; let it go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BREWER. I would suggest that this resolution be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michican moves its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. TAULBEE. One word. I think the Committee on Rules has jurisdiction of such questions as this; but so far as I am individually concerned, if there is any reason whatever why the resolution should go to the District Committee, where it does not belong, rather than to the Committee on Rules, where it does belong, I shall not even ask a vote upon it. I have no objection whatever to it going to any committee that will give it fair and speedy consideration.

The question being taken, the motion of Mr. BREWER was agreed to; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the States and Territories for the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions.

PAY, ETC., GOVERNMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. WHEELER submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Thursday, December 13, Saturday, December 15, and should two days be insufficient for the disposal of the bills, Tuesday, December 18, be, and are hereby, set apart for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8189) "to determine the final balances of accounts due to and from the United States Government, and for other purposes;" the bill (H. R. 164) "for the appointment of a joint committee of both Houses of Congress to inquire into existing irregularities, if any, in the compensation of the employés of the Executive Departments and bureaus of the Government;" the bill (H. R. 9518) "providing for leave of absence of officers and employés in the customs service of the Government who receive per diem compensation;" the bill H. R. 9767, "A bill authorizing the Secretary of War to appoint a board of engineers to investigate certain claims for damages done to planted oysters in Raritan Bay in 1881;" the bill (H. R. 11392) "to authorize and direct the Secretary of War to establish signal stations on the West India Islands;" the bill (H. R. 6127) "to determine and increase the pay of watchmen in the Treasury Department," and bill (H. R. 11530) "to authorize the establishment of camps for yellow-fever refugees, and for other purposes."

PAY OF MARSHALS AND DEPUTY MARSHALS.

Mr. ROGERS submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the House of Representatives whether in his opinion there will result any embarrassment or delay in the administration of the law in the courts of the United States because of the following proviso attached to the appropriation for the payment of the fees and expenses of United States marshals and deputies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, namely:

"Provided, That not exceeding $300,000 of this appropriation may be advanced to marshals, to be accounted for in the usual way, the residue to remain in the Treasury, to be used, if at all, only in the payment of the accounts of marshals in the manner provided in section 856 of the Revised Statutes."

PORT OF DELIVERY AT LOS ANGELES, CAL.

Mr. VANDEVER introduced a bill (H. R. 11672) to establish a port of delivery at Los Angeles, Cal.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PORT OF ENTRY AT SANTA BARBARA, CAL.

Mr. VANDEVER also introduced a bill (H. R. 11673) to establish a port of entry at Santa Barbara, State of California; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

IRRIGATION.

Mr. VANDEVER also introduced a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for report of Maj. A. M. Miller, United States Army, on irrigation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIGHT-HOUSES AND FOG-SIGNAL STATIONS ON PACIFIC COAST.

Mr. MORROW introduced a bill (H. R. 11674) to establish certain light-house and fog-signal stations on the Pacific coast; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. LAWLER introduced a bill (H. R. 11675) granting pensions to soldiers and sailors and widows of soldiers and sailors over sixty years of age; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

At the request of Mr. LAWLER, the bill was read at length for information.

EXPENDITURES IN PRESIDENTIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN submitted a resolution directing an inquiry into allegations that large sums of money have been voluntarily contributed and expended in various ways for the purpose of influencing and controlling Presidential and Congressional elections, to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for investigation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TURNER, of Georgia). The Chair would state to the gentleman from Indiana that that motion is not in order upon this call.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withhold it.

CRIMES AGAINST THE ELECTIVE FRANCHISE.

Mr. HOWARD introduced a bill (H. R. 11676) punishing crimes against the elective franchise; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF ACT TO REGULATE COMMERCE.

Mr. MORSE introduced a bill (H. R. 11677) to repeal an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts in addition thereto or amendatory thereof; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSES AND FOG-SIGNALS ON THE LAKES.

Mr. CHIPMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 11678) providing for the erection of sundry light-house and fog-signals in Lakes Erie, Huron, Michigan, and Superior; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE DETROIT RIVER.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 11679) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a high railroad bridge across the Detroit River, at Detroit, in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ARMORED CRUISER.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 11680) providing for an armored cruiser; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

FORTIFICATIONS AT NEW YORK, BOSTON, AND OTHER PORTS.

Mr. CHIPMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 11681) authorizing the construction of fortifications for New York, Boston, Charleston, S. C., San Francisco, and other ports, and for acquiring plans, patents, machinery, and electrical apparatus by purchase, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORY OF NORTH DAKOTA.

Mr. MACDONALD introduced a bill (H. R. 11682) to provide for a constitutional convention in the Territory of North Dakota; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-SHIP AND FOG-SIGNAL AT SANDY HOOK.

Mr. CLARDY introduced a bill (H. R. 11683) for the establishment of a light-ship with a fog-signal at Sandy Hook, New York Harbor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REVIVING GRADE OF LIEUTENANT-GENERAL OF THE ARMY.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL introduced a bill (H. R. 11684) reviving the grade of lieutenant-general in the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

IMPORTATION OF CONTRACT LABOR.

Mr. COX introduced a bill (H. R. 11685) to amend chapter 184 of the laws of 1885, entitled "An act to prohibit the importation and migration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia," as the same was amended by chapter 22 of the laws of 1887, approved February 23, 1887; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Special Committee on the Investigation of Foreign Immigration, etc., and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS, ETC.

Mr. COWLES offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That Thursday, December 15, 1888, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for House bill 9908, being a bill relating to the compensation of United States district attorneys, marshals, deputy marshals, circuit and district court clerks and commissioners; this order to be a continuing order until the same be disposed of; not to interfere with prior special orders or general appropriation bills.

BUILDING REGULATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROMEIS (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 11686) relating to the building regulations of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ON YOUNG'S BAY, OREGON.

Mr. HERMANN introduced a bill (H. R. 11687) providing for the construction of a bridge on Young's Bay, in the State of Oregon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. OUTHWAITE offered a resolution providing for days for the consideration of House bill 8184, to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

TO MAKE COLUMBUS, OHIO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. OUTHWAITE also introduced a bill (H. R. 11688) to constitute Columbus, Ohio, a port of delivery, and to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to said port of Columbus; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REVOLUTIONARY DOCUMENTS.

Mr. KELLEY introduced joint resolution (H. Res. 237) providing for an appropriation for Revolutionary documents; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BUILDING FOR UNITED STATES GEOLOGICAL SURVEY.

Mr. SOWDEN introduced a bill (H. R. 11689) for the erection of a public building for the use and accommodation of the United States Geological Survey upon the Government reservation in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

CORN MILLS FOR CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. PATTON introduced a bill (H. R. 11690) to erect certain corn mills in the Indian Territory for the benefit of the Cherokee Indian Nation; or, in lieu thereof, to pay to them what such mills would cost; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHEROKEE INDIANS.

Mr. PATTON also introduced a bill (H. R. 11691) to reimburse certain Cherokee Indians for transporting themselves from North Carolina to the Indian Territory and subsisting themselves there for one year after their arrival; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 2166, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (H. R. 11692) amending section 2166 of the Revised Statutes, concerning the naturalization of aliens honorably discharged from the naval service; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 555, REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HEMPHILL introduced a bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, DOVER, TENN.

Mr. WASHINGTON introduced a bill (H. R. 11694) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Dover, Tenn.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EASTERN BRANCH.

Mr. LEE introduced a bill (H. R. 11695) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River from the foot of South Capitol street, in Washington, D. C.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE PROPOSED STATE OF IDAHO.

Mr. DUBOIS introduced a bill (H. R. 11696) to provide for the formation and admission into the Union of the State of Idaho, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular call of States and Territories being now concluded, the Chair will recognize for the introduction of bills and resolutions gentlemen who were not in their seats during that call.

ABANDONED HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, introduced a bill (H. R. 11697) to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

OMAHA, DODGE CITY AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas, also introduced a bill (H. R. 11698) to authorize the Omaha, Dodge City and Southern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS AND OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. MCADOO introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 238) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for uniformity as to the day for choosing Presidential electors, and forbidding the voting for any other officers save Representatives in Congress at said election; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ROAD THROUGH ARSENAL GROUNDS, AUGUSTA, ME.

Mr. MILLIKEN introduced a bill (H. R. 11699) authorizing the Secretary of War to continue the road through the United States arsenal grounds at Augusta, Me., and allow the same to be used by the public; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. CRISP introduced a resolution providing for the preparation, printing, and binding of the usual number of copies of the Digest of Election Cases of the Forty-eighth, Forty-ninth, and Fiftieth Congresses, etc.; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The call for the introduction of bills and resolutions is now concluded.

PURITY OF ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to present for consideration at this time the resolution which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is publicly charged in the public press and otherwise that in general elections of recent years, involving the election of President and Vice-President of the United States and members of Congress, large sums of money have been voluntarily contributed and expended in various ways for the purpose of influencing and controlling such elections; and

Whereas such contributions and expenditures tend to debase the elective franchise, corrupt the ballot-box, and impair the vigor and purity of our free institutions: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and are hereby, instructed to investigate the said charges and to inquire what legislation is necessary and proper to suppress such contributions and expenditures and to preserve and maintain the freedom and purity of the elective franchise, with authority to report at any time by bill or otherwise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. DINGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he will consent to modify his resolution by inserting after the words "investigate the said charges" the words "and also whether officials of the United States have made such contributions."

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, that is covered fully by the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Not specifically; and it is very important that such a clause be inserted, because the responsibility of officials of the United States making contributions to such funds is greater than that of the mere private citizen.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must insist that the resolution is broad enough to cover and does cover the matter mentioned by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Why not make the matter sure by inserting the words proposed?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order, having been demanded by several gentlemen, is equivalent to an objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand that the gentleman accepts my modification?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to it, but the regular order is called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Maine that objection having been made to the consideration of the resolution, the gentleman from Indiana now asks that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Is there objection?

Mr. WILKINS. I object to the modification.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am simply asking that the resolution be referred.

Mr. WILKINS. Then I have no objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Do I understand that the gentleman from Indiana accepts the modification?

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen have called the regular order. I have no objection myself to the modification, but ask for the reference as objection is made to present consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary? The Chair hears none; and it will be so referred.

ADMISSION OF A FOREIGN PUPIL TO MILITARY ACADEMY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 239) authorizing the Secretary of War to receive for instruction at the Military Academy, at West Point, Henry Lecomte, of Switzerland; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask, by unanimous consent—not having been in the House when my State was called—to introduce a bill for reference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman will send his bill to the Clerk's desk.

CHANGING NAME OF STREET.

Mr. HEARD introduced a bill (H. R. 11700) changing the name of Caroline street to that of Irving Place, in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

ADVANCE PAY FOR DECEMBER.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask by unanimous consent to introduce joint resolution (H. Res. 236) making provision as to the payment of the officers and employés of the two Houses for the month of December, 1888.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and they are hereby, authorized and instructed to pay the officers and employés of the Senate and House of Representatives their respective salaries for the month of December, 1888, on the 20th day of said month.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the usual resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration at this time of the resolution which has been read?

Mr. OATES. We have not been able to hear the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRANCH FOLDING-ROOM.

Mr. RICHARDSON submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to continue the lease of the house No. 225 Pennsylvania avenue, northwest, for a branch of the folding-room for one year from January 1, 1889, the expenses of the same to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

BUREAU OF HEALTH.

Mr. LAGAN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 11723) to create a bureau of health and to prevent the introduction and extension of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed, and also to be printed in the RECORD.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to create a bureau of health and to prevent the introduction and extension of contagious and infectious diseases in the United States.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be established in the Department of the Interior a bureau of health.

There shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a chief commissioner of health of the United States, who shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, organize and manage the bureau of health herein established, and may employ such assistants and clerks as may be necessary, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior shall provide suitable offices for the bureau of health. The chief commissioner of health of the United States shall be paid an annual salary of $5,000, and shall hold his office until he shall have attained the age of seventy years, unless sooner removed by the President.

SEC. 2. There shall be appointed by the President a health commission to be composed of twenty members, to be divided into six sections, as follows: Five commissioners for the (1) yellow-fever section; three commissioners for each of the following sections: (2) cholera section, 3; (3) typhoid-fever section, 3; (4) scarlet-fever section, 3; (5) small-pox section, 3; (6) diphtheria section, 3. The members of each section shall be experts in the disease to which their section is devoted. Each commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $1,200, and may reside at his usual residence except when called into active duty under the provisions of this act.

These several sections shall be charged with directing the investigation by the commissioner of health into the cause, origin, and mode of extension and measures to prevent the respective diseases to which they are named. Each section shall formulate methods and rules for the prevention of the respective diseases with which they are charged, to be submitted for the revision and approval of the whole health commission at its annual meeting hereinafter provided for

The health commission shall designate five of their number, three of whom shall constitute a quorum, to be known as "the quarantine commission." This quarantine commission shall examine into the methods of State and local quarantines at the various seaports of the United States and report to the health commission as to the efficacy or non-efficacy of the same. The quarantine commission shall also be charged with the duty of investigation into and recommendation to the health commission the best manner of equipments and methods of procedure for the various national quarantine stations which are now or may be hereafter constructed. Upon the report of the quarantine commission to the health commissioner that the quarantine service at a port or ports of the United States is inefficacious or negligent in its management, the health commissioner is empowered and commanded to direct the United States collector of customs of that port to refuse entry to any vessel or goods or persons from any place infected with any contagious or infectious disease into such port unless said vessel, goods, or persons shall have undergone the quarantine process prescribed at the national quarantine station or at that of some other port of the United States whose quarantine service has not been condemned by the quarantine commission.

SEC. 3. The entire health commission shall meet annually in Washington, D. C., in the month of April, on a day to be fixed by the chief commissioner of health of the United States, and at its session he shall preside; and at said annual session the health commission shall adopt plans for the prevention of the introduction into the United States of contagious and epidemic diseases, and the prevention of their spread, and make rules and regulations for interstate quarantine and for the non-interference with interstate communication during a threatened epidemic, and preparations for the suppression of a threatened epidemic.

SEC. 4. Whenever an epidemic of (1) yellow fever, (2) cholera, (3) diphtheria, (4) typhoid fever, (5) scarlet fever, or (6) small-pox is threatened and the governor of any State shall call upon the chief commissioner of health of the United States to that end, he shall immediately, with the assistance of the section of the health commission devoted to that particular disease, enforce and carry out the methods, rules, and regulations adopted by the health commission for that disease under the third section of this act, and as far as possible in co-operation with the local and State sanitary authorities, and to that end the section of the health commission so called into action shall have the disbursement of the Federal appropriation for the prevention and suppression of contagious diseases, on the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 5. The bureau of health and the chief commissioner of health and section of the health commission called into active duty under the foregoing provisions shall co-operate with and, so far as it lawfully may, aid State and municipal boards of health in the execution and enforcement of the rules and regulations of such boards to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States from foreign countries and into one State from another.

SEC. 6. It shall be the duty of the bureau of health to obtain information of the sanitary condition of foreign ports and places from which contagious and infectious diseases may be imported into the United States, and to this end the consular officers of the United States at such ports and places as shall be designated by the chief commissioner of health, shall make to him weekly reports of the sanitary condition of the ports or places at which they are respectively stationed, according to such forms as he may prescribe; and the bureau of health shall also obtain, through all sources accessible, weekly reports of the sanitary condition of ports and places within the United States, and shall make an investigation into the nature, cause, origin, and means of prevention of contagious and epidemic diseases, as well as the causes and conditions of the particular outbreaks of such diseases in the United States, and shall publish and transmit to the medical officers of the Marine-Hospital Service, to collectors of customs, and to State and municipal health officers and authorities weekly abstracts of its sanitary reports, and to them, and to the public, as far as possible, the results of its investigations into the causes and means of prevention of epidemic diseases; and it shall make to the Secretary of the Interior an annual report of its operations, with such recommendations as it may deem important, for transmission to Congress.

SEC. 7. The bureau of health shall annually issue to the consular officers of the United States and to the medical officers serving at any foreign port and otherwise make publicly known the rules and regulations made by the health commission for the prevention of the introduction of contagious and infectious disease into the United States and from one State into another. The consuls shall promulgate such rules in their respective ports and places, and shall promptly inform the chief commissioner of health of the United States when any vessel destined to a port of the United States has not obeyed such rules.

SEC. 8. The President is authorized, when requested by the section of the health commission called into active duty or by the chief commissioner of health, to detail officers from the several Departments of the Government or employ persons from civil life for temporary duty to act under the directions of said chief commissioner of health or section of the health commission on active duty, to carry out the provisions of this act and the rules adopted by the health commission; and such officers shall receive no additional compensation except for actual and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of such duties.

SEC. 9. The members of the health commission when attending the annual session shall be paid their actual expenses, going and returning, and the members of the section called in active duty under section 2 shall be paid their actual expenses while engaged in such active duty.

SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any vessel from any port where any contagious or infectious disease exists, or having on board any infectious disease, to enter any port of the United States, except in accordance with the rules adopted by the health commission, and the certificate of the United States consul at such port shall be prima facie evidence of the existence of such disease in the foreign port where he is stationed. Any such vessel which shall enter or attempt to enter a port of the United States in violation of this act shall forfeit to the United States a sum to be awarded in the discretion of the court not exceeding $1,000, which shall be a lien upon such vessel, to be recovered in any district court of the United States where said vessel may be found. In all such proceedings the United States district attorney for such district shall appear on behalf of the United States, and all such proceedings shall be conducted in accordance with the laws and rules governing cases of seizure of vessels for violation of the revenue laws of the United States.

SEC. 11. It shall be unlawful for any person to obstruct commerce or intercourse between the States, or between the United States and foreign countries, except in accordance with the rules of the health commission, or to obstruct the section of the health commission when called into active duty in the performance of its duties, and any violation of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and on conviction the person so offending shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 and imprisoned not exceeding six months in the discretion of the court.

SEC. 12. To pay the first year's salaries and expenses of the bureau of health and health commission and the construction of such disinfecting appliances and appurtenances as the health commission may deem advisable, the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, on estimates to be made by the chief commissioner of health and to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

In case of an epidemic of a contagious or infectious disease, and a section of the health commission is called into active duty, the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be drawn and expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to enable such section of the health commission called into active duty to suppress the disease and prevent its spread and to enforce the rules of the health commission, provided for and adopted under section 3.

SEC. 13. The following acts are repealed: (1) An act to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, approved 29th April, 1878 (chapter 66, page 37, volume 20); (2) an act to prevent the introduction of infectious or contagious diseases into the United States, and to establish a national board of health, approved 3d March, 1879 (chapter 202, volume 20, page 484); (3) an act to prevent the introduction of contagious and infectious diseases into the United States, approved 2d June, 1879 (chapter 11, volume 21, page 5).

REPRINTING OF BILLS.

Mr. HATCH. I ask by unanimous consent that bill H. R. 11027, defining "lard," also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of compound lard, and the bill (H. R. 11266) for the establishment of a pure-food division in the Department of Agriculture, to provide for the inspection of live-stock about to be slaughtered at slaughter-houses, canning, salting, packing, and rendering establishments, the carcasses or products of which are intended for human consumption in any State or Territory other than where slaughtered, or for exportation to foreign countries, to prohibit the introduction of adulterated or misbranded food or drugs into any State or Territory or the District of Columbia from any other State or Territory or foreign country, and for other purposes, be reprinted, the entire edition having been exhausted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. FISHER, by unanimous consent, was granted indefinite leave of absence on account of illness.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday and the call of States having been concluded, the next business in order is the consideration of reports from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 6676) to create a board of audit to adjust all claims for special damages by reason of public improvements in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of having it recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken up and recommitted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PROMOTION OF ANATOMICAL SCIENCE.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I ask to call up the bill (H. R. 5042) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves in the District of Columbia, for the purpose of having an order entered that the bill be reprinted.

Mr. TAULBEE. This, I understand, is the bill for the promotion of anatomical science, is it not?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, it is.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether the penalties provided in the bill are going to be made applicable to those who attempt to resurrect this bill at this time?

Mr. HEMPHILL. That matter has not yet been determined. I will see the gentleman later on that subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to ordering the bill to be reprinted?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there any further business from the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. HEMPHILL. There is no further business from that committee to-day.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, for the purposes following, being for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, namely:

GENERAL EXPENSES.

For salaries and contingent expenses:

For executive office: For two commissioners, at $5,000 each; one engineer commissioner, $924 (to make salary $5,000); one secretary, $2,160; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $600; one messenger, $480; one driver, $480; one inspector of buildings, $2,400; one assistant inspector of buildings, $1,200; one assistant inspector of buildings, $1,000; one clerk, $1,600; one clerk, $900; one messenger, $480; one janitor, $700; one steam engineer, $900; one property clerk, $1,600; one clerk, $900; one clerk, $720; one messenger clerk, $600; one messenger, $480; three watchmen, at $480 each; one chief inspector of plumbing, $2,000; two assistant inspectors of plumbing, at $1,000 each; one harbor master, $1,200; for rent of property yards, $1,000; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and other necessary expenses, $3,000; in all, $44,064.

For assessor's office: For one assessor, $3,000; two assistant assessors, at $1,600 each; one special-assessment clerk, $1,700; one clerk, $1,200; two clerks, at $1,000 each; one clerk, at $1,000, in charge of records; one license clerk, at $1,200; one inspector of licenses, $1,200; one assistant or clerk, $900; one clerk and messenger, $900; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, detection of frauds on the revenue, and other necessary items, $1,000; in all $17,300.

For collector's office: For one collector, $4,000; one cashier, $1,800; one bookkeeper, $1,600; four clerks, at $1,400 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $600; for contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, and other necessary items, $1,000; in all, $18,200.

For necessary expenses in the collection of overdue personal taxes by distraint and sale or otherwise, and for other necessary items, $1,000: Provided: That hereafter the fees and cost of proceeding collected by the collector of taxes under the act of March 3, 1877, for making distress and sale of property for personal taxes in arrears, shall be deposited by said collector in the Treasury of the United States as other revenues of the District are deposited.

For auditor's office: For one auditor, $3,000; one chief clerk, who shall hereafter, in the necessary absence or inability of the auditor from any cause, perform his duties, without additional compensation, $1,800; one book-keeper, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each; three clerks, at $1,200 each; one messenger, $600; for temporary clerk-hire, $1,000; for contingent expenes, including books, stationery, and other necessary items, $300; in all, $16,500.

For attorney's office: For one attorney, $4,000; one assistant attorney, $2,000; one special assistant attorney, $1,200; one law clerk, $1,200; one messenger, $200; for rent of office, $100; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and other necessary items, $400; for judicial expenses, including the printing of briefs and witness fees in District cases before the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $2,500; in all, $11,600.

For sinking-fund office, under control of the Treasurer of the United States: For one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $900; for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items, $300; in all, $2,700.

For coroner's office: For one coroner, $1,800; for contingent expenses, including jurors' fees, stationery, books, blanks, removal of deceased persons, making autopsies, and holding inquests, $700; for services in care of morgue, $300; in all, $2,800.

For market-masters: For two market-masters, at $1,200 each; one market-master, $900; for hire of laborers for cleaning markets, at rate not exceeding $100 per market, $300; contingent expenses, repairs and painting, and other necessary items, $1,000: in all, $4,600.

For engineer's office: One chief clerk, $1,900; one clerk, at $1,600; one clerk, at $1,400; four clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk, at $900; one computing engineer, $2,400; one inspector of asphalt and cements, $2,400; one messenger, $480; one inspector of gas and meters, $2,000; one superintendent of streets, $2,000; one superintendent of roads, $1,400; one superintendent of lamps, $900; superintendent of parking, $1,200; one assistant superintendent of parking, $700; one assistant engineer, $1,600; two assistant engineers, at $1,500 each; one draughtsman, $1,200; three inspectors of streets and sewers, at $1,200 each; three rodmen, at $780 each; three axmen, at $650 each; one messenger clerk, at $600; two messengers, at $480 each; two laborers, at $360 each; in all, $40,650.

For contingent expenses, including books, stationery, binding and preservation of records in the engineer's and surveyor's offices, printing, maintaining and keeping in good order the laboratory and apparatus in the office of the inspector of gas and meters, and in the office of the inspector of asphalt and cement, and other necessary items, $4,800.

That overseers and inspectors, temporarily required in connection with sewer, street, or road work, or the construction and repair of buildings and bridges, or any work done under contracts authorized by appropriations, and all expenses incidental to or necessary for the proper execution of said work, shall be paid out of the sums appropriated for said work and for the time actually engaged thereon; and the commissioners of the District, in their annual report to Congress, shall report the number of such overseers and inspectors, and their work, and the sums paid to each, and out of what appropriation.

STREETS, AVENUES, ALLEYS, AND ROADS.

For work on sundry streets and avenues named in Appendix "CC," Book of Estimates, for the fiscal year 1890, and for resurfacing and repairing of Pennsylvania avenue from First to Seventeenth streets northwest, $617,000, to be expended in the discretion of the commissioners on streets and avenues specified in the schedules named in said appendix and on Pennsylvania avenue and in the aggregate for each schedule as stated herein, namely:

General schedule: Including the work of resurfacing and repairing of Pennsylvania avenue from First to Seventeenth streets northwest, $244,500.

Georgetown schedule: Thirty-seven thousand dollars.

Northwest section schedule: One hundred and forty-five thousand dollars.

Southwest section schedule: Fifty-eight thousand dollars.

Southeast section schedule: Fifty-eight thousand dollars.

Northeast section schedule: Seventy-four thousand five hundred dollars.

That under appropriations contained in this act no contract shall be made for making or repairing concrete or asphalt pavement at a higher price than $2 per square yard for a quality equal to the best laid in the District prior to July 1, 1886, and with same depth of base.

Grading streets, alleys, and roads: For grading streets, alleys, and roads not otherwise provided for, at a price not to exceed 10 cents per cubic yard, $15,000.

Mr. SPINOLA. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPINOLA. After this bill is read through will it be in order then to go back and offer amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not, as the bill is now being read by paragraphs for amendment, and if the gentleman has one to offer he must offer it at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Repairs to pavements: For repairs to concrete pavements, with the same or other not inferior material, $90,000.

Permit work: For the improvement and repair of alleys and sidewalks and the construction of sewers and sidewalks of such form and materials as the commissioners may determine under the permit system, $100,000: Provided,

That the property owners requesting such improvements shall pay one-half of the total cost: And provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized in their discretion to order such of the above enumerated work as in their opinion is necessary for the public health, safety, or comfort, and to pay the total cost of such work from said appropriation, one-half of the cost of such work so done, including material and labor, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the property abutting upon the line of such improvement, and shall be levied pro rata according to the area of each lot or part of lot abutting upon such improvement within sixty days after making such assessment, and in order to reimburse said appropriation so expended one-half of the cost of such work so done, including labor and material, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the property abutting upon the line of the said work, and shall be levied pro rata upon said property upon such terms and regulations as to notice to proprietors and the method and terms of such notice as shall seem to the commissioners of the District of Columbia right and proper, due notice of such terms and regulations being given by publication thereof in some newspaper published in the city of Washington for such time as said commissioners shall prescribe, and the one-half so charged against such abutting property shall be paid as follows: One-third of the amount within sixty days from the date of service of notice of such assessment, without interest; one-third within one year, and the remaining third within two years from the date of service of notice of such assessment, and interest shall be charged at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum from the date of service of such notice on all amounts that shall remain unpaid at the expiration of thirty days after the service of the notice of such assessment: Provided, That if any property so assessed shall become subject to sale for any other assessment or tax whatever, then the assessment levied under this act shall become immediately due and payable, and such property may be sold therefor, together with the accrued interest thereon to the date of such sale, together with the costs of advertising and sale; and any property upon which such assessment and accrued interest thereon, or any part thereof, shall remain unpaid at the expiration of two years from the date of service of notice of such assessment shall be subject to sale therefor under the same conditions and penalties as are imposed by existing law for the non-payment of general taxes, and the material purchased under this appropriation shall be bought after due advertisement therefor, as required by existing law.

Repairs streets, avenues, and alleys: For current work of repairs of streets, avenues, and alleys, $30,000.

Repairs county roads: For current work of repairs of county roads and suburban streets, $45,000.

Constructing county roads: For construction of county roads and suburban streets, as follows:

For Pennsylvania avenue extended to Bowen road, $25,000;
For Canal road, from Free to Chain Bridges, $13,000;
To complete pavement of Fourteenth street extended to top of hill, $10,000;
To grade and regulate Sheridan street from Seventh to Ninth streets, $3,000;
To widen and regulate Brightwood avenue, $5,000;
For Rock Creek Church road, $5,000;
To grade and regulate Seventeenth street from Park street to Piney's Branch, $1,000;
To grade and regulate Washington street, Anacostia, $3,000;
To grade and regulate Jackson street, Anacostia, $3,000;
To grade and regulate Jefferson street, Anacostia, $3,000;
To grade and regulate Adams and Taylor streets from Harrison to Jefferson street, $4,400;
For Howard avenue, $1,000;
For Bunker Hill road, $8,000;
For River road from Tennallytown west, $5,000; in all, $89,400.

CONDEMNATION OF STREETS, ROADS, AND ALLEYS.

For condemnation of streets, roads, and alleys, $10,000.

And the commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to condemn a sufficient amount of ground at the intersection of Sixteenth and U streets and New Hampshire avenue from squares 175, 176, north, 177, 189, and 190, for the purpose of constructing a circular reservation, the same to be called Hancock Circle: Provided, That the said ground can be acquired without public expense.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 11, after line 16, insert "to grade and regulate Fourth street, east, extended, to Bunker Hill, $10,000."

Page 12, line 15, strike out "eighty-nine" and insert "ninety-nine;" so it will read:

"In all, $99,400."

The amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Surveys of the District: For completion of surveys of the District of Columbia with reference to the extension of various avenues to the District line, $10,000.

Care of bridges: For ordinary care of bridges, including keepers, oils, lamps, and matches, $3,400; for construction and repairs of bridges, $10,000; in all, $13,400.

SEWERS.

For cleaning and repairing sewers and basins, $33,000.
For replacing obstructed sewers, $12,000.
For main and pipe sewers, $75,000.
For suburban sewers, $40,000.

CURRENT EXPENSES, STREETS, AVENUES, AND ALLEYS.

Sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning: For sprinkling, sweeping, and cleaning streets, avenues, alleys, and suburban streets, $85,000: Provided, That no expenditure hereunder shall be made at a price higher than 27 cents per 1,000 square yards for streets and avenues, and 30 cents per 1,000 square yards for alleys.

For the Parking Commission: For contingent expenses, including laborers, cart-hire, trees, tree-boxes, tree-stakes, tree-straps, planting and care of trees on city and suburban streets, whitewashing, care of parks, and miscellaneous items, $18,000.

Lighting: For illuminating material, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning lamps on avenues, streets, roads, and alleys, and for purchasing and erecting new lamp-posts and replacing such lamps and lamp-posts as may be damaged or unfit for service, $115,000: Provided, That no more than $20 per annum for each street-lamp shall be paid for gas, lighting, extinguishing, repairing, and cleaning, under any expenditure provided for in this act; and said lamps shall burn not less than two thousand six hundred hours per annum; and the commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to substitute other illuminating material at the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose: Provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not be authorized to make any contract for gas or other illuminating material, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, for any longer period than one year.

Mr. ATKINSON. I rise to make a point of order against that portion of the bill beginning on page 15, line 9, after the word "power."

The CHAIRMAN. That part of the bill has not yet been reached.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the part of the bill which has just been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 17: Strike out "two" and insert "three;" so that it will read, if amended:

"And such lamps shall burn not less than three thousand six hundred hours per annum."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will state the object and purport of that amendment. This paragraph provides a payment of not more than $20 per annum for each street-lamp in use in this city. In the first place, that is an enormous figure to pay for that service, judging from the price paid in other cities for similar service. I know it to be much larger than is paid in some other cities for continuous service. The paragraph goes on to provide that these lamps shall burn not less than two thousand six hundred hours per annum, which simply amounts to this: that when, according to the almanac, we should have a bright moonlight night, but according to the weather we have darkness, these lamps need not be and will not be burning. I move, therefore, to strike out "two thousand" and insert "three thousand," so that we will have an average of ten hours out of the twenty-four when these lamps shall be burned at the price fixed. This would enable those gentlemen whose avocation calls them out late at night to have the light of the street-lamps to find their way to their customary places of residence, and the expenditure that is provided for the service, $20 per annum, is quite ample.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to say only a word, and that is that the provisions in this bill on this point are strictly in accordance with the recommendations of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, the administrative authority of the District, and in accordance with what has been the law for several years past.

As to the amount, $20 per annum allowed for each lamp, that was reduced a few years ago from $22, and has been standing at this figure for some time past. I doubt the propriety of an act increasing largely the number of hours per annum that these lamps shall be burned without at the same time increasing in the same proportion the amount to be paid for them per annum.

I have no desire to continue the discussion, and ask a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 30, noes 31.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Inasmuch as this committee loves darkness better than light, I shall not insist upon a further vote on the amendment, but shall accept the decision of the committee as final.

Mr. SPINOLA. I offer an amendment to strike out a part of the paragraph on page 14, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 14, line 18, after the words "per annum" strike out down to and including the word "purpose" in lines 21 and 22.

Mr. SPINOLA. I make that amendment, Mr. Chairman, simply for the reason——

Mr. CLEMENTS. Before the gentleman proceeds I wish to interpose a point of order upon the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. CLEMENTS. That it changes existing law.

Mr. SPINOLA. That it changes existing law? Well, then, let us see.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will request the gentleman from Georgia in charge of the bill to state the existing law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will send it to the desk.

Mr. SPINOLA. If the gentleman will allow me a few moments I will give the reasons for proposing the amendment, and perhaps there may be no objection. I ask the attention of the committee for a little while.

The language in the bill confers a very extraordinary power upon the commissioners, a power which in my judgment should not be granted. If they need any such authority let them come to Congress and give their reasons for asking it, and let Congress then determine the question. But to ingraft upon a bill of this character such extraordinary power looks to me entirely out of place. It provides that there is authority, in their discretion, to substitute other illuminating material at the same or less price. It gives them the right to go outside and dicker with people, a power which we should confer upon no one unless in each individual instance Congress shall deem it wise to do so. It can not affect the bill, and in my judgment it would materially improve it to adopt the amendment.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I wish to say only this, that this clause is contained in the bill of the last year and in preceding appropriation bills, and is designed simply as a safeguard. Suppose, for instance, that the companies furnishing gas-light should decline to do so. In that event this gives the commissioners of the District of Columbia discretion to use some other illuminating material. It is put in as a safeguard, and although it has been in the bills for years past, it never has been resorted to. I see no harm in keeping it in the present bill. I send to the Chair the existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the present law.

The Clerk read as follows:

And the commissioners are authorized, in their discretion, to substitute other illuminating material at the same or less price, and to use so much of the sum hereby appropriated as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is the language of the current law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the simple striking out of the language in the bill referred to by the gentleman from New York does not repeal the law that has been read. It may be proper to insert the language, but the question of striking it out is one for the committee to determine.

Mr. SPINOLA. Although that clause may be a part of the existing law as it stands to-day, in my judgment it is nevertheless a dangerous authority. The excuse for retaining it given by the gentleman from Georgia does not, in my opinion, reach the merits of the case. If the gas company at Washington fails to carry out the provisions of its charter and fails to furnish gas for public purposes, the charter should be forfeited.

Mr. CLEMENTS. But that would not furnish illumination to the people in the mean time.

Mr. SPINOLA. There is no danger of the gas manufacturers of Washington letting go of a good thing that they have in furnishing gas here. They have the softest snap here, as I understand it, of any city in the Union, and they are not going to let go of it.

The question was taken on Mr. SPINOLA'S amendment, and it was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For electric lighting, including necessary expenses of inspection, on one or more of the principal streets of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, $35,000: Provided, That no more than 40 cents shall be paid for each light per night burning from sunset to sunrise, and each arc light shall be of not less than 1,000 actual candle power, and no wires for the operation of public or private electric lighting shall be erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown after September 30, 1890, but the commissioners of the District of Columbia may authorize the temporary erection and maintenance of such wires in cases of necessity: Provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make and enforce such regulations for the construction, maintenance, and operation of apparatus for electrical purposes as they may deem advisable, and such regulations so made shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as if enacted by Congress: And provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall report to the first session of the Fifty-first Congress what deduction may be made for electric lighting both for annual and for five-year contracts, and that they be authorized to invite proposals for supplying said light at reduced rates, and in this they are not limited to any one system.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order against so much of this paragraph on page 15 as begins on line 9, after the word "power," and ending on line 15, before the word "provided." It is the portion of the section directing that no overhead wires shall be put up after the 30th of September, 1890. That seems to change existing law, Mr. Chairman, and is out of order, as I believe, upon this general appropriation bill.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he makes a point of order upon that paragraph. I have to say in reply that it is simply a limitation upon the appropriation. It is a direction in this appropriation bill for the electric lighting, and it provides the manner in which it can be done. It is not, therefore, a change of existing law which is obnoxious to the rules. It simply regulates the manner in which money shall be used for a purpose which is recognized under prior law.

Mr. ATKINSON. In response to the gentleman from Georgia, I desire to say that this paragraph of the bill is not in harmony with any appropriation. It is not germane to this appropriation bill for electric lighting, nor is there any limitation at all upon the expenditure of money for that purpose; but on the contrary it is legislation applying to a bill of the District, pure and simple, without any reference whatever to the appropriation at the beginning of the paragraph. It prohibits the erection of any additional wires. It also prohibits the maintenance of those that are in position. It affects the whole overhead electric lighting system in the city of Washington, and has no reference at all to the appropriation. It goes much further than that, and the committee, under the rule, has exceeded its powers by fixing this provision on their bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, as I understand it, the date "1890" should be "1889." I will ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] if I am not correct in that?

Mr. CLEMENTS. That is an error. The gentleman from Iowa is correct.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is no existing law that will prevent us from making this limitation. This appropriation is for the year ending June 30, 1890, so that it is thus our intention to make this limitation upon expenditures which are now provided for. We are here appropriating money for electric lighting. That is the purpose of this appropriation bill; but we say we will not allow that money to be expended upon wires that are put overhead. The purpose of the committee is, as fast as it can be done, to take down this system of wires that are overhead and compel them to be laid under the ground. Now, it was our opinion that this provision or limitation was clearly within the powers of the committee to say how this money shall be expended. We are willing that it shall be expended for electric lighting where the wires are laid under-ground, but we will not let it be expended for wires run overhead; and it seems to me that is the whole purpose of the bill.

Mr. ATKINSON. The gist of the gentleman's argument seems to be that this appropriation does not cover the period at which these wires are to be taken down; but the bill will cover a period after September 30, 1890. It is provided in this bill that the wires shall not be maintained after September, 1890, but this appropriation will be expended before that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that at this time private parties holding rights may construct wires, and that this provision would change the law in that manner; and therefore it is a change of existing law in that respect. The Chair does not think it necessary to examine further than that particular point, as it seems to determine this question. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have another point of order against the portion of the section beginning at the word "that," fifteenth line, and extending to the words "provided further," on line 21.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I want to offer an amendment at this point covering the point of the gentleman, as the Chairman has sustained it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will not be precluded by the amendment from being heard on the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "power" in line 9, page 15, insert "and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting after September 30, 1889, by means of wires erected or maintained that are over any of the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown."

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order under the latter clause of paragraph 3 of Rule XXI, "nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto." The Chair has just ruled that the paragraph in the bill is not in order, and it has been stricken out. This amendment is to effect precisely the same as the paragraph that has already been ordered to be stricken out on my point of order, and is obnoxious to the same rule. It changes existing law as to the right of private parties to maintain private wires.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is inclined to think the point of order well taken.

Mr. DINGLEY. In reference to the point of order I wish to remind the Chair that it has been repeatedly held by Chairmen of the Committee of the Whole that a limitation might be put upon the use of an appropriation made for a particular purpose. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that there have been repeated rulings in that direction, and it seems to me that a limitation of this kind would not be obnoxious to the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks otherwise. Appropriations are made in pursuance of law——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the Chair will indulge me, there is no law which requires the wires to be put overhead.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the operation of law it is permissible to do so.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We have appropriated money for electric lighting. That is all we have done. There is no law which requires that the wires shall be placed either overhead or under-ground. Now we appropriate the money for this purpose with a proviso that we do not wish it to be expended in overhead wires. We simply put a limitation on this appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, but if it were not for this limitation the Chair thinks the commissioners might use the money for overhead wires, and if so, this qualification does change existing law in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we can withhold the appropriation altogether, unless the money is to be expended for a system of lighting which we approve, namely, one in which the wires are under-ground. There may be a limitation upon our action in this direction if there is any action prohibiting the putting of wires under-ground; but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] can not lay his hand upon any such statute. In fact there is no statute requiring them to be placed either overhead or under-ground. Now we come to appropriate the money for lighting by this system and we say that not a dollar of it shall be expended upon a plan involving overhead wires. That is all.

Mr. ATKINSON. That is not what is stated in the bill. There is no provision in the bill that this money shall be expended only for means of lighting by under-ground wires. There is no allusion whatever to under-ground wires in the bill so far as any limitation upon the expenditure is concerned. But the provision goes beyond the period covered by the bill. The bill appropriates only for expenditures up to the 30th of June, 1890, whereas this provision is that after the 30th of September, 1890, no overhead electric wires shall be kept in place.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that he is talking now upon an erroneous state of facts—that "1890" is a mistake which will be corrected and changed to "1889."

Mr. BREWER. But that clause has been stricken out.

Mr. ATKINSON. It has been stricken out by the decision of the Chair, and the amendment intended to cover the same thing has been ruled out; so that we have already passed this paragraph. If the committee desire to offer any amendment to their own bill at the proper time, there can be no objection to it; but it is not before the House now, this matter having been already decided by the Chair.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This paragraph having been stricken out, we are at the very point to add this amendment, and any member of the House has the right to move the amendment. The only question before the Chair now is whether the amendment which I have offered changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. That is what the Chair understands to be the only question.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And I would invite the attention of my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] to that question, and ask him to mention some existing law which this amendment traverses in any way.

Mr. ATKINSON. I understood that the gentleman's amendment had been already ruled out by the Chair upon the ground that it would change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled finally upon the amendment. The Chair announced his opinion, but the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] expressed a desire to be heard.

Mr. ATKINSON. I was so far back in the hall when the amendment was read that I did not hear it distinctly, and I should like to have it reported again.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understand that by the ruling of the Chair the part of this paragraph after the word "power" down to the proviso has been ruled out. The gentleman from Iowa proposes now to amend the paragraph by inserting after the word "power" the amendment which has been read by the Clerk. The amendment is very different from the language which the Chair has ruled out. That provision positively required that the wires should be put under-ground. It was mandatory. But this amendment simply provides that the money shall be appropriated, provided it be used in a certain manner, but that otherwise it shall not be used. Such a provision does not change existing law. There is no existing law that compels an appropriation to be made at all for electric lighting.

I apprehend it would be perfectly competent for the House, if it saw proper, to make no appropriation for this purpose—to leave out the matter entirely. I think this case comes within the repeated rulings made heretofore, that in making an appropriation it is entirely in order to place a limitation or condition upon such appropriation; in other words, in this case we may provide that the wires upon which the money is to be expended shall be put under-ground; that otherwise the appropriation shall be nugatory. There is no existing law requiring the electric lighting of this city to be done by any particular system of overhead or under-ground wires; there is no law making any provision either way.

I will add that this is a provision intended for the comfort and safety of the people. It is proposed to require that these dangerous wires be placed where they will be least dangerous; and this limitation, it seems to me, falls within the repeated rulings to the effect that it is competent for us to impose limitations or conditions upon the appropriations of money which we may make, provided we change no existing law; and I apprehend the gentleman on the other side will not be able to point out any law which is repealed or changed by this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment.

Mr. ATKINSON. In addition to what I have already said, and in reply to the gentleman in charge of this bill, I wish to say that while it may be true that I can not point out any existing statute which authorizes the construction of overhead wires, yet the common-law right permitting a man to erect any structure he pleases when not forbidden by law is a right enjoyed by every citizen of this District.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs leave to suggest that this does not touch the question of private rights at all; it relates to the lighting of the city by the official authorities.

Mr. ATKINSON. I would be glad to have the amendment reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "power," in line 9, page 15, insert "and no part of this appropriation shall be used for electric lighting after September 30, 1889, by means of wires erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown."

Mr. ATKINSON. That changes the whole purport of the paragraph, and it is not open to a point of order. I admit that, and I do not care to antagonize the proposition.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

Mr. ATKINSON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order against that portion of the paragraph beginning with the word "that," in line 15, and ending with the word "Congress," in line 21. The language to which this point of order applies is the following:

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall make and enforce such regulations for the construction, maintenance, and operation of apparatus for electricial purposes as they may deem advisable, and such regulations so made shall have the same force and effect within the District of Columbia as if enacted by Congress.

This gives the commissioners power to enact a general law in reference to all electrical machines and the transmission of electricity in the entire District of Columbia. It is not germane to the appropriation, and it changes existing law. It is therefore in violation of the rule which I have already brought to the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] will not insist on his point of order. This provision is intended for the safety and comfort of the people of this District. It seems to me there certainly ought to be power lodged in the District commissioners or some other responsible authority to regulate a matter which involves the safety of the lives of the people of the District.

Mr. ATKINSON. In response to the gentleman in charge of the bill I wish to say that there is a committee to which all matters relating to the safety and health of the people of this District should be referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. ATKINSON. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I also make a point of order on the next clause of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause upon which the gentleman makes the point.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall report to the first session of the Fifty-first Congress what deduction may be made for electric lighting both for annual and for five-year contracts, and that they be authorized to invite proposals for supplying said light at reduced rates, and in this they are not limited to any one system.

Mr. ATKINSON. I submit that this provision is not germane to the purposes of an appropriation bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I am very much surprised that my friend from Pennsylvania should make a point of order on this proviso. The proviso is in this language:

And provided further, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall report to the first session of the Fifty-first Congress what deduction may be made for electric lighting both for annual and for five-year contracts, and that they be authorized to invite proposals for supplying said light at reduced rates, and in this they are not limited to any one system.

It is claimed that the lighting of this city can be done much more cheaply for the people than it is now done.

The object of this proviso on the part of the Committee on Appropriations is this: The committee desire to get all the information from the commissioners they can possibly obtain in order to make appropriations hereafter. It is not changing any law; it is a proviso simply calling for information. There is now no law preventing the commissioners giving us information. There is no law which prevents the Committee on Appropriations inviting information. It is a different provision from the last one, where the gentleman from Pennsylvania made a point of order, and where perhaps it was well taken. Here we are seeking by this provision to invite information from the commissioners which will enable us intelligently to appropriate money in the next Congress. It repeals no law.

Mr. ATKINSON. Beside asking for information, Mr. Chairman, this goes further and authorizes the commissioners to invite proposals for supplying light at reduced rates. I presume that might be construed as a power to enter into contracts with authority of Congress, and without any other power except what is here given in this proviso of the bill. On that account I think it is objectionable. If the committee desire to have information from the commissioners of the District, I have no doubt they can get it by calling upon the commissioners for that purpose. I did not know it was necessary for Congress to pass an act authorizing the committee to make such a call and to have the commissioners make report. This proviso goes further, as I have already said, and authorizes them to invite proposals, presumably to be followed by a contract, and that is, as I understand, no part of the functions of this committee.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is no trouble about the committee inviting proposals. They have the power to do that under the existing law. We are not seeking to exercise that power, but merely inviting these commissioners to bring certain information before the next Congress, in order to enable them to act intelligently in the premises, and that is all the proviso does. There is scarcely an appropriation relating to the District under the old rules or under the present rules which has not more or less provision for the purpose of inviting the special attention of the commissioners to matters we want to have done with a view to more intelligent action in the future.

Mr. SPINOLA. Let me inquire whether it would not obviate the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to insert the words "providing that before entering into any contract the commissioners shall make report to Congress."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That would change existing law if those words should be inserted, as they now have that right.

Mr. SPINOLA. What, then, is the use of asking for this information, if they have that right now?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The term provided for in the bill will bring it to next year, when our duty to make provision will come in. I have no objection to adding the gentleman's amendment, but it will make it subject to the point of order of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPINOLA. I do not wish to do that, but I simply offer it to obviate, if possible, the gentleman's objection.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do not think that the rule which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] invokes applies to the extent which he seems to think it does. This is no proposition to repeal an existing law, and it is no proposition to enact a new law, but simply giving authority and direction to the commissioners of the District of Columbia to furnish the next Congress with information upon which they may act more intelligibly and justly.

It is said now that the amount paid for electric lighting is excessive. It was cut down from sixty-five to fifty, and yet, compared with the cost of lighting in other cities, it is alleged to be even now more than it ought to be. On the other hand, it is claimed by those engaged in the business that they have lost money this year. The purpose is, therefore, to obtain information to be submitted to the next Congress in order to make this appropriation intelligently. And what can be the motive of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to invoke this point of order I can not understand, as we are seeking this information only in the interest of economy and for the purpose of reducing these lighting expenses in the interest of the tax-payers of the country as well as of the District.

We are seeking to do it justly in regard to those who furnish the light, and what objection the gentleman from Pennsylvania can find to a proposition calling for and eliciting the information upon the subject which will enable the House to act advisedly, I am unable to understand. It seems to be but one more of the series of objections which he has been interposing this morning at every point along the line wherever we seek to regulate this monopoly in the interest of economy and in justice to the tax-payers. The gentleman will have to take the responsibility of the position he assumes, which in effect is in the interest of extravagance and in opposition to the interest of the tax-payers.

But I insist, Mr. Chairman, that this point of order on this particular paragraph is not well taken. It is not subject to the rule, for the reason that it does not change existing law or enact any new law, but simply calls for information upon the subject.

Mr. ATKINSON. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in response to what has been said by the gentleman from Georgia, who has just spoken, that he has no more right to question my motives than I have to question his. I make no point of order here in the interest of any monopoly, and perhaps I am as anxious to secure economy in public expenditures as the gentleman from Georgia himself. He has no right to assume that I advocate extravagance while he is the champion of economy.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I did not undertake to question the integrity of the gentleman's motives or purposes. I am only speaking of the effect of them. He is making a point of order against the efforts of the committee to reduce expenditures as well as to protect the lives and property of our people. I say that in such a position he must be responsible as against the efforts of the committee to secure economy.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make points of order against what I believe to be out of place here. I believe that the Committee on Appropriations has exceeded its authority in presenting these propositions to the House; and if they desire the enactment of legislation in the interest of economy, let them do it by reference to the appropriate committee, and not by an effort to take charge of the business which properly belongs to the other committees of the House, and over which this committee has no legitimate jurisdiction.

My points of order I have made in good faith. Two of them have been sustained by the Chair, and I believe that the last point I have made is not only entitled to be considered, but that it will also be sustained by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Iowa if he claims that at this time it is competent for the commissioners of the District of Columbia to report what deduction may be made for electric lighting, both for annual and for five-year contracts, and are authorized to invite proposals for supplying said light at reduced rates?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. They can undoubtedly advertise to receive bids under the existing law. But they are not empowered to make any new contracts. This provision of the bill, however, does not authorize the making of any contracts, but simply authorizes them to receive bids with a view to determining what reductions may be made in this expenditure, so that we may know what may be done in that direction hereafter.

There is a feeling in the committee that it can be done at a much less expense than has heretofore been paid; and in order to test the sincerity of those parties who have made offers to put in the plant and do the work, we ask that the commissioners of the District may invite proposals and obtain bids if possible, and furnish the result of their efforts in that direction for the information of Congress.

Permit me to suggest also in this connection, in justice to my friend from Pennsylvania, that we are not seeking in this to usurp any rights or functions belonging to the District committee. They can come in and make any law they choose bearing upon the subject. Nor are we seeking to repeal any existing law, but simply asking for information for the purpose of properly considering the matter by the House hereafter, and taking such steps in the light of that information as may be advisable.

So far as the other provisions are put in, that is to say, those which have been stricken out on the point of order, we knew perfectly well that they were subject to the point of order when it was made. But there are many provisions put into appropriation bills which we know are subject to the point of order if insisted upon; but, as a rule, they commend themselves so strongly to the approval of members that no objection is made to them in many cases. Any member, however, has the right to make the point of order against such provisions at any time, and certainly good faith will be conceded to our friend from Pennsylvania, than whom no member is more active in preserving the rights of the people against monopolies or otherwise. But in this amendment, which is not subject to the point of order, because it changes no existing law, we only seek information which will be valuable hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, so far as the matter of making the report of the reduction which can be made in the cost of electric lighting both for annual and for five-year contracts is concerned, that it is certainly competent for the commissioners to make such report now. So far as their inviting proposals for supplying such light at reduced rates is concerned, the Chair does not understand that this provision goes beyond the language of it or authorizes the acceptance of any of the proposals which may be made. In other words, it does not involve the making of contracts at all. The Chair overrules the point of order, and sustains the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment of Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

For officers: For superintendent first six divisions, at $2,700; superintendent seventh and eighth divisions, at $2,250; one clerk to superintendent of first six divisions and secretary to board of trustees, $1,200; one clerk to superintendent of seventh and eighth divisions, $800; messenger to superintendent first six divisions, $300; messenger to superintendent seventh and eighth divisions, $200; in all, $7,450.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 17, on page 16, strike out "twenty-seven hundred" and insert "three thousand dollars."

Mr. CLEMENTS. I make the point of order that this changes existing law.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The amendment is not susceptible to the point of order. There is no statute law fixing the salary of this superintendent.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The current appropriation bill is the law on the subject, and by that the salary is fixed at the sum provided in this bill. There is no statute law authorizing the appropriation in the bill at all—nothing but the existing law of the appropriation bill, which is the prevailing law as bearing upon the subject. The amendment is a change of that law, and hence is obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The law of the appropriation bill fixing the salary of a superintendent under such circumstances as this is not such law as is contemplated by the rule, where it provides that no provisions in an appropriation bill shall change existing law. This is manifest, because, if it were so, one Congress could by its appropriation bills bind the acts here for a hundred years on a subject of this kind. It is only where there is existing statute law upon the subject, and that is modified by the appropriation, that it becomes subject to the point of order. That does not exist in the present case, and hence the objection of the gentleman can not be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, one moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided previously upon the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For teachers: For teachers, not to exceed seven hundred and forty in number, including teachers of manual training-schools, to be employed at a rate of compensation not to exceed the rate provided by the present schedule of salaries, and at an average salary not to exceed $670, $495,800; and no increase in salaries paid to teachers in grades now receiving $900 or more except in cases of promotion to fill vacancies occurring before or after the passage of this act and except in salaries to principals of normal, manual-training, and country schools, and no increase in the number of teachers in any of such grades shall be made, and the minimum compensation shall not be less than at the rate of $300 per annum, and the names of and actual compensation paid to each teacher under this provision shall be reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session by the commissioners: Provided, That in assigning salaries to teachers, no discrimination shall be made between male and female teachers employed in the same grade of school and performing a like class of duty.

For teachers of night schools, who may also be teachers in the day schools, $5,000.

For contingent expenses of night schools, $500.

For janitors and care of buildings and grounds: For care of the High-School Building, $1,600; of the Jefferson Building, $1,400; of the Stevens Building, $1,100; of the Franklin Building, $1,100; of the Force, Seaton, Henry, Webster, Gales, Peabody, Wallach, Garnett, Sumner, Analostan, Curtis, and Dennison Buildings, at $900 each; of the Lincoln and Miner Buildings, at $800 each; of the Abbott, John F. Cook, and Randall Buildings, at $700 each; of the Amidon, Addison, Cranch, Morse, Brent, Bannaker, Blair, Wormley, Anthony, Bowen, Maury, Weightman, Bradley, Blake, Carberry, Giddings, Towers, Magruder,

Phelps, and Twining, and eight new eight-room school buildings, at $500 each; of the Mott, Hillsdale, Anacostia, Thompson, and Lovejoy Buildings, at $250 each; of the Mount Pleasant, McCormick, Potomac, Greenleaf, Hamilton Road, Chamberlain, High Street, Montgomery Street, and Threlkeld Buildings, at $165 each; for care of smaller buildings and rented rooms, at a rate not to exceed $18 per annum for the care of each school-room, $5,376; in all, $41,311.

For rent of school buildings and repair shop, $10,000.

For repairs and improvements to school buildings and grounds, $20,000.

For contingent expenses, including furniture, books, stationery, printing, insurance, and other necessary items, $22,500.

For fuel, $24,000.

For the purchase of tools, machinery, material, and apparatus, to be used in connection with instruction in manual training, $10,000.

For furniture for new school buildings, $7,000.

For erection of new school buildings and purchase of sites therefor, as follows: One in third school division, one in fifth school division, one in seventh school division, and one in eighth school division, $140,000: Provided, That no one of the foregoing school buildings shall be constructed with less than eight rooms.

For addition to Washington High School, $40,000.

For erection of colored High-School Building and purchase of site therefor, $60,000.

For erection of buildings and purchase of sites therefor, and for additions to school buildings in sixth school division, as follows: Erection of one eight-room school building and purchase of site therefor; one four-room school building and purchase of site therefor at Hillsdale; one two-room school building and purchase of site therefor at Good Hope; and for additions to the Mott, the Benning's, white, and the Benning's, colored, school buildings, $59,000.

Mr. TAULBEE. In view of the fact that the subsequent paragraph of this bill may be obnoxious to a point of order, I desire now to offer that section as an amendment to this one, with an additional amendment to it, which I want to send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The amendment would not be in order until the section shall have been read, and there may be no point of order made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa (to Mr. TAULBEE). Reserve the right to offer the amendment.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

In line 13, on page 20, amend by adding the words "or through other persons not regular dealers in real estate in the District of Columbia, or through such regular dealers who have not had the property for sale continuously from the date of the passage of this bill, and in no case shall a commission be paid to more than one person or firm, or greater than the usual commission."

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order against the paragraph and the amendment on the ground that it changes existing law. I believe that the purchase of real estate by the commissioners of this District should be carefully regulated by law, and that it should be done in accordance with some rules formulated by act of Congress.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a point of order. I have no objection to a discussion of the merits of this amendment and the paragraph; but I would call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] to the fact that he is proceeding to a discussion of the merits of this question when he only makes the point of order. Now, I have nothing to say against his point of order provided my amendment shall be considered. My amendment is offered to the paragraph following that read by the Clerk.

Mr. ATKINSON. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's point is well taken, but as my motives were questioned a little while ago——

Mr. TAULBEE. Not by me.

Mr. ATKINSON. I concluded to say this upon the floor, that I disclaim any improper motives in making this point of order.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not think that was necessary.

Mr. ATKINSON. Perhaps not with you. I do not say it was. The point of order I make is that this paragraph, on page 20, beginning at line 11 and ending at line 13, and the amendment are not germane to an appropriation bill, and that they change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order upon the amendmennt of the gentleman from Kentucky or on the paragraph?

Mr. ATKINSON. On the paragraph first.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I understand this paragraph had been read and the amendment offered to the next paragraph, and I make the point of order that it is too late to make this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] was endeavoring to make the point of order, and that he was on his feet at the time for that purpose when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] offered his amendment.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I did not understand the gentleman to make any objection until the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] had offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought at first that the gentleman had waited until the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] had been offered, but is now under the impression that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] was trying to get the floor and make the point of order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I expected to make the point of order when the gentleman from Kentucky offered his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late to make it on the paragraph. The gentleman, however, makes the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE].

Mr. TAULBEE. If the paragraph goes in, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania expect to make the point of order on my amendment?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I think I have the right to make the point of order against the paragraph as amended, if the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky shall prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not like to answer that question until the point shall have been made, because the amendment is likely to be discussed.

Mr. ATKINSON. If my point of order is held to be too late on the paragraph, I do not wish to make the point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the impression made upon the Chair was, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania was endeavoring to obtain the floor to make the point of order when the amendment was offered. The Chair was so informed by gentlemen around the desk, and on that state of facts would not try to cut the gentleman off; but as the gentleman has declared that it was his "intention" to do so, being a matter of intention, the Chair does not feel it fair to admit the point of order now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on the subject of the amendment.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Iowa if he desires to occupy the time in opposing or supporting the amendment?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I will oppose it for the purpose of making some remarks.

Mr. TAULBEE. If you are going to consume the time in favor of the amendment, it might put me in a little awkward attitude.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the provision under consideration is as follows: "That hereafter the commissioners, in making purchases of sites for schools or other purposes, shall do so without the employment of agents." Then comes the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE]. Now, in justice to the commissioners, I want to offer a few observations on this subject. It came to my attention, as it came to the attention of other gentlemen, that there was discussion in the press indicating that in the purchase of these sites for public buildings there was something wrong, that agents were buying property, at, for instance, $5,000, and then selling it to the District at $6,000, or at some advance; the impression being given that the man who bought first from the owner took the property in his own name and then sold it through the commissioners to the District and made a profit which should have gone to the benefit of the District.

I offered an amendment myself in the Committee on Appropriations for the purpose of requiring these purchases to be made directly by the commissioners and to cut off any such intermediate agencies. Afterwards the commissioners came before us and assured us that no such system obtained, or had obtained, in their administration of the District affairs; that in no instance had the purchase been made by A acting as an agent for the commissioners and the title passed to him, and then the property conveyed to the District. They said that that had not been their system at all. They stated, however, that they had employed agents to obtain information as to what sites they could buy for school purposes. They found it difficult, they said, to get property when it was known that the purchases were to be made for school purposes. For instance, A, owning a piece of land, might be perfectly willing to sell it to B, or to the District, provided it was not to be used for a school-house, but if it was to be used for a school-house he would not sell it.

The commissioners said they were compelled sometimes to look up these pieces of property without letting the public know, or without letting the party who might have the property for sale know, that it was intended to be used for school-house purposes. But the main point I want to impress upon the House is that the fact, or the supposed fact, which was in my mind when I offered the amendment, and the idea which controlled us in putting the amendment into the bill, was that two sales were made in these cases before the property went to the District, and we wanted to prevent that.

There is nothing in the provision which has just been ruled upon and which stands in the bill so far that will prevent the employment of agents to obtain all the information that is required. It does not provide for the employment of a man to draw the deed, or of a notary to take the acknowledgment, or for any other incident to the main matter; but the object of this proviso is that when the mind of the party owning the real estate is to meet the mind of the representative of the District to complete the contract, that final culminating act shall be between the other party and the commissioners without the employment of an intermediary. I asked the commissioners to make a statement of what their method was in purchasing these sites, inasmuch as it had been a subject of discussion in the public press, and, in pursuance of that request I have had handed to me a statement, which I now ask the Clerk to read for the information of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the purchase of school sites the commissioners have always found it best, for many reasons, and principally because by so doing they can purchase the most eligible sites upon the best terms, to make such purchases with the assistance of some one who has had experience in real-estate dealings.

In purchasing the sites for which appropriations were made by the last Congress and by the present Congress at its last session, the practice mentioned has been pursued. There being no fund provided for the employment of an agent, there has been no such employment or appointment in the strict sense of that term, that is, no one has been engaged with a promise of compensation to make purchases of sites for the public-school buildings. It being impossible for many reasons beside the reason of policy, for the commissioners to give the personal attention required in the selection of such sites, and the ascertainment of proper parties to whom application was to be made for purchase, it being frequently necessary, in order to obtain the quantity of ground needed for a site, to purchase several lots, and to that end to apply to several owners, and it being the case often that guardians of infants and trustees in charge of estates stood in the place of such owners, recourse has been had to men versed in real-estate matters to do the work required. Of course, such men could not be expected to render such services without recompense, and as the commissioners had no authority to make that recompense, such persons when so used had to look to the vendor of the lot selected for payment of whatever the services rendered were worth.

How this payment was effected the commissioners could not know. It was sufficient that the property was what was wanted for the purposes of the public school provided for, was free from incumbrances, presented a good title, and that the price asked was fair and reasonable. All of these requisites have been carefully scrutinized, and the assistance of the best advice resorted to by the commissioners. The location of the site with reference to its fitness for school purposes is determined upon by the trustees and superintendent of public schools; it is inspected as to matters of grade, shape, size, and character of foundation by the inspector of buildings of the District; the vendor furnishes an abstract of title which has to be approved by the attorney for the District, and executes a deed approved by the same officer. When this has all been done the purchase money is paid to the party who by the abstract of title or some other satisfactory evidence is shown to be the owner of record. What he does with this money the commissioners have no means of knowing, and it does not concern them what amount he pays to any one for effecting the sale.

The order pursued in making the purchase is as follows: The portion of the school district where it is deemed best that the school shall be located is designated by the authorities having the matter relating to schools in their charge, and their selectfon is signified to the board of commissioners or to the member of that board having the schools in charge. This commissioner, together with the trustee of the division in question and the superintendent of schools, then examines the plats of squares and lots in and about the location designated, and selects such as are deemed most appropriate. The assistance of an expert in real-estate matters is then called in, and his assistance invoked to secure the best possible site on the most advantageous terms. Out of the lots reported by him a selection is made, an offer in writing is obtained, giving price, etc., and if thought proper, is submitted to the board of commissioners; reference is made to the inspector of buildings, and if a satisfactory report by that officer, after formal inspection, is made, the offer is accepted. Then follows the abstract of title, deed, and payment of the money.

All of the papers mentioned above are filed with the accounting officer of the Treasury Department, and form a part of the voucher upon which the payment of the purchase money is made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I gladly give opportunity for this statement of the commissioners in connection with this subject to be heard in the House, and I desire to say further that in offering this amendment, or in incorporating it in the District appropriation bill, there was no purpose whatever to reflect in any way upon the integrity or the character of the commissioners. But, seeing discussion touching this matter of the purchase of sites, a discussion which began after our bill was formulated by the subcommittee and too late for us to investigate the matter, we thought it safe not only for the District and for Congress, but also for the commissioners themselves, to put in the proviso which is here incorporated, and which, as I have already said, was in no sense intended to reflect on the District government.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I can not understand that the document just read by the Clerk has anything to do with the merit of this amendment. I am very sorry, indeed, that this discussion of the transactions which have been had during the last few months is brought up in connection with the consideration of this paragraph. I am not surprised, however, in view of the fact that an effort has been made to investigate these matters, and in view of the concessions made in the paper just read, to find that the District commissioners should attempt to forestall an investigation. I saw the articles published in the papers with reference to these purchases, and I must say that I read them with a great deal of incredulity. I noticed, however, in the Evening Star of a week ago last Friday, an article purporting to state the commissioners' side of the question, and, taking for granted that that article contained the truth, I say that the transactions had through the persons employed by the commissioners amount to an offense against the law—constitute a crime, really—and I can not see that the situation is made any better as explained by the document just read from the Clerk's desk. Now, am I to understand the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] as meaning to say that the commissioners have agreed to pay a greater price for these sites thus purchased than was asked by the owners of the property if it was not to be used for school purposes?

If so, I maintain that the persons who have reaped the profits of this transaction have done so by deceiving and defrauding those affected by the purchase—the owners of the adjacent property. I would not be a party to any such transaction. It is a breach of faith, a breach of propriety, on the part of any public officer to be instrumental in the purchase of property through any such strategem or by any such method as would induce the owners of that property to accept a less price than they would if they knew for what purpose the property was to be used.

Now, all this explanation of what has transpired has nothing to do with the merits of my amendment or the paragraph to which it relates. The amendment I have offered proposes simply that if these purchases are to be made of any persons other than the owners of the real estate, they must be made through regular dealers in real estate in this city, and in that event these dealers must have had control of the property from the date of the passage of this bill; and it is further provided that no commission shall be paid except the usual and ordinary commission, which I think a highly proper provision in the event that the commissioners are compelled to purchase this property through the mediation of real-estate dealers. I believe the amendment I have offered will obviate the recurrence of such transactions as have transpired or which are said to have transpired during the current fiscal year.

I am willing that the merits of the resolution which I have introduced shall be discussed when it comes up for consideration; but if members of this House are to be induced to believe that no transaction which the commissioners may have had with real-estate agents or other persons in this District is of such a character as ought to be investigated, then it would be proper to save the time of this House by forestalling that investigation and smothering that resolution or those resolutions before the committees where they are now pending. That is one question and will be considered when it comes up. This is another question. I believe that the gentleman from Iowa will agree that my amendment, offered to this paragraph of the bill, will obviate these occurrences in the future, will prevent any such transactions hereafter——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend pro forma by striking out the last two words. I do not believe the gentleman from Iowa would want to cover up any transaction of any public officer which would look like "crookedness;" and I am sorry to see the District commissioners, for whom I have a high personal regard, sending documents to the House of Representatives in anticipation of an investigation which is as far remote as it is possible, probably, for an investigation to be, where a committee has a resolution for consideration and it is not privileged. But this investigation of what has been done heretofore will come on soon enough. I promise the gentleman from Iowa that I will pursue it until the good conduct of the commissioners is clearly demonstrated by an ascertainment of the facts, or until their bad faith is exposed by an investigation of these transactions. Now, I do not understand the gentleman from Iowa to oppose my amendment. I think it would better accomplish the purpose which the committee seems to have in view.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by striking out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will consider the pending pro forma amendment as withdrawn, and the gentleman from Iowa will be regarded as renewing it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not quite understand the line of the remarks of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE]. This may be because I have been ignorant of the fact that he has introduced a resolution to investigate somebody. I regret that I do not keep track of his movements so closely as to be "posted" on all such matters. I confess I was ignorant of the fact that the gentleman had introduced any resolution on this subject.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman had been in his seat this morning, he would have known that I did introduce a resolution and asked for its immediate consideration, but objection was raised by the gentleman from Ohio, and on motion of another member it was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Well, Mr. Chairman, I had no knowledge of the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. TAULBEE. Another similar resolution was introduced last Tuesday.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I trust the gentleman will allow me to finish my remarks. I knew nothing of the gentleman's resolution. I did not know he was after anybody's "scalp." My first knowledge of this matter was obtained from his remarks just now. So that, so far as my remarks are concerned, I want him to understand distinctly that I am not a party to any effort to "forestall" investigation or "cover up" anybody's transactions.

I stated that I offered the amendment to this bill which required these transactions to be direct between the property-owner and the commissioners; but I desired it distinctly understood that the amendment was not offered as any reflection upon the commissioners. I have not been able to follow the controversy in the newspapers at all; I do not know what their charges are. I stated in my opening remarks that the committee had made no investigation, but we put this provision in as a safety-valve in order that, in case of any difficulty, everything might be kept in a safe channel. I stated that in opposing the gentleman's amendment I did so for the purpose of being heard. I do not know that I shall object to its adoption. I want everything made as clear and strong as it can be in order that all proper interests may be safe and that these transactions shall be clean. I have no scintilla of information to indicate that they have not been clean so far as the commissioners are concerned; but learning that there were charges and counter-charges and defenses, I offered this amendment to the original bill.

Now, so far as this statement which was read by request goes of this being an effort on the part of the commissioners to forestall investigation, that can not be so.

Mr. TAULBEE rose.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Just wait until I get through. In view of what had appeared in the papers, when the commissioners came before us I asked them in reference to their mode of doing business. After it was given verbally I then asked them to reduce it to writing, and they brought it in here this morning. It, therefore, was not made to forestall any resolution of investigation, but was done at the suggestion of a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

I did not know about the gentleman's resolution; I suppose, however, it is in the interest of good government. If so, I will say to him that if these commissioners have been doing wrong I will follow him in curtailing their power to do so.

I wish gentlemen to understand that this amendment offered by myself was not intended as a reflection on the commissioners, and the statement I had read this morning is in no sense offered in order to forestall any investigation. If the gentleman has offered a resolution for an investigation it will of course have to take its chances. If the gentleman has any question to ask me I will yield to him to ask it. If he has no question to ask I will yield the floor.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, while I have no question to ask the gentleman from Iowa, yet I wish to remark that if he had read the RECORD of last Wednesday he would have known that my resolution of investigation was introduced in the House last Tuesday. And certainly that was ample notice to the country of an effort to investigate.

But I have no desire to discuss the merits of the resolution of investigation. Neither do I have any prejudice against the commissioners, nor do I desire to cast any reflection upon them.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to be heard in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire now to be recognized in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will take my time and yield it to the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York takes the floor and yields his time to the gentleman from Kentucky, and he will proceed.

Mr. TAULBEE. Now, I want it to be understood that I cast no reflection upon the commissioners; but I think it is apparent, and it will be demonstrated when the examination of this transaction can be had by this House or by the committee, that most strenuous efforts and struggles to smother it have been made. I make that prediction without any desire to reflect on the gentleman or any other member of this House.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman where he gets his information?

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not desire to reflect on the gentleman in that particular; I will wait for future events to demonstrate if the proposed investigation should be entered upon.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I know nothing about the resolution to which he refers.

Mr. TAULBEE. Do not take up my time; the gentleman has already said that. If the gentleman had attended to the proceedings this morning he would know all about it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. When your resolution comes up for consideration I will vote then as I think right.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I say the resolution I have introduced is not the only evidence of such transactions in the nature of taking the people's money, and taking it wrongfully, by certain men. If $711, as appears by the newspaper report, has been taken by a man not a dealer in real estate, if one single cent has been taken from the taxes collected from the people, and which I have helped to make up, then I take it that man should be compelled to pay that money back.

If a profit of $1,100 in the purchase of another site for a school building has been had by an individual who has been designated by the commissioners to stand between the commissioners and the property-owners, I maintain that he should be compelled to pay that amount back. These are some of the purposes that I had in mind, and explain in part the objects sought to be attained by the investigation proposed. If these transactions never occurred, the ascertainment of that fact will only operate to vindicate the commissioners from the charge which the newspapers of the country have made against them in connection with these purchases; and I would be much more delighted to find them vindicated than to find that their transactions had been other than clean and straight.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 10, noes 7.

So the amendment was adopted.

Mr. BREWER. I now raise the point of order against the clause as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, as it is too late to make it now.

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to strike out the paragraph as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. ATKINSON. I do.

The objection to this paragraph and the amendment also, or to the amended paragraph, is that it does not go far enough. I believe that no officer of the United States, here or elsewhere, should be permitted to purchase real estate at private sale, but that on the contrary there should be a general law in this District providing a means to take private property for public uses when it is needed; and that, in my judgment, is the only way such property should be taken. This paragraph and the amendment do not go to the extent of forbidding the purchase of real estate at private sale. The bill provides no machinery for the condemnation of real estate needed for the District purposes, but on the contrary it in effect admits the propriety of the purchase of real estate by the commissioners in person, and not by agents or any other person.

I believe that the commissioners of the District of Columbia are men of the very highest character. I should not utter a word on this floor that would impugn their character. But it seems to me that they are permitted here by that provision to exercise a very dangerous power, and one which might be used improperly, and they are always open to censure for doing such things as it is alleged they have done; that is, the purchase of private property whether through agents or not. On that account I think we should strip the bill of this paragraph, and that some carefully considered measure should be presented from the appropriate committee pointing out specifically just how such property may be acquired for District purposes.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out the paragraph as amended, there were, on a division—ayes 18, noes 27.

So the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the plans and specifications for each of said buildings, and for all other buildings provided for in this act, shall be prepared by the inspector of buildings of the District of Columbia, and shall be approved by the Architect of the Capitol and the commissioners of the District, and said buildings shall be constructed by the commissioners in conformity therewith.

FOR METROPOLITAN POLICE.

For one major and superintendent, $2,700; one captain, $1,800; two lieutenants, inspectors, at $1,500 each; one chief clerk who shall also be property clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $900; four surgeons for the police and fire departments, at $480 each; for additional compensation for privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $1,440, or so much thereof as may be necessary; nine lieutenants, at $1,320 each; twenty-two sergeants, at $1,140 each; one hundred and forty-five privates, class 1, at $900 each; one hundred and forty privates, class 2, at $1,080 each; nineteen station-keepers, at $720 each; nine laborers, at $480 each; one messenger, $700; one messenger, $500; one major and superintendent, mounted, $240; one captain, mounted, $240; twenty-five lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; one van-driver, $360; one ambulance-driver, $480; one assistant ambulance-driver, at $300; five drivers of patrol-wagons, at $360 each; in all, $362,340.

For rent of police headquarters and station at Anacostia, $1,200; for fuel, $2,000; repairs to stations, $1,800; miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including stationery, books, telegraphing, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs thereto, beds, bed-clothing, insignia of office, purchase and care of horses, police equipments and repairs of same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, ambulance, and patrol wagons, and expenses incurred in prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary items, $14,000; remodeling station-house and for building for cells and lodging-rooms, third precinct, $7,000; stable for horse and patrol-wagon, and for grading yard and making gateway, third precinct, $2,500; remodeling station-house and for building for cells and lodging-rooms, fifth precinct, $7,000; purchase of lot adjoining fifth precinct station-house, $2,500; police signal and telephone system in fifth, seventh, or eighth precincts, including, horse, wagon, harness, and other necessary items, $4,500; for stables to accommodate the stock and vehicles for said system, $2,500; twelve additional stations for patrol service in sixth and ninth precincts, $2,400; for setting patrol boxes, $200; horse, harness, wagon, and mattress, $675; electrical apparatus for ninth precinct, $250; ambulance, $300; horse, $250; harness, $65; in all, $49,140.

FOR THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

For one chief engineer, $1,800; one fire-marshal, $1,000; one clerk, $900; two assistant chief engineers, at $1,200 each; ten foremen, at $1,000 each; eight engineers, at $1,000 each; eight firemen, at $840 each; two tillermen, at $840 each; eleven hostlers, at $840 each; sixty-eight privates, at $800 each; six watchmen, at $600 each; one veterinary surgeon for all departments of the District government, $400; in all, $100,140.

For repairs to engine-houses, $2,000; repairs to apparatus and new appliances, $3,000; purchase of hose, $3,000; for fuel, $2,000; purchase of horses, $3,000; forage, $5,500; purchase of one chemical engine, $2,250; contingent expenses, including office-rent, horseshoeing, furniture, fixtures, washing, oil, medical and stable supplies, harness, blacksmithing, labor, gas, and other necessary items, $7,500; in all, $28,250.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE SERVICE.

For one superintendent, $1,600; one electrician, $1,200; two telegraph operators, at $1,000 each; three telephone operators, at $600 each; one expert repairman, $960; two repairmen, at $720 each; two laborers, at $400 each; in all, $9,800.

For general supplies, repairs, new batteries and battery supplies, telephone rental, wire, extension of the telegraph and telephone service, repairs of lines, purchase of poles, insulators, brackets, pins, hardware, cross-arms, gas, fuel, ice, record-books, stationery, printing, office-rent, purchase of horses and harness, washing, blacksmithing, forage, extra labor, new boxes, and other necessary items, $7,000.

That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not hereafter permit or authorize any additional telegraph, telephone, electric lighting, or other wires to be erected or maintained on or over any of the streets or avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, and all laws or parts of laws which may be in conflict with this provision are hereby repealed: Provided, That the commissioners of the District may, hereafter, under such reasonable conditions as they may prescribe, authorize the wires of any existing telegraph, telephone, or electric light company now operating in the District of Columbia, or any electric light company with whom contract may be made for the public lighting, to be laid under any street, alley, highway, foot-way, or sidewalk in the District, whenever in their judgment the public interest may require the exercise of such authority, such privileges as may be granted hereunder to be revocable at the will of Congress without compensation.

Mr. ATKINSON. I make the point of order against the last paragraph, beginning on page 24, line 21, and ending with line 12 on page 25.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. ATKINSON. That it changes existing law.

Mr. CLEMENTS. This is undeniably a new provision, but in the opinion of the committee it is a clause in the interest of the public comfort and safety, which I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not see proper to seek to have ruled out on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

For one health officer, $3,000; six sanitary inspectors, at $1,200 each; two food inspectors, at $1,200 each; one inspector of marine products, $1,200; for one clerk, $1,800; one clerk, $1,400; two clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk, $1,000; one messenger, $540; one pound-master, $1,200; laborers, at not exceeding $30 per month, $1,440; one ambulance driver, $480; and for contingent expenses, including books, stationery, fuel, rent, repairs to pound and vehicles, forage, meat for dogs, horseshoeing, painting, and other necessary items, $4,000; collection and removal of garbage, $20,000; in all, $48,060.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I make the point of order against that provision, that it changes existing law. I mean that portion of it fixing the amount at $20,000 for the removal of garbage, in line 4 on page 26.

Mr. CLEMENTS. That changes no law. It is merely a question of the amount that shall be allowed.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I invoke the ruling of the Chair enforced lately when I desired to increase the salary of the superintendent of schools.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

COURTS.

For the police court: For one judge, $3,000; one clerk, $2,000; one deputy clerk, $1,000; two bailiffs, at $3 per day each; one messenger, $900; one doorkeeper, $540; United States marshal's fees, $1,400; contingent expenses, including compensation of a justice of the peace acting as judge of the police court during the absence of said judge, not exceeding $300; books, stationery, fuel, ice, gas, and other necessary items, $800; for witness fees, $3,000; in all, $14,518.

Defending suits in claims: For necessary expenses in examination of witnesses and procuring evidence in the matter of claims against the District of Columbia in the Departments, and defending suits against said District in the Court of Claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $2,500.

Writs of lunacy: To defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo, and commitments made thereunder, in all cases of indigent insane persons committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia under the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1877, $2,000.

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, exclusive of water bonds, $1,213,947.97.

MISCELLANEOUS EXPENSES.

For rent of District offices, $3,600; for general advertising, $3,000; for books, and repairs of books for register of wills, $200; to enable the register of wills to complete the assorting, briefing, indexing, and filing the records of his office, and reproducing the administration and guardian dockets, prior to 1879, including clerical service and purchase of file-holders and books, $1,000; printing, checks, damages, forage, care of horses not otherwise provided for, horseshoeing, fuel, ice, gas, repairs, insurance, rebinding and repairing records, and other general necessary expenses of District offices, $7,000; in all, $14,800.

EMERGENCY FUND.

To be expended only in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, calamity by flood or fire, and of like character, and in all other cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for, $5,000: Provided, That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any of such articles above the market price shall be rejected.

FOR REFORMATORIES AND PRISONS.

For Washington Asylum: For one intendant, $1,200; one matron, $600; one visiting physician, $1,080; one resident physician, $480; one clerk, $600; one baker, $420; one overseer, $800; five overseers, at $600 each; one engineer, $600; one assistant engineer, $350; one second assistant engineer, $300; five watchmen, at $365 each; one blacksmith, $300; one hostler and ambulance-driver, $240; one female keeper at workhouse, at $300; one female keeper at workhouse, at $180; two cooks, at $120 each; three cooks, at $60 each; one nurse, $180; four nurses, at $60 each; one teacher, $300; in all, $13,415.

For contingent expenses, including improvements and repairs, provisions, fuel, forage, lumber, shoes, clothing, dry goods, hardware, medicines, repairs to tools, cars, tracks, steam-heating and cooking apparatus, painting, and other necessary items and services, $40,000.

For Reform School: For one superintendent, $1,500; assistant superintendent, $900; teachers and assistant teachers, $3,500; matron of school, $600; three matrons of families, at $180 each; superintendent of chair-shop, $660; farmer, $480; engineer, $396; baker, cook, shoemaker, and tailor, at $300 each; two dining-room servants, seamstress, chambermaid, and laundress, at $144 each; florist, $360; watchmen, not exceeding five in number, $1,140; secretary and treasurer of board of trustees, $600; in all $12,596.

For support of inmates, including groceries, flour, feed, meats, dry goods, leather and shoes, gas, fuel, hardware, table ware, furniture, farm implements and seeds, harness and repairs to same, fertilizers, books, stationery, plumbing, painting and glazing, medicines, medical attendance, stock, fencing, repairs to buildings, and other necessary items, including compensation, not exceeding $900, for additional labor or services, and for transportation and other necessary expenses incident to securing suitable homes for discharged boys, not exceeding $500, all under the control of the commissioners, $26,000.

For grading, draining, and permanently improving grounds, $600.

For coal-vaults, $1,000.

For the Industrial Home School: For maintenance of inmates and salaries of superintendent and employés, the promotion of industries, and general repairs, and other necessary expenses, all under the control of the commissioners, $10,500.

Transportation of paupers and prisoners: For transportation of paupers and conveying prisoners to the workhouse, $1,000.

For support of the insane:

For support of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane in said District, as provided in sections 4844 and 4850 of the Revised Statutes, $85,000.

For charities:

For relief of the poor, $15,000.

For the support and maintenance of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, $15,000.

For the Women's Christian Association, $4,000.

For the National Association for Destitute Colored Women and Children, $9,000.

To enable said association to care for colored foundlings, $1,000.

For the Children's Hospital, $5,000.

For St. Ann's Infant Asylum, $6,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 18, on page 31, insert "to complete the erection of additional accommodations for the use of St. Rose's Industrial School, $5,000."

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of the Church Orphanage Association of St. John's Parish of the District of Columbia, $1,500.

For the Washington Hospital for Foundlings, for maintenance, $7,000.

Association for Works of Mercy, for purchase of lot, $3,000; for maintenance and repairs, $2,500; in all, $5,500.

For the National Homeopathic Hospital Association of Washington, D. C., for maintenance, $5,000.

For maintenance of the National Temperance Home, $1,500.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 32, in line 7, strike out the word "one" and insert "two."

Mr. CANNON. This is the provision for the maintenance of the National Temperance Home, and increases the amount to $2,500. I think there is no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the several institutions included under the heads of asylums, reformatories, industrial schools, and charities named in the annual appropriation acts for the support of the District of Columbia shall report to the commissioners of the District, on or before the 1st day of October of each year, a full and detailed account of receipts and expenditures, and all their operations, and said commissioners shall transmit the same to Congress at the beginning of each regular session, with such suggestions and recommendations as they may deem pertinent, together with estimates for maintaining the same.

WATER DEPARTMENT.

The following sums are hereby appropriated to carry on the operations of the water department, to be paid wholly from its revenues, namely:

For one chief clerk, $1,500; two clerks at $1,400 each; one clerk, $1,000; one superintendent, $1,600; one draughtsman, $1,500; one messenger, $600; one inspector, at $3 per day, $936; six inspectors, at $900 each; contingent expenses, including books, blanks, stationery, forage, advertising, printing, and other necessary items and services, $3,000; in all, $18,366.

For engineers and firemen, fuel, material for high service, in Washington and Georgetown, pipe distribution to high and low service, including public hydrants, fire-plugs, material and labor, repairing and laying new mains, and lowering mains, $86,000.

For interest and sinking fund on water-stock bonds, $44,610.

For interest on account of increasing the water supply, as provided in the act of July 15, 1882, $33,399.91.

For sinking fund on account of increase of water supply, under act of July 15, 1882, $53,015.73.

SEC. 2. That said commissioners shall not make requisitions upon the appropriations from the Treasury of the United States for a larger amount during the fiscal year 1890 than they make on the appropriations arising from the revenues, including drawback certificates, of said District.

SEC. 3. That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed and authorized to apply such portion as may be deemed expedient of any surplus which may remain at the close of the fiscal year 1889, and of each fiscal year thereafter, of the general revenues of the District of Columbia in excess of one-half of those appropriations, payable equally out of the revenues of the District and the United States, to the payment of the balance yet remaining unpaid of the debt of the District of Columbia created by the act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes:" Provided, That the amount of said surplus shall first be reported to the commissioners of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States by the First Comptroller of the Treasury when called upon to do so.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I raise the point of order against the third section, on page 35, that it is new legislation.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that, and that he will hear me one moment. This is identical with a provision passed by the House unanimously at the last session to provide against the accumulation of the surplus. There is a debt bearing a rate of 3 per cent. interest which the people of the District have to pay. It seems bad policy to allow this surplus to lie and accumulate while the District is paying this rate of interest. I think it is perfectly safe to say that there will be ample money to carry on all the business of the District, and let this money go to in part liquidate this debt. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order. The provision was passed upon unanimously by the House at the last session, and was lost in the Senate.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I raised the point of order, Mr. Chairman, upon the ground that the debt which this is intended to provide for was created in 1882 for the express purpose of providing water facilities for this city; and it was provided in that act that the debt which the District of Columbia incurred in making these improvements should be paid in twenty-five years, by regular installments until paid, out of the surplus water rents which were received from those citizens of this District who enjoyed these additional facilities. The money which will be appropriated under this section, if it pass, is raised by taxation from the property-holders in the District of Columbia. There are many people here who did not enjoy any of the water facilities and other improvements that have been made.

It is unfair to them to take the money which has been raised by taxation through a levy of the District commissioners and apply it to the payment of a debt which was created for the establishment of waterworks which are enjoyed by a portion of the people only; and it is on that ground that I raise the point of order. I believe my friend from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] does not contend that it is not objectionable to the rule. I have raised the point of order because there are special provisions under the law for paying this debt in a regular, orderly way, with the rents for the water which are subject to the debts for these water-works, and by which the debt will be paid by those for whose benefit it has been incurred; whereas, if this bill passes with this provision in it, there are a number of people outside of the city of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, who will pay their taxes on the liquidation of this debt, while they are receiving no benefit from it; and it was not contemplated in the original act that they should pay any portion of it.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I submit that it is not subject to a point of order. It is public money belonging to the District. This is an appropriation bill, and it is simply an appropriation of money for the extinguishment of a debt. There are other appropriations in the bill for the sinking fund. This simply provides for the partial payment of another debt. It does not interfere with the continuation of the payment of the balance of that debt by whatever is left after the payment of this surplus.

There is provided by existing law a regular sinking fund. It is in addition to that, and is simply to appropriate the surplus money of the District of Columbia for the payment of this debt. I think at the beginning of the fiscal year there was to the credit of the District of Columbia over $700,000, and at the end of this fiscal year there will probably be not less than $1,000,000 of idle surplus. What does the gentleman propose to do with this money?

Mr. HEMPHILL. This section provides—

That the Treasurer of the United States is hereby directed and authorized to apply such portion as may be deemed expedient of any surplus which may remain at the close of the fiscal year 1889, and of each fiscal year thereafter, of the general revenues of the District of Columbia in excess of one-half of those appropriations, etc.

Now, this bill purports to be a bill making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes. Well, now, if this is something that has not already been provided for by law, then it can be enacted in this bill; otherwise it can not.

The rule expressly provides "that no appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order in any amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law." Now, it can hardly be contended that there is any general law upon the subject of authorizing the diversion of the surplus money in the hands of the commissioners for the payment of a debt that the people of this District owe. If there is such a law, then this section is surplusage, and ought to be stricken out; but if there is no such law, then it is substantially new legislation, and can not be carried on an appropriation bill. If the gentleman desires to remedy the effect of an accumulating surplus, and if there is more money in the hands of the District commissioners than is necessary, they can lessen expenditures and not divert money which has been raised for one purpose to the payment of a debt which is already specifically provided for, and by other people, who are not receiving the benefits of that debt.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to say a word on this point of order.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Does the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] think it is not good Democratic doctrine to pay out the surplus in discharge of honest indebtedness?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes; but not out of money that has been provided for another purpose.

Mr. CANNON. I would like to say a word about this point of order, and, to make myself understood in saying that I think that substantially this section is not subject to the point of order, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that some years ago it was thought to be necessary that there should be an extension of the water system of the District. The District had not the money to pay for it, and an appropriation was made from the general Treasury of the United States, by way of advance to the District, to make these improvements. Also, it was provided, as I recollect, that the water rent should be used to make a sinking fund looking towards the payment of this debt, or this advance of money by the United States made from the Federal Treasury.

The money was advanced by virtue of that appropriation and the water system was extended. As the years have rolled around there has been accumulated from taxation, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] has said, a surplus amounting, as stated by my colleague on the committee, from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], to about $700,000. This constitutes a fund from which some gentlemen —not the mass of the people of the District, but various special interests—are desirous of having liberal appropriations made, which, in our judgment, are not judicious. Now, it occurs to me that it is competent, as the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] has said, to appropriate money from year to year to pay the debts of the District. This provision does not propose to change the law which levies a water rent for this service; by no manner of means. It simply takes the money in the Treasury and appropriates it to the payment of a debt which the District owes.

I am inclined to think that possibly there is one clause or one provision in this section which may render it subject to a point of order, and if the Chair should so hold, then I hope my colleague from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS] will offer the amendment free from that provision. It is to be found in lines 16 and 17: "and of each fiscal year thereafter." This is an annual appropriation bill, providing for the expenditure of money for the carrying on of the affairs of the District and the payment of the debts of the District for this fiscal year; and perhaps this provision is subject to the criticism which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HEMPHILL] makes upon it, that it proposes to make a permanent appropriation of the surplus, not only for this year, but for future years. But I think that if the Chair will examine the question closely he will find that, with the modification I have suggested, the provision is unquestionably in order.

If it were proper, I would be glad to discuss the merits of this proposition. The objection of the gentleman from South Carolina does not commend itself to me when he says that this fund was raised by general taxation and that this is a proposition to relieve people who consume water from the burden of paying for it. I would reply that this surplus is in the Treasury and not drawing interest, and that this debt is owing by the District, and that it is in the line of good legislation and of economy that this $700,000 should be applied to the payment of that debt, as it may be, and the payment of interest stopped, instead of being allowed to constitute a fund to beget extravagant expenditures, which are not intended for the benefit of the many in the District, but for the benefit of the few, who often seek appropriations, as I am compelled to believe, for the purpose of advancing property in limited sections of the District rather than for the general good.

I believe that the Chair, upon a full and fair examination, will see that this clause is not subject to the point of order, and if the question is evenly balanced in the mind of the Chair, then I trust that, in the line of economy and in the interest of sound public policy, he will throw the doubt, if there be any, in favor of the clause and not against it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I concur most heartily in what the gentleman from Illinois says about the desirableness of economy in public expenditures. We are all great professors of political economy here.

Mr. CANNON. But you do not practice it.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Many of us do not always practice what we preach, but I am satisfied that if the Chair will examine this section he will find that not only are the words referred to by the gentleman from Illinois objectionable under this clause of Rule XXI to which I have referred, but that the whole provision is so. The gentleman has referred to the fact that this is not new legislation, or would not be if these words were stricken out, but the rule provides for two things which can not be put into an appropriation bill. One is an appropriation for an expenditure not previously authorized, and the other is new legislation. Now, if this expenditure has been previously authorized, this appropriation of the surplus to the payment of this debt, then if the gentleman from Illinois can put his hand on the law which authorizes it, that will settle the question.

Mr. CLEMENTS. If the gentleman will yield to me, I will have that law read now.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there is such a statute, it settles the question.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will ask the Clerk to read what I send to the desk, a part of the act of 1885 relative to this debt.

The Clerk read as follows:

And that the Treasurer of the United States, as sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia, shall, after paying the interest of the funded indebtedness of the District, including the interest on the water bonds, out of the combined funds, invest the balance thereof on account of the several sinking funds in such bonds of the District of Columbia, including the water bonds, as he may deem most advantageous. * * *

To pay the interest on one-half of all moneys already advanced and that may be advanced to July 1, 1885, by the United States, excepting the amount advanced for constructing fish-ways under the provisions of an act approved July 15, 1882, entitled "An act to increase the water supply of the city of Washington, and for other purposes," $30,000, or so much thereof as may be required, said amount to be drawn from the Treasury only on the requisition of the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Has not the Clerk made a mistake in reading what has just been read?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I will ask the Clerk to read the residue of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to include in their annual estimates for the expenses of the water department an estimate to be made by the Treasurer of the United States of the amount necessary to refund in not less than twenty-five annual installments one-half of the amount advanced by the United States under the said act of July 15, 1882, with interest on said amount at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, computed annually on the principal sum remaining unpaid, in all $186,349.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I desire to call attention to the fact that there is an existing law creating this debt; the money was advanced by the Government to pay the whole expense originally; and up to this time all that has been expended has come out of the general Treasury of the United States. After a portion of the money had been expended, the act from which the Clerk has just read was passed in order to secure a repayment of the District's half of that indebtedness. It was provided that this repayment should be made in not less than twenty-five annual installments, and that the commissioners of the District should make estimates for this purpose. They have made estimates in accordance with that act.

There is existing law by which this debt has been created; there is existing law providing for the payment of the debt in not less than twenty-five annual installments; a portion of those installments have already been paid; there is yet due by the District on that debt about $1,000,000. Now, what law do we contravene when we simply propose in this bill to pay more than the amount required to pay this indebtedness in twenty-five annual installments? Here is a surplus arising under existing law; here is a debt created by existing law, and provision made for its payment. We propose simply in effect an increase of that sinking fund—an application of the surplus to this indebtedness. The Chair will observe that the act simply fixed the minimum number of annual installments; it did not limit the amount which might be paid on this indebtedness at any given time.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Does the gentleman think that the law which has been read covers this case?

Mr. CLEMENTS. I do.

Mr. HEMPHILL. It seems to me to have no application to it. It simply provides, as the Chair will observe, that the Treasurer of the United States shall apply the surplus to the payment of a number of different kinds of bonds. The provision now under discussion undertakes to appropriate the whole surplus to a particular class of bonds.

Mr. CLEMENTS. The law provides for these among others.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Is it not a change of law to take away the discretion of the Treasurer under that statute to apply this money to the payment of a number of different classes of bonds and provide that he shall apply the whole surplus to these specific bonds?

Mr. CLEMENTS. That act simply provides a sinking fund to pay several different debts; and it provides that this indebtedness shall not be paid in less than twenty-five annual installments.

Mr. HEMPHILL. And this provision which you propose to adopt in this bill would take away the right of the Treasurer to apply this surplus to several different kinds of bonds and would make the surplus applicable to a particular class of bonds, not only for this year but for years to come.

Mr. CLEMENTS. Not at all; we provide for all the other bonds provided for in that act. The sinking fund is kept up. We do not propose to interfere in any way with the sinking fund in regard to other indebtedness.

I call attention to the further fact that the existing law does not require this debt to be paid out of any specific revenue, but out of the general revenues of the District.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Upon that point I would like to read to the Chair the language of this bill on page 33:

The following sums are hereby appropriated to carry on the operations of the water department, to be paid wholly from its revenues.

That has been the law as provided in every one of these appropriation bills—that the expenses of the water department are to be paid wholly from the revenues of that department. That was the original plan upon which the department was organized, and it has been followed ever since. This is a change from the original purpose and from the provisions of every preceding appropriation bill as well as from the very appropriation bill which the gentleman is now seeking to put through the House.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me an inquiry right there?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. What is there in the law to prohibit Congress from taking surplus money belonging to the District and appropriating it in payment of the debts which the District owes?

Mr. HEMPHILL. Well, sir, the rule of the House prohibits you from doing that very thing under existing law.

Mr. CANNON. I do not so understand.

Mr. HEMPHILL. If there is to be any appropriation of this money in this way, it must be by a separate act of Congress, not by a provision in a general appropriation bill; because this is not in accordance with any expenditure previously authorized by law.

Mr. CANNON. I submit to the Chair and to the gentleman from South Carolina that here is $700,000 in the District treasury, so to speak, not appropriated to any purpose and subject to appropriation of Congress acting for the District. Now, the District owns the money, and what is there in the law to prevent the appropriation under the rules of the House of that money, now lying idly in the Treasury, to the payment of a debt now due? In other words, the power that made the debt carried with it the power to pay it. As the debt is due, and we have the money to pay it, to my mind, according to the plainest principles of common sense, and I was going to say according to the plainest principles of common honesty, these rules do not mean, and can not be made to mean, that we are prohibited from passing an appropriation to apply the moneys now on hand to the payment of the debt.

Mr. HEMPHILL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that if he had listened to the law which was read by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CLEMENTS], in charge of the bill, he would have learned that this surplus has been already appropriated. If this means anything at all it appropriates it in a different manner to a specific debt.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can not find any rule which prohibits under a general appropriation bill, or anywhere else, the use of idle money toward the payment of a debt already due. Such construction on this or any other rule of the House is to my mind simply absurd.

Mr. HEMPHILL. The gentleman is entitled to his own opinion.

Mr. CANNON. That is my opinion.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Then, according to the gentleman, why could you not appropriate the surplus in the Treasury to the payment of any bonds? Can you do that? The rule says it must be expended. If you can use the money there, why can not you levy taxes and use them?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman claim that the act of 1882 providing for the extinguishment of these water bonds has been repealed by the act of 1885?

Mr. CANNON. The act of 1885?

The CHAIRMAN. No, the act of 1884.

Mr. CANNON. The act of 1884, as I recollect, created a sinking fund for the purpose of this indebtedness. Let me look at the act of 1884.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks this changes existing law, and sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROWELL. I ask unanimous consent to recur to page 9 of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment to line 9 on that page. My purpose is to raise the appropriation for permit work from $100,000 to $200,000.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I feel constrained to object to that request. Acting on the part of the full committee, I would not feel warranted in agreeing to it.

Mr. ROWELL. I simply desire to say that I was not present when these pages were read or I should have offered the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORAN. I call the next appropriation bill on the Calendar, the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

I will state in reference to this bill that it is identically the same bill as that passed by the House and Senate last year. It is the same law with this single exception, that the amount for rent, which in last year's bill was $18,200, has been reduced to $17,000 in this bill. The Commissioner of Pensions reports that the item for rent in the city of Washington has been reduced about $900. There will be a reduction by reason of the transfer of the pension agency from Syracuse to the public building at Buffalo, N. Y., and also perhaps a reduction by reason of the completion of the public building at Des Moines, Iowa. In all other respects the two pension bills are the same, except that some provisos in last year's bill have been omitted from this because they are now existing law.

I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill, and that it be read by paragraphs for debate and amendment.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of pensions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, namely:

For Army and Navy pensions as follows: For invalids, widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, and survivors and widows of the war of 1812, and with Mexico, $80,473,000: Provided, That the appropriation aforesaid for Navy pensions shall be paid from the income of the Navy pension fund so far as the same may be sufficient for that purpose: And provided further, That the amount expended under each of the above items shall be accounted for separately: And provided further, That hereafter all United States officers now authorized to administer oaths are hereby required and directed to administer any and all oaths required to be made by pensioners and their witnesses in the execution of their vouchers for their pensions free of charge.

For fees and expenses of examining surgeons for services rendered within the fiscal year 1890, $1,000,000. And each member of each examining board shall, as now authorized by law, receive the sum of $2 for the examination of each applicant whenever five or a less number shall be examined on any one day, and $1 for the examination of each additional applicant on such day: Provided, That if twenty or more applicants appear on one day, no fewer than twenty shall, if practicable, be examined on said day, and if fewer examinations be then made, twenty or more having appeared, then there shall be paid for the first examinations made on the next examination day the fee of $1 only until twenty examinations shall have been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the language used here in reference to examining surgeons is the same as the present law, and I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that this provision, having been in the bill three or four years, ought to be made a permanent provision. I will therefore, with his consent, move to strike out the words in line 14 of the bill, "as now authorized by law," and insert, after the word "shall," the word "hereafter;" so that it will read:

And each member of each examining board shall hereafter receive the sum of $2, etc.

Mr. FORAN. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill, as follows:

For the salaries of eighteen agents for the payment of pensions, at $4,000 each, $72,000. For clerk-hire, $178,000: Provided, That the amount of clerk-hire for each agency shall be apportioned as nearly as practicable in proportion to the number of pensioners paid at each agency.

For fuel, $750.

For lights, $750.

For stationery and other necessary expenses, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, $16,000.

For rents, $17,000.

Mr. FORAN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. TURNER, of Georgia, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill and the pension appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

BILLS PASSED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole may be considered and voted upon together.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered and adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLEMENTS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

The amendment recommended by the Committee of the Whole was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FORAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. HARMER: A bill (H. R. 11701) for the relief of the building and mutual loan associations of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. ADAMS: A bill (H. R. 11702) granting a pension to Louis Woerner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNES: A bill (H. R. 11703) granting a pension to Patrick Feeley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11704) granting a pension to Banner Brunnuit—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BLAND: A bill (H. R. 11705) to increase the pension of C. M. Mathews—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASWELL: A bill (H. R. 11706) granting a pension to John Voit—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11707) granting an increase of pension to Gertrude Northop—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CATCHINGS: A bill (H. R. 11708) for the relief of Allie V. Askew, administratrix of W. W. Neeley, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11709) for the relief of Caroline C. Hedges—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11710) for the relief of Aaron Stanton and James C. Brandon, executors of Charlotte S. Brandon, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DOCKERY: A bill (H. R. 11711) granting a pension to Nona J. Tillery, minor child of Wyatte L. Tillery—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GEAR: A bill (H. R. 11712) granting a pension to Jacob Kappenhofer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARE: A bill (H. R. 11713) for the relief of William R. Baker—to the Select Committee on Indian Depredation Claims.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 11714) to provide increase of pension to James Waters, formerly of Captain Weatherbye's Company of Pennsylvania Militia, war of 1812—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HOLMAN: A bill (H. R. 11715) increasing the pension of Moses Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11716) granting a pension to Joseph M. Ward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11717) granting a pension to Mildred Pate—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11718) granting a pension to Johanna Knab—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11719) granting a pension to Stephen Damacher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11720) granting a pension to Pauline T. Carpenter, widow of Lee Carpenter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11721) making an appropriation of $1,950 to reimburse Messrs. Crumbo & Melcher for money lost on their contract for the construction of a roadway from New Albany, Ind., to the national cemetery near that place—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOVEY: A bill (H. R. 11722) for the relief of Elizabeth J. Small—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAWLER: A bill (H. R. 11724) for the relief of Martin Keating—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 11725) granting a pension to Bennett J. Crowder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: A bill (H. R. 11726) granting a pension to S. U. Fletcher—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11727) for the relief of Mary C. Stevens—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOFFITT: A bill (H. R. 11728) granting a pension to Delia W. Monshall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NICHOLS: A bill (H. R. 11729) for the relief of Christopher G. Holt—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. PHELPS: A bill (H. R. 11730) granting a pension to Catherine Flicke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11731) granting a pension to Eliza J. Booth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11732) granting a pension to Ellen O'Malley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PLUMB: A bill (H. R. 11733) granting a pension to H. W. Wixom—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROGERS: A bill (H. R. 11734) for the relief of John L. Green—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11735) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the Fort Smith and Choctaw Bridge Company to construct a bridge across the Poteau River, in the Choctaw Nation, near Fort Smith, Ark."—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SAWYER: A bill (H. R. 11736) granting a pension to Margaret M. Nugent—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11737) granting a pension to Rebecca D. Vedder—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 11738) granting a pension to Sarah McTavey—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SIMMONS: A bill (H. R. 11739) for the relief of William Merrick, of North Carolina—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SNYDER (by request): A bill (H. R. 11740) for the relief of E. F. Gobel, of Illinois—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CHARLES STEWART: A bill (H. R. 11741) granting a pension to Alexander M. Boatright—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STONE, of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11742) for the relief of J. G. Peebles—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11743) for the relief of George W. Craig—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SYMES: A bill (H. R. 11744) for the relief of Dr. Edward Dunscomb—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O. B. THOMAS: A bill (H. R. 11745) granting a pension to Oscar N. Lampson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: A bill (H. R. 11746) to pension Elias W. Welden—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill (H. R. 11747) to appropriate $500 to pay balance of rent of court building in Huntsville, Ala., for the year 1888—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. YODER: A bill (H. R. 11748) granting a pension to John S. Long—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CATCHINGS: Petition of Mrs. C. W. Partee, of Quitman County, Mississippi, for herself and other heirs of Mrs. Mary J. Jackson Hord, for reference of their claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill to improve the harbor of St. Louis, Mo.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. COX: Memorial of the committee on centennial celebration of Washington's inauguration at New York City—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Petition of J. H. Hawkins and 13 others, and of J. Eason and 14 others, of Ensley, Mich., in favor of pure food and lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DIBBLE: Papers in the claim of E. Sherod Metz, of Lexington, S. C.

By Mr. FRENCH: Petition of James C. English and others, asking an appropriation for building breakwater in harbor of New Haven, Conn.—to Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. HARE: Petition of sundry citizens of Montague County, Texas, for the establishment of a Federal court, etc.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of E. E. McCroskey, of Knoxville, Tenn., relative to duty on coal—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LEE: Petition of L. H. Luckett, of Edmund Hogg, and of South Fork Grange, of Loudoun County, and of Grange No. 34, of Cuckoo, Va., in favor of pure lard and food—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of Mary C. Stevens, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of A. J. Courtright and others, citizens of Jackson and Calhoun Counties, Michigan, in favor of pure lard—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. PETERS: Petition of John C. Evans, late private Company H, Twenty-first Kentucky Infantry, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition and papers in the case of Daniel Danielson, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PLUMB: Petition of Mrs. Annie Lucas, for compensation as laundress to Union and Patent Office hospitals—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of Thomas B. Paine and of John L. Green, of Arkansas, for reference of their claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSHEND: Affidavit to accompany House bill for the relief of W. H. Bladis—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VANDEVER: A bill for the improvement of San Diego Harbor, California—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: Petition of Henry Klockenbring, for an original invalid pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Of William S. McMush, of Moscow, Ohio.

By Mr. COX: Of B. Koenig, of New York City.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Of George S. Stout and others, of Michigan.

By Mr. DUNN: Of E. D. Estes, of Corning, Ark.

By Mr. GEAR: Of Nauer & Lorsheter, of Fort Madison, Iowa.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Of C. Boyd Barrett, of Aberdeen, Dak., and of Kanause & Bents, of Woonsocket, Dak.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Of F. W. Phillips, of Schmitz & Muette, and of M. B. Kimball, of Wisconsin.

By Mr. JACKSON: Of C. W. Hazzard, of Monongahela City, Pa.

By Mr. KENNEDY: Of E. B. Lewis, of H. S. Taylor, and of T. E. Haywood, of Ohio.

By Mr. LONG: Of A. H. Fuller, of Brockton, Mass.

By Mr. NUTTING: Of A. M. White, of Auburn, N. Y.

By Mr. PHELPS: Of Edward B. Haines, of Paterson, N. J.

By Mr. PLUMB: Of J. V. Park, of Joliet, Ill.

By Mr. RICE: Of George K. Shaw, editor of the Evening Star, of Minneapolis, and of E. F. Barrett, publisher of the Democrat, of Stillwater, Minn.

By Mr. HENRY SMITH: Of A. A. McIntire and George A. Workham, of Independence, Wis.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Of J. G. P. Holden, of Yonkers, N. Y.

By Mr. STEPHENSON: Of W. H. Holmes, of Waupaca, Wis.

By Mr. CHARLES STEWART: Of C. P. B. Medlenka, of Houston, Tex.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JONATHAN CHACE, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, appeared in his seat to-day.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives; which was read:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 7, 1888.

Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to furnish the House with a duplicate copy of Senate concurrent resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, the original having been lost.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request will be complied with, if there be no objection.

MRS. ELLA M. GROVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ella M. Grover, which was, in line 6, before the word "dollars," to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty-five."

Mr. DAVIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the report of the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year 1888; which, on motion of Mr. SHERMAN, was, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPORT OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting, in pursuance of section 1057 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, a statement of judgments rendered by that court for the year ending November 30, 1888, the amounts thereof, the parties in whose favor rendered, and a brief synopsis of the claims upon which those judgments were rendered; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DISTRICT ELECTRIC WIRES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting the report of Maj. Charles W. Raymond, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, on the subject of the best method of removing all electric wires from the air or surface of the streets, avenues, and alleys, and the best method of interring the same under-ground, and such legal regulation thereof as may be needed, and what manner of conduit should be constructed and maintained, etc., which report was adopted by the board; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the board of managers of the Temporary Home for Sailors and Soldiers, Grand Army of the Republic, of the District of Columbia, praying that an appropriation of $2,500 be made to sustain that institution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition adopted by a meeting of late soldiers of the Union Army held recently in Elk County, Kansas, praying for the passage of certain pension legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present the petition of J. Joyner and 194 other citizens of South Carolina, who state that they are twenty-one years of age, and male residents of the county of Orangeburgh and the voting precinct of Zeigler, and are legally qualified to register and vote; that on the 6th day of November, 1888, they presented themselves at said voting precinct in order to vote for Presidential electors and member of Congress, and that they were denied the right to vote. The petitioners state that they made every reasonable effort to become qualified to vote according to the registration laws of the State, but were denied an equal chance and the same opportunity to register as was accorded to other of their fellow-citizens. They state that they intended to vote for the Republican electors and for S. W. McKinlay for member of Congress.

The petitioners pray that Congress shall investigate the facts stated and the practical workings of the registration and election laws of South Carolina, and devise some means to secure to the petitioners the free exercise of the rights guarantied to them by the constitution of South Carolina and the laws and Constitution of the United States.

I desire to have the petition referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and I present a letter addressed to myself to be transmitted to the committee with the petition, the letter making some statements with reference to the circumstances which have led to the preparation and presentation of the petition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition and accompanying letter will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if there be no objection.

Mr. FARWELL presented the petition of Sarah J. Hay, widow of Morgan Hay, late of Company G, Forty-third Indiana Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON presented the memorial of Charles Haas and 15 other citizens of Willets Point, New York Harbor, remonstrating against the passage of the bill to prevent band musicians of the United States Army from accepting musical engagements, or from entering into competition with civil musicians; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PADDOCK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 855) for the relief of the heirs of Jacob Cramer, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2667) for the relief of Ida M. Howell; and

A bill (S. 3072) granting a pension to John J. Gorham.

Mr. TURPIE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas H. Shelter and others, praying that a pension be granted to Mrs. Elizabeth New, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3694) granting a pension to Elizabeth New; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, submitted adverse reports thereon; which were agreed to, and the bills were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. 1240) granting a pension to Lyman H. Walker; and

A bill (S. 2841) granting an increase of pension to Josiah Edwards.

THE SAMOAN ISLANDS.

Mr. PADDOCK. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] yesterday, to report it favorably, without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire into the condition of affairs in the Samoan Islands so far as it affects the interests and rights of American citizens resident or doing business there; the relations of the United States with and their obligations to said islands under existing treaties; the necessity of maintaining their neutrality or independence, and our duty in this regard; what steps have been taken in this direction by our Government, and what further action, if any, is demanded. To this end said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer the necessary oaths, employ stenographers if required, cause its proceedings to be printed from time to time for its own use; and the expenses thereof shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee, and by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the resolution, I believe, that the Senator from Maine submitted yesterday. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] is not present, and I ask, if it be convenient, that the resolution may lie over until other matters can be transacted.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator from Delaware be present this morning?

Mr. COCKRELL. He is in the city. I met him at one of the Departments a few minutes ago. I suppose he will be here soon.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to the resolution lying over until the Senator from Delaware comes in, but I am exceedingly anxious that the committee shall receive to-day the authority proposed to be given.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no disposition to delay it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table temporarily.

Mr. GRAY entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] object to action upon the resolution reported this morning from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which was submitted yesterday by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]?

Mr. GRAY. I have no objection. I have just at this moment heard that the resolution was reported from the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I did not suppose that the resolution would be reported so soon. So far as the facts which the resolution is, I suppose, intended to elicit, I am not informed about them; I have had no opportunity to be informed about them in detail. I think that the resolution had better be passed, and we shall then get the facts before the Senate in some shape.

Mr. FRYE. I am obliged to the Senator. I desire to have the resolution passed immediately, for certain reasons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution having been reported this morning and read at length, the question is on agreeing to the same.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST (at the request of Mr. BUTLER) introduced a bill (S. 3695) to amend section 555 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3696) to authorize the Omaha, Dodge City and Southern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays military reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3697) granting a pension to Franz Heil, alias Sebastian Kerber; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3698) granting a pension to William Brockelsby; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 3699) to amend the laws relating to land titles in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 3700) granting a pension to Mary E. Gresham; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 3701) granting a pension to David Shook; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 3702) granting a pension to David Bevan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 3703) for the relief of John D. Thorne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 120) authorizing Capt. George S. Anderson, Sixth Cavalry, to accept from the President of the French Republic a diploma conferring the decoration of Chevalier of the National Order of the Legion of Honor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. STEWART, it was Ordered, That A. S. Lee have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate his petition and statement of his account against the United States for rent, no adverse report having been made.

EXPENSES AT YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish the Senate, at his earliest convenience, with a full account of the expenditures made by the late General W. S. Hancock, in the fall of 1881, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in entertaining the French officers and others invited to assist at the centennial celebration of the surrender of the British army at Yorktown to the combined forces of the United States and France, together with copies of all papers and correspondence on file in his Department touching the same; and also advise the Senate whether the said General Hancock, or his estate, ever received any reimbursement of such expenses in whole or in part.

NEW YORK, LAKE ERIE AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If the morning hour is ended, I desire to call up for consideration a bill on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, that order is closed, and the Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from New Jersey moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I move to take up Senate bill 779, Calendar number 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill mentioned by the Senator from New Jersey will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Order of Business 1887, a bill (S. 779) for the relief of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment proposed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and to insert:

That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be authorized to take jurisdiction of and adjudge the claim of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company for the transportation of the mails of the United States from January 1, 1874, to June 30, 1877, upon routes (old numbers) numbered 1201, 1207, and 1208, said claim being based upon contracts between the United States of America (acting in that behalf by their Postmaster-General) and the president of said railroad company, signed and acknowledged by John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster-General, on the 10th day of January, 1874, and by P. H. Watson, president of said company, on the 20th day of April, 1874.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to offer some amendments.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire from what committee the bill comes?

Mr. MCPHERSON. It comes from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I wish to say for the information of the Senate that the committee have reported it favorably; that it is a matter in dispute both as to law and fact, and I have a letter from the Department preferring that the whole matter should be referred to the Court of Claims. Both parties have decided upon that course as a settlement of these matters of law and fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? If there be none, it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The reported amendment having been already read at length, the further reading will be waived, if there be no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to amend in line, 6 of the amendment, after the word "Company," by inserting the words "successor of the Erie Railway Company."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 6, after the word "Company," it is proposed to insert "successor of the Erie Railway Company;" so as to read:

That the Court of Claims shall, notwithstanding the lapse of time, be authorized to take jurisdiction of and adjudge the claim of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, successor of the Erie Railway Company, for the transportation of the mails of the United States, etc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SAWYER. I think that the amendment is all right. The matter was examined very thoroughly before the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In line 11, after the word "upon," I move that the word "alleged" be inserted, so as to read "being based upon alleged contracts."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "upon," it is proposed to insert the word "alleged;" so as to read:

Said claim being based upon alleged contracts between the United States of America (acting in that behalf by their Postmaster-General) and the president of said railroad company, signed and acknowledged by John A. J. Creswell, Postmaster-General, etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will not that relieve this claimant from the necessity of proving the contract? If the bill simply says that the claim shall rest upon alleged contracts, it may relieve the claimant from the necessity of proving the contracts.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The contracts have been admitted both by the Department and by the railroad company.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then why use the word "alleged?"

Mr. MCPHERSON. Very well; I will withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the question is a legal question as to whether these are contracts or not in law; and the Postmaster-General suggests that the word "alleged" be inserted so that the court will pass upon the question as to whether these are contracts in law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Government of the United States deny that the paper is a legal contract?

Mr. COCKRELL. The contracts were made. There is no question about that. But there were some of the requisites that the Department claimed had not been complied with, and therefore did not make it a legal, binding contract, and that question is to be submitted. By putting in the word "alleged" it leaves that question open for the court to determine.

Mr. MCPHERSON. That was an omission on the part of the officers of the Government in not filing the contract in the Sixth Auditor's office, as required by law. But the contracts were in possession of the Department, and the neglect was altogether in the Post-Office Department and not on the part of the Erie Railway Company.

Mr. SAWYER. I think the Senator from New Jersey is right about that.

Mr. MCPHERSON. So there is no particular reason why the word "alleged" should not be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the proposed amendment to the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. I will renew the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to it if it is recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is recommended by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. MCPHERSON. If it is insisted upon, I renew it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11, after the word "upon," it is proposed to insert "alleged;" so as to read:

Said claim being based upon alleged contracts between the United States, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In line 13, after the word "said," I move to strike out the word "railroad" and to insert "Erie Railway;" so as to read:

And the president of said Erie Railway Company, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. In line 17, after the word "said," I move to insert "Erie Railway;" so as to read:

And by P. H. Watson, president of said Erie Railway Company.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 236) to pay the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress their salary for December on December 20, 1888.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HARRIS to "Schedule C, Metals," lines 446 and 447 of the amendment of the Committee on Finance, to strike out the words "one and one-tenth cents" and insert "six-tenths of 1 cent;" so as to read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] yesterday announced the proposition that the recent election had settled the subject of tariff taxation, and, to use nearly his own language, that the principle having been settled, the details of legislation ought to be left to the majority of the Finance Committee.

I have not the slightest disposition, sir, to discuss the result of the last election or to thrash old straw. I have my own personal opinion as to the causes of that result; and I may be permitted to say in passing that I do not think the tariff issue contributed to the success of his party so much as the Senator from Ohio seems to think. The Democratic party increased its majorities in the large manufacturing districts, and the result of the election was brought about principally where the tariff had no immediate effect. In my judgment, whatever it may be worth, "the solid South" and the shadow of the war brought about that result more than the question of tariff taxation.

But let that be as it may, speaking for myself and for no one else, I am not disheartened by our defeat. If the Senator from Ohio and his party think that the election has settled the question of the tariff in this country, a greater mistake was never made by mortal men. It will last as long as this country endures, because it involves a fundamental difference as to a construction of the Constitution, aside from the policies of the Government. If the position of the Republican party of to-day be the correct one, that unlimited taxation can be used for the purposes of protection, the conflict will never cease, because that, in my judgment, is the subversion of the fundamental principles of the Government together with its autonomy.

I have no disposition to go into the discussion of this matter, but I simply make that remark as a statement of my own opinion and as a rule that will govern my action as a public man. So long as I live and can lift my voice, I shall protest against this system as now advocated by the Republican party of the country; and unless I am mistaken in the American people, unless I have studied human nature in vain during a life now verging upon sixty years, the triumph of the Democratic party is just as certain in the course of time as that I stand here in this Senate Chamber to-day.

But what I wish to say particularly is that although the Senator from Ohio may be right in stating that the election was a triumph of the protective principle, I absolutely deny, in the most emphatic terms, that it settled the details of tariff legislation. The people of the United States at that election did not mean to indorse the Senate Finance Committee substitute now pending here. The details of the measure, as a matter of course, were left to be adjusted afterwards; and that question is now pressing upon us in every item of this bill, and for myself I shall exercise my unquestionable right to criticise and to oppose, whenever my judgment and conscience dictate, any provision in the pending bill, although it takes the remainder of this session, because in my judgment the highest duty of every Senator now is to scrutinize closely every paragraph in the bill, and to discuss it if necessary, and to vote upon it intelligently afterwards.

The Senator from Ohio made a statement in which he is very far wrong, or else I am. He stated that in this metal schedule the duties had been reduced 10 per cent. upon the whole schedule. I hold in my hand the reports of two experts. One comes from the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, prepared under the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, by the clerk of that committee, and the effect of the Senate substitute as compared with the Mills bill and with existing legislation is as follows:

On metals, which is Schedule C, the average ad valorem duty upon the whole schedule is 45.89 per cent. under the existing tariff, and under the substitute reported by the Finance Committee it is 55.17 per cent. If that be not correct, I then refer to a report made by the Treasury Department upon Schedule C, of metals. Upon the present dutiable value, at rates under existing law under the metal schedule, the duty is 40.56 per cent.; under the House bill it is 26.99 per cent.; under the Senate bill it is 40.37 per cent. What authority the Senator from Ohio has to say that the duties are decreased under the Senate substitute I should like to know.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri has read from two authorities which he states are experts.

Mr. VEST. I suppose they are.

Mr. ALDRICH. The difference between those is the difference between 40 and 55 per cent. as to the effect of the pending measure. Now, which of those is correct, if either, and what reliance can be placed on either?

Mr. VEST. I will go back to the figures in order to answer the assertion of the Senator from Rhode Island. The difference is stated at 40 or 50 per cent. I think that is the difference stated.

Mr. ALDRICH. As read by the Senator from Missouri, the rate proposed by the Senate bill in one case is 40 per cent. and in the other case it is 55 per cent.

Mr. VEST. Under the estimate which came from the Ways and Means Committee of the House, the present tariff under the metal schedule is 45.89 per cent. ad valorem, and under the pending substitute it is 55.17 per cent., which is a difference of about 10 per cent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. An increase?

Mr. VEST. An increase in the Senate substitute of 10 per cent., which makes no difference of 40 or 50 per cent., as the Senator from Ohio states. Under the estimate which comes from the Treasury Department of duties collected under the existing tariff, and amount of duties based upon importations for the fiscal year 1887, the estimate upon present dutiable values, at rates under existing law, is 40.56 per cent., and under the Senate bill it is 40.37 per cent., so that there is no 40 or 50 per cent. difference in either estimate.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from Missouri fails to catch my point. The statement which he read, prepared by the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, states that the average ad valorem rate assessed by the Senate bill is 55 per cent. The statement which he read from the Treasury Department, prepared, as he says, by two experts, states that the rate of the Senate bill upon the metal schedule is 40 per cent. and a fraction. What I desire to call his attention to is, which of those statements does he believe to be correct, if either, and why does he believe either of them to be correct?

Mr. VEST. It matters not to me whether these arithmetical calculations are correct or not. I am not a tariff expert, and I accept the result of these calculations, coming from the Treasury Department of the United States or from the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, for just what they are worth after examination. The point I make is that there is no reduction of 10 per cent. under the Senate substitute, as stated by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. ALDRICH. If the Senator from Missouri will look at the bill itself, and look at the comparison of rates, he will find that the statement of the Senator from Ohio is correct. For instance, in the very items we have been considering, the paragraph now under consideration proposes to reduce the rate on steel beams and other forms of structural iron and steel from 1¼ to 1.1 cents a pound. If the Senator will look at the items themselves, instead of some general average of rates of the nature he has alluded to, he will find that the statement of the Senator from Ohio is fully borne out by the changes which are made.

Mr. VEST. Do I understand that the Senator from Rhode Island says that under this metal schedule there is a reduction of 10 per cent. upon existing duties in the bill which the Senator from Iowa reported from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. ALDRICH. What I mean to say is that on a large number of items the reduction is very much in excess of 10 per cent.

Mr. VEST. I want the average of the whole schedule.

Mr. ALDRICH. That is an absolute impossibility for any man in this Chamber or outside of it to arrive at; and, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] suggests, it would be an absolute absurdity to make the statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to state that point more clearly. What I stated I think is absolutely correct as to the reduction, taking the articles that are largely imported into the country, for instance, railroad iron. Take steel rails, one of the largest items. The duty on steel rails is reduced a little more than 10 per cent., from $17 a ton down to $15 and something. Take this very large item we are now debating, one of the most difficult to manage, because, as I stated yesterday, it is difficult to have a uniform rate—there is a reduction of a little over 12½ per cent.

Take all the leading branches of the iron trade, especially those articles which are commonly made, those which enter into common consumption, and the Senator will find that there is a reduction. I know, if you take the items all through and make a general average upon the different articles, it will probably only show a very slight reduction, but that is not the proper basis, I believe, of estimating a reduction. However, by taking these items one by one, especially those articles largely imported, you will find a reduction in the rate of duty of about 10 per cent. I stated that the reduction was 10 per cent. of the duty, not 10 per cent. of the value of the article.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course I referred to the duty. I did not read what the Senator from Ohio stated yesterday, but I made that the basis of what I stated this morning.

Mr. SHERMAN. At the same time I do not think any one can state accurately the reduction of the rate of duty, because there are so many different ways of computing it and estimating it. It is very difficult, because if you take the average importations the reduction might be put at one rate. If you take the average rates of reduction proposed, then it may be different. There is a reduction, however, on the iron schedule, according to our understanding, as I stated.

Mr. VEST. I have never been able myself to find out exactly what was the increase or reduction in this bill, and therefore I have relied upon experts; and both the experts I have followed state most emphatically that there is no reduction, but an increase over the present duty. What I proposed to answer was the statement of the Senator from Ohio made upon yesterday. He said:

> On the whole—

That is, on the whole schedule—

> On the whole there is a reduction of about 10 per cent. of the present duties. On this particular item of beams, girders, and other structural forms for building purposes there is a reduction of more than 10 per cent.; it is about 12 per cent. It is from 1¼ cents a pound down to 1.1 cents a pound, or fifteen hundredths.
>
> Therefore it is a reduction of about 12½ per cent. So it is on most of the leading items of the schedule.

Let us see if that statement is true. I am not able, as I said, from the want of the necessary technical knowledge, to go into a dissection of each item; but I take what these experts have stated, and they are either the most ignorant and pretentious creatures that ever existed in this country, or else there is a great error existing somewhere upon this subject.

Here is what the expert says in regard to the whole schedule, answering that portion of the Senator's statement that upon the leading articles there has been a reduction: Item 134. "Chains less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter, as trace-chains, etc., are raised from 44.37 per cent. to 53.57 per cent."

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him upon that point?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. The item of chains which he has just read is not a leading item in this bill, nor does it include trace-chains at all. It is a small chain, smaller than any trace-chain in use. We did make a small addition to the duty here, but it is a matter of no consequence.

Mr. VEST. There is also an increase I believe upon other articles.

Mr. ALLISON. On every other article of chains the duty is reduced by our proposed substitute, and most of those articles are not touched by the Mills bill.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator from Iowa state that this item does not include trace-chains? Does he mean to say that no trace-chains are less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that I do not believe there are any trace-chains less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter.

Mr. VEST. That is a question of actual knowledge and observation, and without being an agricultural expert myself, my obsevation and knowledge are quite different. I was a farmer once in my life, and I think I know what a trace-chain is.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish the Senator could bring one of them in here.

Mr. VEST. I do not pretend to set up myself as an authority to the grangers upon this particular item, but if there are not trace-chains with links less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter I relinquish all claims to knowledge of the instrumentalities used in agriculture. My friend may be an expert, but he has certainly in use an article of chains in Iowa which are entirely different from those used in Missouri.

The next item is "cotton-ties and hoops for baling, two-tenths cent more than the hoop-iron from which it is made (one and one-tenth cents) increasing the revenue over $240,000 and raising the duty from 35 per cent. to 108 per cent."

What does my friend say about that?

Item 144. "Sheets of iron or steel thinner than No. 9 and taggers' iron are raised from 30 per cent. to above 60 per cent., more than doubling the duty, the increase following the thin sheets through the various processes of pickling, cold-rolling, etc."

Mr. ALLISON. "Thinner than No. 9." Is that the statement there? If it is, it is an error. There is no such thing in the bill.

Mr. VEST. "Thinner than No. 9."

Mr. ALLISON. It should be "No. 29."

Mr. VEST. Very good.

"146. Cold-rolled steel sheets, thinner than No. 29 wire gauge, are increased from 41.60 per cent. to 75 per cent. ad valorem, and taggers' iron, pickled, etc., from 39.18 per cent. to 61.11 per cent."

Item 150. "Fence-wire rods of steel now paying 45 per cent. duty, smaller than No. 5, are raised to six-tenths cent per pound, or 54 per cent., if No. 6, and 1¼ cents if smaller than No. 6."

"151. Iron and steel wire, worth over 10 cents per pound, are raised to 45 per cent. They now bear specific rates, but the rate proposed is ad valorem, and higher in all cases."

"153. Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms, slabs, die-blocks or blanks, billets, now 45 per cent., are made five-tenths of a cent per pound when valued at 1 cent or less, an increase from 45 to 60 and 80 per cent., according to the value of the various descriptions. When the value reaches 4 to 7 cents the rate is left at 2 cents, above 30 per cent. on importations of 1887, but above 13 cents in value the rate is changed again to ad valorem and made 45 per cent., more than doubling the present rate of 3½ cents per pound."

"159. Circular-saw plates are increased from 37.32 per cent. to 45 per cent. (from 4 to 7 cents in value), though circular saws are left with only 30 per cent. duty."

"163. Bronze powder, now 15 per cent., is made 15 cents per pound, equivalent to about 30 per cent. ad valorem."

"172. Table-knives"—that is something I presume we can understand without the testimoney of an expert—"table-knives, now at 35 per cent. duty, are put at 20 cents per dozen, when valued at $1 or less; valued at $1 to $3, 50 cents per dozen; and valued at $3 to $8, $1 per dozen; and valued over $8 per dozen, $2 per dozen, and in addition 25 per cent. on all. It is impossible," says this expert, "to accurately calculate the effect of this new classification, but it will be seen that knives worth 50 cents per dozen will under this provision pay 70 per cent.; those worth $1.50 per dozen will pay 63 per cent.; worth $5 per dozen, pay 50 per cent.; worth $20 per dozen, pay 40 per cent."—the higher the price the lower the duty—"and after $10 per dozen value is reached the rate is less than at present. On the cheapest cutlery imported the rate will be far beyond 100 per cent.; the effect has been estimated at an increase of one-half, or 52 per cent."

"Pen-knives and pocket-knives," item 173, "the rate is changed from 50 per cent. to 50 cents per dozen blades and 25 per cent., which leaves the rate unchanged when the import value is $8 per dozen on four-blade knives, but increased on lower grades. A boy's 10-cent knife of two blades would have the duty quadrupled; a cheap three-bladed knife would be raised 200 per cent., and the average knife in common use be much increased. It is estimated the duties on average imports are increased by this provision to 65 per cent. instead of 50 per cent."

"181. Double-barreled breech-loading shotguns, rate changed from 35 per cent. to $10 each and 25 per cent. A ten-dollar gun would thus pay 125 per cent. instead of $3.50, as now; while a three-hundred-dollar gun would pay $85 instead of $105 duty, as under the present law. If average importations be valued at a little over $35 each, the increase in duties would be one-half, and on this basis the estimate is made."

Right in this connection I wish to read a communication which I received this morning. It bears on that item of the bill and is rather important. It is addressed to me personally.

To Hon. GEORGE G. VEST, Senator:

The undersigned, among whom are probably the largest importers of foreign pocket and table cutlery and foreign breech-loading shotguns, enter this as their earnest protest against the passage of the Senate tariff bill, by which the increase of the duties on this class of goods is contemplated to an extent that is extreme, that is unreasonably large, that is, in fact, so entirely out of line as to be unworthy of consideration for a moment. This paper represents the signatures of every wholesale dealer in the city of St. Louis, and is their most earnest protest against the passage of the bill. We sincerely trust that you will use your best efforts to defeat the same.

It is signed by "Simmons Hardware Company, by E. C. Simmons, president," one of the largest hardware establishments in the United States—by all odds the largest in the Western country; "Hilyer Hardware Company, E. Hilyer, president; A. F. Shapleigh Hardware Company, per A. F. Shapleigh, president," another very large concern; "Witti Hardware Company, Otto H. Witti, president; E. C. Memham Arms Company, by E. C. Memham, president; C. O. B. McClean; and Caruth & Byrnes Hardware Company, per Daniel W. Caruth, president."

These gentlemen are not members of my party, except one or two of them, within my knowledge. The rest are Republicans. They voted the Republican ticket and contributed to the campaign fund which carried the city of St. Louis against us at the last election. I commend their statement to the earnest consideration of my friends who have charge of this bill.

We are not particularly interested in shotguns in the State of Missouri, but we are interested in cutlery—in cheap knives and forks. According to the statement of these gentlemen, made from whatever motive—I take it to be a good one—these increases which I have read are beyond all sort of proportion to the rest of this bill.

I come now to the next item given by this expert:

"191. Small screws, one-half inch and less, are increased from 44.59 per cent. to over 52 per cent.

"194. Type metal changed from 20 per cent. ad valorem to 1½ cents per pound. In the Senate majority report is a statement that would indicate an increase to more than 50 per cent. ad valorem. The estimate is based on the strength of the statement in the report, at 50 per cent. duty, an increase of 150 per cent., as calculations were made in the same document on reductions in the House bill."

As I have stated, I am not an expert, but I have a right to assume that these calculations are correct. They are authoritative; they come from men who have devoted their lives to this sort of calculation; and I must rely upon these statements for what they are worth. If they are worthless, let it be shown. If they are not, then the Senator from Ohio was utterly mistaken in his statement that there was a reduction of 10 per cent. on the whole metal schedule.

The Senator from Ohio made another statement which astonished me somewhat. It was to the effect that a chance should be given to the rest of the manufacturers of steel beams and the other items mentioned here in order that competition might break down the existing trust. Mr. President, that trust has existed in this country for sixteen years. I read this morning an article in the Steel Bulletin from two of the manufacturers in this trust avowing its existence. They called it a combination, and said that their customers did not complain of it, and it was nobody's else business. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has it now. The existence of the trust is admitted, and yet the Senator from Ohio says, "Keep up the duties; continue the trust, and in the course of time and in God's providence somebody will break it up outside of Congress and by the natural laws of trade and competition." If it has lasted for sixteen years, if one establishment like Mr. Carnegie's, as I showed yesterday, is making a million dollars a year upon this single article of production alone, what right have we to imagine that there will be any disruption of this unlawful combination, for it is nothing else, that keeps up the price of these articles all over the country?

I am not in the habit of reading newspaper articles and I do not entirely agree politically with the paper from which I shall read, but I wish to read from the New York Times a statement in regard to this matter which I think is worthy of attention. It is an answer to my friend from Iowa. I ask his attention to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator from Missouri calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. To what?

Mr. VEST. Nothing, except I want to call the Senator's attention to an answer to a remark which he made when this debate was pending in the Senate last Thursday.

Mr. ALLISON's remark that we have quoted—

Which was this—

That the amendment "went to the root of the whole iron and steel schedule," and said that he "had no doubt that if the present rate of duty were maintained competition would be sufficient in a short time to break down the prices."

It is the same statement that was made yesterday by the Senator from Ohio, and which is the salient point in this entire argument.

Mr. ALLISON's remark that we have quoted involved an admission that prices have been unjustly raised by a ring agreement, and was not in accord with Senator SHERMAN's doctrine that combinations "may and ought to be met by a reduction of duty." The combination of beam manufacturers was first exposed in the Times, and we have repeatedly directed attention to the existence of this "combine" and the effect of its operations upon prices and the use of steel and iron in buildings. Mr. ALLISON professes to be confident that if the present duty (about 100 per cent.)—

It is more than that—shall not be disturbed the ring price will be broken by competition "in a short time." A correspondent writing to the Times in defense of the combination, and apparently connected with one of the factories, said a few weeks ago:

"You say that a combination was formed among the makers of beams two or three years ago. The fact is that there has been for sixteen years, with the exception of an interval about eight or ten years ago, an agreement to maintain prices."

For sixteen years, and the Steel Bulletin says the same thing over the signatures of some of the men who are in it. There never has been any pretense that the combination did not exist and that its object was not to maintain prices.

I know an instance in which a gentleman applied to all the manufacturers in the United States for an estimate upon a large number of steel beams and steel and iron structures, and then bought finally abroad, and not one of these American manufacturers pretended to say that he could not do the work. The price was the same by all of them, but they were utterly indifferent whether he took their proposition or not. He found he could get the work done abroad, freight included, cheaper than he could in this country, and he did send abroad and made his contract there. But the point I state is that not one of them pretended that he could not do the work. They simply said, every one of them, "Our price is the same." When he went from one to the other he found the same price, showing that this combination existed beyond all question.

A combination that has existed for sixteen years seems to be in very little danger of yielding to the forces of competition. What does Mr. ALLISON mean by "a short time?" Ten years? Sixteen years? Is there anything in the history of the beam ring that points to a revival of competition in the near future, or to a reduction of the ring price if the present duty shall be retained?

This price is 3.3 cents per pound, or $73.92 a long ton.

I stated yesterday that it was $66. That was my information. I do not really know the difference between a long ton and a short ton.

Mr. ALLISON. The former is 2,240 pounds and the latter 2,000 pounds.

Mr. VEST. I stated that upon the long ton, 2,240 pounds, it was $66. I further stated, and I challenge any contradiction of it, that at the Edgar Thomson works, according to the agreement as to the prices between the employer and the employé, those works must have made in one year upon 30,000 tons of steel beams and steel forms $1,000,000 clear profit, allowing them, not $28.02 per ton, which was the actual cost of manufacture at the works, but giving them $33, adding $5 to the $28 either as a reasonable profit or to cover all error.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. I understand the Senator to now state that the profit upon steel beams, upon the basis which he has just stated, is at least $33 per ton.

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. Upon a selling price of $66?

Mr. VEST. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. And upon that statement the Senator challenges contradiction?

Mr. VEST. Yes, as to the cheapest article of steel beams, and I am only calling attention to that.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will state upon the authority of the superintendent of a company engaged in the manufacture of steel beams in the State of New Jersey, owned largely by the present mayor of the city of New York—owned by him entirely, I think, in connection with his brother-in-law, Mr. Edward Cooper, late mayor of New York—that the average cost of making steel beams from pig-iron is more than $40 a ton in excess of the cost of pig-iron itself, the average cost of pig-iron, I suppose, being now $16 a ton. The superintendent of that establishment further states—the cost in Trenton being more than $40 a ton for manufacturing steel beams from pig-iron—that the cost in Belgium does not exceed one-half of that sum, making the difference between the cost of producing steel beams from pig-iron in Belgium and in Trenton $20 a ton, or almost equal to the rate proposed by this bill.

Mr. HOAR. What does the difference consist in?

Mr. ALDRICH. The difference consists, of course, in the cost of labor in this country. I make that statement upon the authority of the superintendent of Cooper & Hewitt's establishment in Trenton, N. J., and I place it by the side of the statement now made by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. Very good, Mr. President. I have a statement before me publicly made, never contradicted, which was based upon the sealed agreement made by Mr. Carnegie and the Knights of Labor in 1887.

Mr. ALDRICH. The agreement to which the Senator now alludes refers to steel rails.

Mr. VEST. It does not refer to steel rails.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask the Senator to read it and see.

Mr. VEST. He says:

It is well known, sir, that the steel-beam industry of this country to-day is in a trust; and I have further shown that the average price of these steel beams imported into this country during the year 1887, upon which duties were levied, was 1.2 cents per pound, or $26.88 per ton, and that the duty upon them under the existing tariff is 1½ cents per pound, or $28.88 per ton, the duty exceeding the value of the imported article $2 per ton. The output of these steel beams at the Edgar Thomson Steel Works during the year 1887 averaged about 100 tons per day, or 30,000 tons per annum, and the difference between the cost of its production, $33 per ton, and $66 per ton, the selling price, leaves a margin of $33 per ton, or $1,000,000 profit on this one product alone.

It was not $33 under that agreement; it was $28.02; but $5 was added.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator be kind enough to state from what he is reading?

Mr. VEST. I read from a speech of Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, an iron and steel manufacturer, and I read it because it was made publicly. He challenged contradiction, and it stands to-day for whatever it is worth. It comes from an expert in that business. It stands, after an acrimonious personal debate, uncontradicted by the facts, and I can not give any better authority.

Now, Mr. President, if the Republican party mean what they say when they declare that the only tariff protection they need is to cover the difference between the cost of labor in this country and abroad, and to give a reasonable profit to the manufacturer, how can they defend this sort of legislation? Why, sir, what is the difference in labor in making a ton of steel beams in this country and in England? Here it costs $5.33; abroad it can not possibly cost more than half as much. Suppose you put in $5.33 margin, to cover the difference in labor over the $26.88 which the rails cost put down in this country, and then give the manufacturer $10 for profit, does it bring about any such enormous duties as are put into this bill?

But Senators say—the Senator from Ohio conspicuously—"Give the manufacturers a chance." Give them a chance! Why, they have had a chance for sixteen years, and here is the output to-day; here is the result—a gigantic devil-fish, in the shape of a trust, covering this whole country and every manufactory in it, putting enormous amounts of money into the pockets of these men at the expense of the people in the name of American labor and protecting infant industries!

I have another document here. It ought to be authority. It is the Tariff League Bulletin, the organ of the extreme protectionists of the United States, and this is of date September 14, 1888, and it is an attack upon the President, as usual, on account of his position on the tariff, and a denunciation of him as a man utterly unworthy of public confidence and a disgrace to his high position because he dared to say one word against this same white elephant of protection. In the argument in answer to the President's message, which says the tariff is a tax, which everybody supposed it to be until this campaign, the editor says:

Canada is our nearest neighbor. It can buy of all the nations of the earth and discriminates in its tariff against none.

That is true, because it is one of the idiosyncracies of the English Government that they permit their colonies to tax the mother country, and English goods go into Canada under the same tariff duty that goods go in from this or any other country.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator inform me how they tax the mother country if the consumer pays the tax?

Mr. VEST. I mean to say that the same tariff duty is levied upon English goods that is levied upon American goods entering the ports of Canada.

Mr. HOAR. I am very glad to have the Senator's admission that this is a tax on the mother country. I quite agree with him.

Mr. VEST. I am not disposed to lose time in any play upon words. As to whether it is a tax upon the consumer or not, is another branch of the subject that I am not now considering. I have simply stated the fact that goods which go from the mother country into the colonies of Great Britain go in under the same tariff duty that is imposed upon goods coming from any other country.

If it buys of the United States it must be because it can buy here to better advantage, or at least with equal advantage. It does buy of us very largely of articles which, according to President Cleveland, are increased in cost by an amount "corresponding" with the duty on foreign articles "of the same kind." Here, then, is official proof that the President's statement, repeated every day by his friends, is not true. We select only a few of these articles imported by Canada from the United States. The curious reader can greatly enlarge the list by studying the official reports, and he will find by extending his researches to other countries that about $150,000,000, or about one-fourth of our exports to foreign countries, are composed of manufactured articles which, according to the President, we never could export, because the price in this country is increased nearly or wholly by the amount of the duties.

One-fourth of our exports, amounting to $150,000,000 in manufactured products, is carried from this country abroad, according to this statement.

Among our exports to Canada in 1887 are the following, omitting any less than $10,000—

Giving the amount of the exports, which, I will say, according to the reports for 1888 that I have before me, amount this year to over $36,000,000 in manufactured goods that were carried from this country into Canada.

Scythes	$12,504	Stoves	$19,724
Spades and shovels	12,424	Wire covered with cotton, etc.	78,536
Other similar implements	46,994	Files and rasps	35,912
Locomotives	69,804	Saws	55,395
Engines	42,809	Carpenters' and other mechanics' tools	194,300
Builders', cabinet-makers', harness-makers', etc., tools	430,594	Brass manufactures	182,385
Carriage hardware	86,694	Buggies	23,605
House-furnishing hardware	203,815	Farm wagons	9,718
Hollow-ware, tinned or glazed, etc	96,183	Pleasure carts, etc	10,546
Locks	69,845	Railway cars	139,836
Sewing-machines	158,507	Children's carriages	94,668
Other machinery	1,065,501	Other carriages	11,875
Charcoal pig-iron	77,420	Parts of carriages	79,511
Other pig-iron	129,375	Britannia manufactures	46,326
Steam pumps	20,836	Gas fixtures	62,196
Scales	24,381	Optical instruments	49,246
Watches	26,579	Tin wares	119,645
Watch cases	123,400	Tin-foil	17,022
Watch actions	139,019	Brass wire	24,418
Steel for saws	30,074	Copper	38,229

The total exports from this country to Canada in 1887 amounted to over $30,000,000, and consisted chiefly of manufactured goods. We have given the articles in which metals are the most important element of cost, because we have this list readily before us, and because it includes the products of mechanical work, the highest class of labor which is most liberally protected by duties. But it will be seen on examination of the Government reports that the entire list of exports includes almost every variety of American manufacture, including furniture, $355,000; cotton goods, $175,000; woolen goods, $225,000, and all kinds of household utensils; glassware, etc., $240,000; musical instruments, etc., $170,000; paper, $134,000; boots and shoes, leather manufactures, etc., $230,000, and builders' hardware, etc.

The manufacturers who, according to the Senator from Ohio, want a chance to compete in this country go to Canada and are brought in competition face to face with the English manufacturers, both paying the same duties, and sell $36,000,000 worth of American manufactured products in that market. If they can do it there, why not here? If they beat the English manufacturer in an English colony under the same duties, standing face to face in free, open competition, why do they need this enormous protection at home? I shall be obliged to any Senator who will answer that simple proposition.

According to the Senator from Ohio these manufacturers of ours want a chance. He says in his speech, which I have before me in the RECORD, give them a few years more and they will be able to compete with the whole world and with each other. Why, Mr. President, they are exporting from this country according to this editor $150,000,000 in manufactured products, $36,000,000 to Canada alone, the largest portion of these exports being articles included in this metal schedule; and yet these enormous duties are to be kept up, kept up for the sole purpose, as I charge, of increasing the profits of these manufacturers without one single effect upon the consumers of the country except to increase the cost of building material.

The Senator from Ohio says that I am mistaken in the remarks that I made here yesterday, because they were based upon the cheapest sort of steel beams. Those are the sort of beams I am interested in. I am not here for the purpose of protecting the man who wants to put a classical scene in iron or steel upon the front of his building. I am here in the interest of the people of this country who use the plain, the plainest sort of steel beams in the construction of business houses and bridges.

My colleague calls my attention to one point. I do not want to misquote this article. It says:

> The curious reader can greatly enlarge the list by studying the official reports, and he will find by extending his researches to other countries that about $150,000,000, or about one-fourth of our exports to foreign countries, are composed of manufactured articles which, according to the President, we never could export, because the price in this country is increased nearly or wholly by the amount of the duties.

We have heard a great deal about the decrease of prices in this country. There was not a great oration made on the Republican side during the last canvass in which the American consumer was not told how articles had gone down in price in the United States, but not one of these orators ever dared to show how the same articles had gone down during the same time in England, a free-trade country. I have the list, and at the proper time I intend to put it in the RECORD, to show that the decrease has been greater in England in those same articles that they say the tariff has decreased in cost to the American consumer.

But the Senator from Ohio said that I was mistaken in what I stated, because there were more valuable forms of steel and iron which cost a great deal more than those of which I spoke yesterday, and that this bill included these more valuable productions. Mr. President, the fair argument is on the cheapest article. If the Senate Finance Committee are not able to formulate a bill which makes a distinction between the higher and lower cost in these articles, between the articles that cost the higher and the lower amounts, that is not my fault. I took the lowest, the cheapest article, because a larger quantity of that article is consumed in this country than of the other.

The man who proposes to build a plain business house, and puts into it two-thirds of his capital, does not spend anything upon the structural metallic gewgaws that we see on some of the houses in the city of Washington, built by capitalists who are anxious to find some way to spend their money. The man who builds a bridge out in my country does not put on it figures of Diana the Huntress or the Apollo Belvedere. He wants something substantial, something as cheap as possible, and it is in regard to these beams and forms that I take my position and make my argument.

I say this taxation is enormous. Why, Mr. President, when men come out in their own organ, in the Steel Bulletin, and announce definitely the existence of this trust and say, "What are you going to do about it? Our customers do not complain; what business is it of yours?" are we to be told by the Finance Committee, who reported this bill, that we must take their declarations and their conclusions in regard to these matters and ignore what we see and what we know and what the people of this country feel in their daily transactions?

I said yesterday, and I repeat, there is not one single item in this bill that emphasizes more distinctly and fully the difference between the two parties upon this question. Here is an unnecessary tax. Here is a tax which is piling up colossal fortunes, putting money into the pockets of a few manufacturers. The Senator from Ohio says these manufacturers are increasing in number. Ah, Mr. President, but as they increase they increase the profit of the trust. Not one of them in this country can to-day compete with that trust. The whole business of this country is conducted by trusts. There is not a single article of absolute necessity to the people but is controlled by these trusts, and yet the Senator from Ohio says, continue the tax and by some sort of necromantic, magical, nebulous process that no man can understand the trust will go to pieces and other manufacturers will compete.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 104, lines 446 and 447, it is proposed to strike out the words "one and one-tenth cent," and insert "six-tenths of 1 cent;" so as to read:

> 130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, six-tenths of 1 cent per pound.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I should have liked very much to have had an opportunity, in the consideration of this bill, to consider each of the various amendments proposed upon its merits. For one I have never had an extreme view either in the matter of the reduction or the increase of duties, but the country expected that there would have been a moderate decrease in the rates and revenues made by a bill so framed as to relieve the inequalities of the present tariff without interfering with the capital invested or the labor employed in the manufactures; but in the midst of a campaign and for political purposes, as I have no doubt, this bill has been framed, its basis being a reduction of the revenue on two or three articles—tobacco and sugar principally—and the remainder of it framed for the purpose of unduly increasing the profits of certain manufacturing industries; and we are met to-day in the Senate, when a proposition is offered to modify or reduce or correct a single item in this bill, with the avowed statement that it can not be done; that the majority of the Senate will not consider the bill item by item, but vote solidly to keep it as it is.

Now take this article under consideration. I have no question, from my knowledge of the iron-beam business, that 1 cent a pound would have been ample, and possibly more than was necessary, to protect that industry and all the labor employed in it. My impression is, and my belief has been always, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee proposing six-tenths of a cent was too great and too radical a reduction at this time; but I am forced, it seems, by the Republican majority to accept their proposition or vote against all reductions.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, as one member on this side of the Chamber I would like to disclaim entirely occupying any such position as that which the Senator is now describing.

Mr. GORMAN. I accept the statement of the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who stated upon the floor that this bill ought to be accepted in its details as it came from the Committee on Finance; and we have had the statement of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and of the Senator in the rear of me from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] that the bill was framed in the Committee on Finance by three of its members alone, three of the Republican members of the committee, and framed at a time, as we all understand, to draw sharply the line between the North and South in the great contest through which we have just passsed. What I complain of is that under the statement of the Senator from Ohio, a leading member of that committee, we are not to have the opportunity to vote intelligently upon the merits of this question except by party lines.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Maryland will allow me one moment. I entirely agree with him that this bill should be discussed in detail upon the merits of each item, and so far as I am concerned as a member of the Finance Committee I disclaim any idea that this bill is immaculate in its provisions at this moment. I expect for one that the Finance Committee itself will, before this bill is concluded, offer several amendments to its provisions. I think there are several defects in it that have already been disclosed in debate and by the examination of witnesses who have come before us.

I think myself, and I will say it now, that the steel-beam makers can get along with 1 cent a pound duty on steel beams, and at some proper time, with the consent of the Finance Committee, I shall be glad to make that motion if I can do so.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Why not vote on this motion?

Mr. ALLISON. I am going to vote on this motion when we get to the vote. I am not in favor of the motion.

I do not want to interrupt the Senator from Maryland further except to say that for myself I disclaim presenting a bill here that is to be put through upon party lines or for party reasons or for party purposes. I shall listen with pleasure to any criticism that may be made upon the details of this measure. In its general framework it is a bill intended to protect American industry and American labor, to use a common phrase here, and as to its details I stand ready to listen to amendments and to vote for them if they convince my judgment that the rate named is either too high or too low. I think some of these items are too low, and I have no doubt I shall vote to raise them. I think some are too high, and I shall vote to reduce them.

I only rose to say this much in response to the Senator's remark respecting the attitude of the Republican members of the Finance Committee.

Mr. GORMAN. I am very glad to have the statement of the Senator from Iowa, that the bill is not perfect.

Now, the Senator from Iowa understands perfectly, as all of us do, that when this bill was framed as a substitute for the one coming here from the other House, in the midst of a heated campaign, when the object of the party to which the Senator belongs, and of which he is a leading member and one of its most astute managers—he knew success could not be had in the election unless in drawing this bill it should be so framed as to excite the cupidity of the manufacturers beyond anything they had dreamed of before; unless his party could show to them that there were increased profits in this legislation proposed to be considered by the Senate, there was no earthly hope for the success of his party, and that the reductions of the revenue should come from another section of the country. Under the circumstances, it is no wonder that such a bill was framed.

It is no wonder that there are more than one hundred items upon which there is an increase over the present war tariff, under which the manufacturers have all lived and prospered. There is not a schedule from the iron industry through to the end of the bill where there is not an increase of duty on something that they produce. We all understand it was for a political purpose, and we all understand how it was possible for the Senator from Iowa, at the time and under the circumstances, to press this measure, but I do not understand why it is after the election.

But the Senator from Iowa continues to do as he has done in the last ten days in the consideration of his bill, to vote his party as a unit upon every question and prevent us from reducing these duties where a reduction will not hurt the manufacturing interest of the country.

If the Senator is convinced that his bill is imperfect, as he now states; if he believes now that there are amendments that ought to be made to it, why not recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance and bring forth a measure that is somewhat more perfect? If he will not do that, why does he insist that his party shall vote down every amendment offered by a Democrat, whether it be right or wrong, and hold out to us only the hope that hereafter the Committee on Finance may bring in an amendment covering the very case?

Mr. President, I do not believe it wise or proper. I do not think there is any interest in the country that demands that this matter should now be considered in a mere partisan spirit. I for one am ready to take up every item in this bill and consider it and vote for it upon its merits. I can not vote for the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, because I believe that amendment is too radical, but I do want a reduction in the duty on that particular article. Everybody who is familiar with the facts is perfectly well aware that it can be reduced at least to 1 cent, as the Senator from Iowa has now admitted, with perfect safety, and so it runs through the balance of these schedules.

I did not intend to debate this bill, but rose only for the purpose of saying that owing to the manner in which the measure is proposed to be considered by the Senator from Iowa and his party, by voting down every amendment offered from this side of the Chamber, there is nothing left for those of us who desire to pursue a conservative course except to vote for amendments for reduction, as I have done in some cases, where, if the measure were being considered upon its merits and not by a party vote, I would probably have voted otherwise.

If the Senator from Iowa and his political associates have determined to continue the consideration of this bill in the same spirit which has been evinced to-day the country will understand that they do it not with the hope of passing the bill, but because they know it never can be accepted elsewhere, and it will be as equally well understood that they desire to defeat legislation at this session of Congress and to keep open a question which affects every business interest in the country.

You have the power to do it. You can, and probably will, keep this question before Congress for the next year. There will be ample time for the Democratic party to convince the country that their demand for a reduction of the taxes on the necessaries of life can be complied with and yet give ample protection to American industries to the full extent of the difference in the cost of labor and yield a fair profit to the manufacturer.

The distinction, and the sharp distinction, has been made by the Republican party through its action in this body, not only in making the rate of duties sufficient to protect the difference in the cost of labor, but by excessive duties building up these monopolies far beyond anything that has ever been dreamt of even during the times of war.

Now, Mr. President, look at the schedule in this bill and you will see some fifty or one hundred articles on which there is an increase of duty. I have here on this paper some of the increases taken from the statement furnished from the Treasury Department. I will have them inserted in the RECORD. This statement shows the present duty and rate proposed by the Senate bill. I think, unless my friend from Iowa has gone over that schedule carefully, he will be amazed at the immense, the outrageous, and the uncalled-for increases that have been made not only in the iron schedule, but taking the cotton schedule, the most enormous and extraordinary increases have been made in nearly every article in that schedule, also, while manufacturers flourish now and want nothing better than to be let alone, and when there are no interests in the country that have been demanding an increase.

Mr. President, it was probably too much to expect that so soon after the election we could consider this question merely as a business proposition, and yet I confess that I did hope that the members of both parties would not feel bound to adhere to all the propositions presented during the last session; that we would be able by fair consideration, conciliation, and compromise—for it is impossible to perfect a great revenue measure affecting every interest in the country without concession and compromise—to pass a bill reducing the revenues of the Treasury. But the majority of this body have decreed otherwise. I regret it and I believe the people of the country will be disappointed, but the responsibility must rest upon the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, who are soon to come into possession of all the branches of the Government.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], whom I do not now see in his seat, to the fact that his amendment proposes to reduce the protection afforded to the manufacturers of beams, etc., as found in this paragraph, even below that found in the House bill. It will be remembered that the House bill reduces the duty on pig-iron somewhat below the Senate bill. It will be remembered that yesterday the Senators on the other side of the Chamber refused to entertain a motion to reduce the duty on pig-iron.

It will be remembered also that in other and different preparations of iron and in more advanced stages which are used in the manufacture of beams and girders that side of the Chamber refused a modification of the duty. When the Senator from Tennessee proposes six-tenths of a cent a pound on beams and girders he puts it much below the average structure of the House bill. I call his attention further to the fact that the amendment he offers places this item entirely out of proportion with the other provisions and paragraphs in the metal schedule of the bill which have already been voted in the bill by the Senate.

A single word with respect to the debate which has taken place this morning on the Senate bill. I can scarcely believe that the Senators on the other side of the Chamber meant anything more than to simply make a campaign argument for the manufacturers of the country when this measure was reported to the Senate.

I can not believe that a great political party in this country, claiming to be first in intelligence and in patriotism, in honesty and in justice to all sections of the country and all the people of the country, in a time of profound peace, with an overflowing Treasury, of which the Secretary of the Treasury was warning us day after day and asking us to assist him in getting rid of it, would bring a tariff bill before the Senate that is 15 per cent. higher on the average than the tariff bill proposed by the honorable chairman of the Finance Committee, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], in 1861 and 1862, and that was a time of war, when the Treasury was bankrupt, when we were confronted with a great war and nobody knew when or how it was to end.

I think I quote correctly the language of the distinguished Senator on that occasion when, in bringing his bill before the House of Representatives and asking for an increase of duty, he stated the purpose, and what was it? Why, said he, "The Treasury is bankrupt; we want an increase of revenue; the Government must have it; we are spending millions of dollars every day above the receipts of the Government, and we demand more revenue."

As near as I can find out from the record made here, there was scarcely a dissent upon any side of the Chamber to an increase of the duties. The honorable Senator from Vermont then said, "I do not offer this bill because the industries of the country need more protection; experience has proved that they have all the protection they need." What was the average rate of protection then? Less than 20 per cent. at that time, and the increase was made so that the average during the four years of war from 1861 to 1865 was scarcely greater than 30 per cent.; and here, now, in time of profound peace, with an overflowing Treasury, with great trusts and combinations formed all over this country, which this high protective tariff helps to keep in operation and to keep in force and to aid, the Finance Committee of the Senate come before this body with a bill which proposes to increase the taxes upon the people greater than they are now, and far greater than any tariff bill has ever before proposed.

I say I can not believe that it was brought in for any other purpose than a campaign purpose; and when the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] compliments that side of the Chamber upon the magnificent victory they gained, I want to say this, that to my mind it was obtained by the most disgraceful methods that were ever brought before a free people.

No sooner was this tariff bill brought before the Senate than there were items taken from it; each individual industry was furnished with a slip of paper containing a comparison between the two bills, which was read by the owners of the factories before their employés; it was shown that the Senate bill proposed to increase the duties, and thereupon said the owner of the factory, "If we get an increase of duty we will give you an increase of wages."

What was the result? Why, it was a sermon preached to a poor man depending upon his daily labor for the necessaries of life. But good care was taken when the schedule was furnished for a certain particular industry, that another schedule for another industry, which greatly increased the cost of living to said employé, was not furnished them. No, no, they had no business with that; they had no use for that. They were simply wanted to know how much the duty was increased upon the particular industry in which they were employed.

Coupled with that came the statement, "You increase the duties and we will increase the rate of wages; the House bill lowers wages to you." That was the way this campaign was conducted. Upon one side it was a campaign of education, I admit, because we were convincing or attempting to convince the consumers that it was for their interest, that it was for the interest of labor, that it was for the interest of the manufacturers themselves to have lower rates of duty, to have raw materials placed upon the free-list, and in that way give more hours and better wages to labor by not killing the consumption, as the Senate bill proposes to do by causing high prices for products, but rather increase consumption at home and extend the area of our markets to all other parts of the earth. That was the policy of education that we proposed, and in some of the States of the Union, I am glad to be able to say, that policy met with the acceptance and concurrence of the people.

I want to say further that when the people have become as well educated in other States the result will be that there will be an overwhelming majority in favor of a moderate reduction. Now, let me say to my friends on the opposite side of the Chamber, it was a campaign of self-interest and nothing more, a campaign to secure votes, and I expected when this Senate met on the 3d day of December to see this bill thrown overboard. I had no expectation that it would be brought before the Senate for its serious consideration. I thought it could not be possible after these industries have lived and grown and strengthened themselves for twenty-four years since the war that there was any necessity for giving to three hundred thousand factory-owners in this country the right to impose 15 per cent. more upon the products of their factories than before. It seems I thought better of the Republican party than it deserved.

It was a campaign of deceit. Why, sir, Republican orators were traveling all over this country and scaring the laborer, or attempting to do it. The laborer in factories will some time find out, if he has not yet reached that point, that when the duties are high, when trusts and combinations are formed as they are formed now and protected by high rates of duty to prevent foreign importation, the manufacturers can meet together, determine the output of the factories, and fix the price for which their goods shall be sold. They can also in the same breath fix the wages of labor, and the laborer practically becomes the slave of the man who employs him. The man who gives me employment, which I must have or starve, that man is my master, let me call him what I may.

There was no reasonable objection to be found to the policy of the House bill. It did not propose to reduce the tariff on dutiable articles to any very great extent. It was based upon the broad catholic principle of letting the manufacturers have their raw material cheap and then maintain a protective duty for the labor employed in the factories, thereby giving our producers the entire home market of 65,000,000 people, and as well the markets outside of this country with 500,000,000 more consumers who want to buy of us.

Now, to go back to the pending question, I wish to say to the Senator from Tennessee that, considering, as we must, the absolute refusal to make reductions on the material which enters into these beams and girders, the amendment he proposes reduces the duty very much below the reductions in the House bill, which I consider very extreme, and considering at the same time the whole structure of this bill, for one, if it be the determination of that side of the Chamber to maintain the highest rates of duty all through in every schedule and upon every manufactured article, I am not willing to pick out one industry and reduce it far below a point that will keep it in proportion with others.

In other words, if high protection be the policy, I do not intend by my vote to strangle an industry of my State and give high protection to the industries of a neighboring State. New Jersey is entitled to fair play, and that she must have. New Jersey is largely engaged in the manufacture of structural iron.

Therefore I can not vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, a Senator just now remarked to me that the speech of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] was a little too late for the last election and a little too early for the next, and I think there is some force in that statement. But the Senator from New Jersey winds up very well, and I think for one I can take a little scolding from the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] when they conclude their arguments by stating that they will vote against the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. But there are a few things which I think might as well be understood now as at any other time respecting this bill; and one is, that those who prepared this measure and presented it to the Senate did not prepare it in the spirit disclosed in the bill which was sent to us from the House of Representatives; and when the Senator from New Jersey says that he supposed this measure, as soon as this session began, would be laid aside, it shows what he supposed all the time was involved in its preparation and its presentation.

Mr. President, there never has been a time when the present Committee on Finance did not know that a revision of the present tariff was absolutely necessary and that a reduction of the revenue was necessary, and those of us who had the responsibility of this bill took up the schedules in the tariff and considered them item by item upon our responsibility as Senators, and not for the base purpose of making party capital, as I believe has too much characterized some attempted legislation on this subject.

This measure was prepared upon the idea that the American people should have fair and reasonable protection as respects the wages of labor and as respects the industries established in this country. When the Senator from New Jersey says that these schedules were read in the manufactories in order to make the laboring men vote the Republican ticket, it may be a truthful statement; but I am quite sure that no such effort was made on the part of the Committee on Finance; and if those interested in the success of this great principle adopted that method of reaching the people, I have no objection to it. But I think it very clear that there are some places where these schedules were not read, and those places probably were the rum shops of New Jersey. I do not think they interested themselves particularly in these schedules during the last election.

Mr. FRYE. Particularly in Hudson County.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know about the counties, but I mention that as an illustration in answer to the remarks of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRYE. The whole majority was in Hudson County, being over 8,000 there, while the whole majority in the State was not much over 7,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I have refrained, as Senators know, from a partisan discussion of this bill or any of its details not only now but when the bill was reported to the Senate in October. I stated distinctly then on behalf of the committee that this measure was presented as the best solution the committee could make of a difficult problem in its details, and that there were doubtless defects in the scheme which, when pointed out to the committee, either by those interested in the subject, whether as consumers or producers of articles, the Committee on Finance would be ready to hear and ready to make such modifications and changes as further inquiry should seem to make necessary.

The Senator from New Jersey knows perfectly well that our committee-room has been open to his constituents and to the constituents of every other Senator on this floor for the purpose of enabling us to gather information respecting the detailed items of this bill, and therefore I only repeat to-day in the presence of the Senator from Maryland what I stated on this floor many times during the discussion in October, that we were ready to amend this bill wherever it seemed necessary to amend it after a further examination.

Now, as to the framework of the bill, we started out with the idea that it should be a bill looking to the interests of the citizens of this country and not the interests of citizens of any other country. We intended to make this bill fairly protective to American interests, American producers, and American laborers, and we did not look in fixing the details of the measure to whether we raised a schedule 1 per cent. or 10 per cent., or reduced it 1 per cent. or 10. We intended in framing the measure that it should be a bill which would encourage the production of articles in our own country rather than in other countries. That is the principle of it; and when the Senator from Maryland says now he has picked out of it a number of items showing an increase of duties, he has stated nothing new to the subcommittee or the Committee on Finance. In this very iron and steel schedule now under consideration we have increased a large number of items, and where we have made increases we have made them because upon the representations made to us we found that American producers of iron and steel at the rate existing under the present law could not compete with foreigners upon terms of equality, and when we found such a condition existing we raised the rate of duty, and there are a number of cases where that is done.

Now, the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Jersey, as well as the Senator from Missouri, state that we are encouraging trusts and combinations by this process. The Senator from Missouri in his argument has stated that upon steel beams the profit is $33 a ton. Is there a man of sense who does not know that if there is that profit in the manufacture of steel beams, the six, or seven, or eight, or ten manufacturers who are now prepared to manufacture steel beams will have competition in our own country? Is it the theory of those who believe in protection to American industry that a half-dozen parties can continue for a long period of time to make large profits upon any single industry? Here is the State of Alabama, with natural resources for the production of iron unsurpassed in this country or any other. If a profit of $33 per ton, or one-third of $33 per ton, can be made by the production of beams from pig-iron, is it possible that the capitalists of this country and the owners of iron will not take advantage of that fact and commence the manufacture of these articles?

As I stated the other day—and while I am upon this subject I will state it now—it is true that for some years the manufacture of structural iron was confined to a few manufacturers. It is also true that from time to time the manufacturers engaged in the manufacture of iron and steel have been enlarging their works so as to take in this particular class of manufacture, and although there has been an agreement with respect to prices in the past years, it was stated to the Committee on Finance that there are four manufactories now producing structural iron and steel that are not in this agreement as respects prices. It is perfectly well known that new establishments are being erected in the West for the purpose of making structural iron and steel, and that one or two of them have been opened during the past year, and that others will be during this winter. Thus the competition in this country will bring down the price nearly to the cost of production. Does the Senator from Missouri believe that the great iron interest of his own State, the enterprising and energetic men of his State, will allow the Phœnix Iron Company, or the Pennsylvania Steel Company, or the Union Iron Company of Pittsburgh, to make $33 a ton upon this simple class of production without entering into the manufacture of it themselves?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VEST. When steel rails in this country were selling at the enormous price, $85, $90, and even $100 a ton, the Vulcan Iron Works of my State went into a contract with the steel-rail trust which then existed and received $500,000 each year for three years not to run, and they closed down; and that is the ordinary proceeding of these trusts all over the country.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not discussing trusts.

Mr. VEST. I am.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. The Senator can take his own time to do it. I am only calling attention to the fact that with the enterprise, the energy, the activity we have in this country, the men engaged in a particular manufacture will not allow two or three men or a half-dozen men to make $30 a ton or one-third of that sum on any particular class of iron or steel. It is absurd to talk about it.

These people are gradually enlarging their works, and I have no doubt, if we could ascertain the facts to-day, that structural iron and steel is sold in this country at not a very large profit. It may have been sold and doubtless has been sold at a large profit. I take cum grano salis the statement, made in the House of Representatives, if you please, that one firm made a million of dollars in a single year upon structural iron and steel. The Senator from Missouri says he takes that as true because it has not been denied. I have no doubt it has been denied. I have no doubt of its untruthfulness.

But the idea of this iron and steel schedule is—and it may as well be understood in the beginning—to give such protection to our own people as will encourage the production of the great body of articles that are used from iron and steel in this country. That is the aim and purpose of this metal schedule. I understand it to be the aim and purpose both of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Maryland, because they both warned the Senator from Tennessee that they would not go to a point where our own people can not successfully manufacture these articles.

The Senator from Maryland stated that he was surprised to see this bill conducted in the manner in which it is conducted—on a partisan scale. Why, Mr. President, who is doing that? Certainly not this side of the Chamber. What spectacle did we see yesterday? We saw the spectacle of the Senator from New Jersey standing in his place and offering clauses of the Mills bill seriatim to items in this bill, whether they were wise or otherwise. We saw him offering amendments where the ad valorem duty was only 17 per cent., merely because he found a different rate in the Mills bill. I sat in my seat without responding to his remarks yesterday with reference to this matter, and there has not been a single amendment offered to this bill thus far that has not been taken body and breeches from the Mills bill. If Senators on the opposite side of the Chamber are going to confront us at every stage of the proceeding with the Mills bill, I give them my word, so far as I am concerned, that they shall have enough of it.

This bill differs from the House bill, which the Senator from New Jersey offered yesterday seriatim, in the fact that it does not come here with the indorsement of any party, or of a national convention, or of a national committee, or of an executive message. It comes here with no force and power except that force and power which comes from argument in this body as respects its detailed provisions.

The Senator from New Jersey complains that the bill is now brought in for consideration. What would he have said if when this session began the Committee on Finance had set aside this bill and gone to the consideration of other business, in the face of the promise we made in the Senate, and the promise we made in good faith, that this bill should be considered at this session of Congress? What has been the progress of the bill? I have endeavored day by day to have it considered. Motions for adjournment have come early and often from that side of the Chamber. Yesterday I was requested to consent to an early adjournment for a reason which I will not make public here, but for a reason which has disclosed itself in an attack all along the line upon this bill this morning.

If Senators on that side of the Chamber have come in this morning invigorated and refreshed by the consultation which the newspapers state that they had last night, if they come here with a determination to fight this bill in every inch and in every item, and for the purpose of going over this Presidential election—in other words, dying hard again after they have been killed once [laughter]—if that is their policy during this session of Congress, in order that there shall be no legislation upon the tariff question, in order that the Senate shall not send to the House of Representatives its judgment as respects this great question of the tariff, so be it. For one, as a member of the Finance Committee, I can stand here as long as they can; I can stand early adjournments if they insist upon them; and if they want to attack these items and show up the enormities and atrocities of this bill, so be it. I think the Committee on Finance will be able to give a reason at least for the various provisions of this bill as we come to them, and I am ready to discuss each and every one of them, and if on the whole the discussion discloses that these items are unjust to the consumers of our country or the manufacturers or the laborers, I stand here as ready as any gentleman on that side of the Chamber who is honest in his purpose to make amendments to the bill. I do not intend to run it as a partisan machine; but if it is to be run as a partisan machine on that side of the Chamber, as indicated this morning after the caucus of yesterday, let it come from that side of the Chamber, and I give notice that so far as I have authority with reference to this measure, I shall ask for its consideration every day in the morning hour and at 2 o'clock until disposed of.

Mr. MCPHERSON. A single word in reply to the Senator from Iowa. In the first place he charges me with having yesterday proposed as amendments to the Senate bill now under consideration items found in the Mills bill. I plead guilty to that charge, and because the items I found in the Mills bill were such as I believed ought to be incorporated in the Senate bill. I began at the basis of the whole metal schedule and proposed to reduce it in accordance with what I thought true justice to all interests. I believed that $6 per ton was duty enough upon pig-iron. I believed a duty of $20 a ton was enough upon iron and steel forms manufactured by use of charcoal. If those amendments had been agreed to, it would have permitted certain reductions to be made in the metal schedules all the way through. I want the Senator from Iowa to understand that I am not committed in any shape or form to the House bill known as the Mills bill with respect to the dutiable-list.

Mr. ALLISON. I know that.

Mr. MCPHERSON. When I signed the minority report I expressly stated that I was not committed to any particular policy of tariff revision, but I am committed to a fair and proper policy of tariff revision and shall insist upon it, whatever any other Senator on this side or that side of the Chamber may do.

I exceedingly regret the unfortunate reference which the Senator from Iowa has seen fit to make to the rum interest, as he is pleased to call it, of the county of Hudson and State of New Jersey. I do not know what that had to do particularly with the electoral ticket or the national campaign. I should suppose that the so-called "rum interest" of New Jersey, or even of other States, for that matter, if they had consulted their own personal benefit, would have been found voting with the Republican party, which is in favor of freer rum rather than reduce the duties upon the necessaries of life.

But I think it is more complimentary than otherwise to what the Senator is pleased to call "the rum interest of New Jersey" to find their votes in favor of cheaper blankets, cheaper clothing, and willing instead to pay a little higher price for their rum. That is what they have done in this campaign, and the Senator wonders why the free-rum platform of the Republican party failed in its purpose.

The Senator from Maine who sits nearest me [Mr. FRYE] sotto voce undertook to tell the Senate exactly what the majority had been in the county of Hudson. If the Senator was in his seat I would like to inform him that the majority given in the county of Hudson was a legitimate, honest majority; a vote cast by an honest, intelligent people; by honest methods, for honest purposes. Can you say as much for other States?

There was not a single manufacturing district in my State which did not give an increased Democratic vote, even above the natural increase of the voting population. The great silk district, located in the county of Passaic, gave a largely increased Democratic majority, or rather reduced the Republican majority one-half, which is only another way of saying it. The county of Essex, which for extent and variety of manufacturing interests stands pre-eminently the first county of the Union, considering its population, heretofore strongly Republican, gave a largely increased Democratic vote; giving Mr. Cleveland a majority, whereas in 1884 it gave 1,600 majority for Blaine.

The pottery district did not give an increased majority against us. The great glass district in South New Jersey, although they are immediately under the eye of the Pennsylvanians and controlled in a measure by the Pennsylvania tariff heresy and subject in a great measure to Pennsylvania methods—and since this campaign has ended we have heard very much about those methods—I say the glass district also gave an increased Democratic vote.

This revolution in sentiment was not confined to the county of Hudson, where a great increase of the Democratic vote was found, but in every manufacturing district of the State and among every variety of manufacture the Democratic vote increased.

To say that rum did all this is a very grave indictment of a people who never yet saw the necessity of depriving any citizen of the State of his natural rights or abridged his personal liberty to keep him sober. Can Iowa say so much?

Now, Mr. President, a single question and I have done. The Senator from Iowa undertakes to vindicate his bill. I want to ask that Senator if he finds any necessity existing for a higher rate of duty upon all articles in this country in 1888 under the conditions that now exist than was necessary in 1861 and 1862, when we were confronted by a great war? I await his answer.

Mr. ALLISON. Why, Mr. President, does the Senator require an answer to a question of that character?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think it needs an answer.

Mr. ALLISON. Whether I regard a higher duty necessary now upon all articles of consumption in this country than was imposed in 1861! Of course I do not. But whatever duty is necessary to maintain our industries in competition with similar industries in other countries I maintain is necessary now, if we believe in fostering our own industries. Therefore, that being the general principle, it is necessary or at least it is wise for us to ascertain, if we can, what that line is, and that is what I supposed this bill contains. If the Senator from New Jersey proclaims now that he is not in favor of that, then he must be in favor of the other proposition, which is that we shall open our markets to the free and unimpeded importations of the products of producers of other countries, thus placing us upon a level with them.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have often heard it stated——

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me a single word?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. It is manifest that we require a much larger revenue than we did in 1861 and 1862 on account of the doubling of the growth of the country. It takes a larger amount to support a government of 65,000,000 than one of 30,000,000. Our pension list is more now than the whole expenses of the Government were in 1861 and 1862.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator from Vermont proposes now, because the present tariff is yielding too much revenue, to prevent any revenue coming into the Treasury through such an increase of duties as will prevent importations! No, Mr. President. I have heard the argument here and elsewhere by gentlemen on that side of the Chamber that the reason for this increase of duties was because of the increased wages paid to American workmen. They are bolder now, and some of them cry out for prohibitory tariffs in the interest of the factory owner.

When the question is asked, why do you want a protective tariff? the farmer of the Senator's own State might rise up and ask why capital engaged in a manufacturing industry was any more entitled to protection than the capital employed in his farm, which has no protection at all. And that would be a very natural and proper question to ask. Ah, but says the Senator in reply, it is to protect the labor employed in that industry.

Now we turn to the census of 1880, which is taken to be a true and faithful report because it was a report copied from the books of the factories themselves, which declares for instance upon this metal schedule that the entire labor cost, not the difference between the rates of wages paid here and the rates paid abroad, which should be the basis of course upon which this estimate is founded, but the entire labor cost is less than half the duty you impose upon the article itself. Who then gets the benefit? Nobody can get it but the owner of the factory, and here the Senator from Iowa stands in his place and demands the extra cent, or half a cent or one-tenth of a cent.

Take the woolen schedule, if you please. Under the census of 1880 the entire labor cost in the woolen factories was less than 19 per cent. of the cost of the goods, and to-day the Senator from Iowa comes in here with a bill proposing a rate of duty of 35 and 40 per cent., three times the difference paid for wages in this country above the current rates in other countries; and yet he is not satisfied with that!

Take the cotton schedule. Twenty-one per cent., so says the census of 1880, represents nearly the entire labor cost of the goods, and what is the duty? Thirty-five to 40 per cent. in this bill, and even as high as 50 per cent. And yet the cry is protection to American labor, which labor never gets. Who ever knew of wages being increased in a highly-protected industry that was not drawn out of it by organizations of labor striking for a larger share of the bounty than was accorded them?

I did not believe until the Senator told me to-day that he was at all serious in his determination to press this bill to a vote, because I did not believe the industries of this country could stand it. I do not believe the factory owners can stand it. Certainly the consumer can not, and the labor employed in the factories hereafter under these high rates of duties perhaps may be able to work one half the time on full pay and the other half on half pay, or half time, or both, owing to overproduction and a want of a market, because the high price of the goods kills consumption.

What I found fault with was that almost every single industry in this country was able to come and rap at the door of the Finance Committee and get a hearing before that committee, and I never learned that any very great number of consumers of goods or the labor employed in our factories were there and had much consideration. The wool-grower was supposed to know what he wanted and he was given 1 cent a pound more tax upon his product. The woolen manufacturer was supposed to know what he wanted, and he was enabled to fix the rate to give him a monopoly of the business or satisfactory profits by fixing the tax upon his competitor's goods. That is the way in which this whole thing has been built up; and when we find fault with it and say it is wrong as a matter of policy, then the Senator from Iowa makes answer—as he has made answer to-day—which in short is no answer at all.

Now, I want to submit to the other side of the Chamber, if that is the best reason you can give, had you not better refer this bill to the committee again to be revised? The campaign is ended; the effect has been felt; labor has been frightened to a certain extent, because labor has not been educated up to the standard and did not see it as the people of Hudson County, New Jersey, happened to see it, that it was better to have cheap clothing and cheap blankets than free whisky. Let us have a longer discussion of it. I think that it is just as well to get along under the existing tariff as it is rather than increase the rates, and therefore I would infinitely prefer the present tariff, conditions and all, to your theory.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the several Senators who have spoken on the other side of the question have expressed a desire that we should proceed to the discussion of this measure and of its various provisions upon the merits which they present, and that each of these provisions should be discussed without regard to the others. I propose in what I shall say to accommodate them, and to call the attention of the Senate to some of the practical aspects of the discussion of the amendment which is now pending, which have been disclosed in the remarks of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON].

The Senator from Missouri reads from a speech made in the House of Representatives by Hon. WILLIAM L. SCOTT, of Pennsylvania, who, the Senator from Missouri states, is a large iron and coal merchant or manufacturer, an expert in matters of this kind. The statement of Mr. SCOTT is to this effect, that steel beams can be produced in this country, and are produced in this country, at a cost of $28.02 per ton, the foreign cost being $24 a ton, and the difference between the foreign cost and the domestic cost $4 a ton. If this statement is true or approximately true, the rate now suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] is not only amply protective to the steel-beam industry in this country, but it is greatly in excess of the rate required. Certainly if structural iron and steel can be produced in this country, according to the statement which has been read by the Senator from Missouri, for $28 a ton, and the cost on the other side is $24, $13.44 a ton, which is the rate proposed by the Senator from Tennessee, is excessive; and if, as the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Jersey say, they only desire to equalize conditions in this country, they are bound not only to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee but to seek to have that rate reduced.

I will say frankly for myself that I occupy precisely the position which the Senator from Maryland says he occupies. I only ask that the people of this country, the producers of this country, shall live under equal conditions; that equal facilities shall be afforded them as to their competitors on the other side of the water.

Is this statement made by the Senator from Missouri, based upon a speech of a member of the House of Representatives, true or anywhere near true? Will the Senator from New Jersey rise in his place and say that he believes it? Will the Senator from Maryland say that he believes it? Will any Senator say that he believes that statement to be approximately true? Then why is it brought here as the basis of our action upon a serious matter of this kind, affecting great industries in this country? I have stated, upon the authority of the superintendent of a large manufacturing concern in the State of the Senator from New Jersey, that the cost of producing steel beams from pig-iron is more than $40 a ton. Does the Senator deny that statement, or does the Senator from Maryland deny that statement? There is a difference between $12 a ton, between the statement of the member of the House of Representatives from Pennsylvania, and that of the superintendent of the Cooper & Hewitt Works, in the city of Trenton, N. J. Which of those is correct? I believe that a man who is engaged in the practical manufacture of these goods, even though a Democrat, will tell the truth about it, and that it does cost $40 a ton above the cost of pig-iron to produce steel beams and these forms of structural iron.

Now, if the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from New Jersey are willing to vote for a rate which will equalize the cost between the two countries, based, as it is, upon the greater cost of labor in this country, then I am with them; and upon the definite information that the committee had they fixed the rate as they did, and if the Senators believe with us that the facts I have stated are correct——

Mr. GORMAN. Where does the Senator get his figures upon which this statement is based? I should like to hear the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island and have him show his calculations.

Mr. ALDRICH. I have already stated it, and I will restate it: The superintendent of Cooper & Hewitt's works in Trenton stated to me that the cost of making steel beams above the cost of pig-iron was $40 a ton, and that the cost in Belgium for doing the same work was not more than half that sum, or $20 a ton.

Mr. GORMAN. Now I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether that statement is based upon the average cost, taking all the different classes of beams made at that factory, known to be of the highest character in this country? I ask whether he does not know that that is not a fair statement of the average cost of beams in this country? I agree with the Senator from Rhode Island that the statement made by the Senator from Missouri is upon the lowest class of beams.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me? Does he believe any beams of any character can be made in this country for $28 a ton?

Mr. GORMAN. I have no question that the lower class of beams can be made for about $28 a ton, but in discussing this question, as I said a moment ago, you do not want it on political lines or on the mere statement of some individual. I am asking a Senator who has investigated this subject whether he does not know and believe to-day that the rate which has been reported of 1.1 cents is too high upon all the articles embraced in this item.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will answer the Senator's first question first. He asks if the difference in cost between Belgium and Trenton is upon the average of all the products of the mill. Undoubtedly it is, and it is the average of the product of the Trenton mill that is covered by the clause under consideration. It is, of course, all the goods produced by the Trenton mill which are covered by the item under consideration. I think that is a sufficient answer to the first question.

In regard to the other question, I will say that the committee in the first instance fixed this rate at 1 cent a pound. Afterwards, upon the statement of one of these manufacturers, it was increased to 1.10 cents. My own impression agrees with that of the Senator from Iowa, that these people can probably live upon 1 cent a pound, and at the proper time I shall vote for an amendment to make the rate a cent a pound.

But what I was trying to call to the attention of the Senate was that if they believe the statement of the Senator from Missouri, the rate now proposed is altogether too high, instead of being too low.

One other word about the combination among the manufacturers of steel beams in this country. The Senator from Iowa has already stated that there are three or four large corporations now engaged in the manufacture of structural iron and steel that are not members of this combination. The combination itself is not in any sense a trust. The business of these concerns is not pooled. It is simply a combination, which may last twenty-four hours or may last twenty years, to regulate the price so far as the members of the combination are concerned. One of the three or four largest steel concerns in the United States that are engaged in the manufacture is the North Chicago Rolling Mill Company, of which the Senator from Illinois knows the character as well as myself. It is one of the largest concerns in the United States. It is now engaged in making structural iron, and is not a member of this combination. I have no doubt myself that all the large works of the country will soon be engaged in the manufacture of structural iron and steel, and the competition thus engendered will regulate prices sufficiently in this country.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senator from Iowa takes advantage of the movement for an early adjournment yesterday, which my friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] says was about 4 o'clock, to intimate that gentlemen on this side of the Chamber after conference yesterday have come in today to open fire on this bill all along the line, and intimates it was the decree of the caucus that the Democrats are to contest his bill, item by item, and prevent its passage.

I think I have a perfect right to say—and I believe it to be true of every gentleman on this side of the Chamber, although I have no right to speak for anybody but myself—that after the declaration of the Senator from Ohio yesterday, in which he said that we ought not to be astonished at the fact that those on the other side of the Chamber followed blindly the recommendation of the committee upon every item of the bill, because they thought it was wise to do it (that was the intimation; I do not mean the exact language), coupled with the fact that upon every vote upon every amendment that was offered there was a strict party vote, some of us thought it was time for consultation, as my friend from Iowa and his associates are understood through the public press to have had their consultation, and we naturally came to the conclusion that it was time for us to move as a party on this side.

But I stated further what I complained of was the attitude of Senators on the other side. I say now with great frankness that there is no party intention to obstruct your legislation, but if you insist in pressing through this bill without listening to the reasons in any case for a change, you are simply fighting the battle of the last campaign over again. You know too well the history of legislation to suppose that, with a measure pressed with such a motive and intent, it will be possible for you to pass the bill at this session; and you press it with that knowledge, and, as I have a right to assume, for the purpose of defeating the consummation of any measure looking to a reduction of taxation.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa makes another statement, that if the Senator from New Jersey and myself are sincere in our desire to fix a rate of duty that will not interfere with the capital invested in these great enterprises, or the labor employed in them, that that is his object and that is the object of the bill. I say it goes away beyond it. The present tariff laws were made by the Republican party. It has been its boast that it promoted every industry in the land. Our claim has been that in many instances it has laid an onerous tax away beyond the necessities of the case, and the result has been monopoly, combinations, and trusts.

The country has been more than satisfied that the duties heretofore levied are more than are required to protect American industries. The Senator from Iowa knows there was an excuse for his bill before November last on the line on which his party was then, with the pledges made by himself, and the declaration made over and over again by every prominent member on the other side and often by the Senator from Iowa, that the existing tariff rates did require reduction and modification. Instead of reductions in duties you presented a substitute for the House bill just at the height of the excitement of a Presidential canvass.

When calm deliberation was impossible there was party advantage to be gained. Then you went away beyond the demand of any business interest or any party platform and increased the war tariff. You have increased the rates that you yourselves made in 1883, under which the manufacturers have been prosperous, ay, have reaped larger returns than those of any other country upon the face of the globe. Now, I say to you that this attempt to add to those rates, to increase these duties on one hundred or more articles, yes, two hundred of them, is wrong, is against the interests of the people of the country.

Now, I take up one or two of these schedules, and I should like to know from the Senator from Iowa how he can reconcile the increase on these articles with his declaration that he is for a reduction of these taxes when it can be done without impairing the capital invested or labor employed. They have not asked for more protection, but here are some of the increases. Taggers' iron or steel. The present rate of duty is 39.18 per cent., and you have increased it to 64.24 per cent. ad valorem, based upon the imports of 1887. You have taken all iron or steel valued at more than 10 cents and have increased the ad valorem duty from 13.86 and 10.97 to 45 per cent. ad valorem.

I will not read the whole of the list, but I will have this statement published.

Steel ingots, cogged ingots, you have increased from 45 per cent. ad valorem to 63.07 per cent. Strips of iron or steel from 52.63 to 56.48 per cent. Steel circular-saw plates from 37.32 to 44.77 per cent.

You have increased brass bedsteads and other household furniture from 35 per cent. to 45 per cent.; britannia-ware from 35 to 45 per cent.; iron bedsteads from 35 to 45 per cent.; umbrella and parasol ribs from 40 to 45 per cent. You have increased the duties on horses and mules from 20 per cent. ad valorem to 31.66, on cattle from 20 per cent. ad valorem to 37.21, and on cattle for breeding purposes, which are now free, you put a duty of 17.69 per cent., all in the interest, as a matter of course, of the farmers. On hogs you increased it from 20 per cent. to 21.10 per cent.

Now take the cotton schedule. You have cotton thread and yarn valued at over 25 cents and not exceeding 45 cents a pound from 42.31 per cent. to 50.75 per cent., and valued at 60 cents a pound and not over 70 cents from 50.89 to 50.90.

So it runs through this entire schedule where there are more than a hundred increases in the rates of duty, and yet the Senator from Iowa says we have no right to complain, and when we do complain he intimates that it is for partisan purposes, and when we object to these increases we are charged with being against the American laborer.

I repeat again that I am in favor in this legislation of so adjusting the tariff as to give entire protection to the capital invested and the labor employed in American industries, but I never will consent to these enormous increases which are now made by this bill, when there is no interest in the country that demands them and when they are made only for the purpose of increasing the profits of a comparatively few people who are engaged in those industries.

Paragraph Senate bill.	Articles.	Ad valorem equivalents at new rates based upon importations for fiscal year 1887.
		Existing law.	Senate bill.
		Per cent.	Per cent.
2	Acids, boracic:
	Commercial	80.51	94.58
	Pure	59.48	94.58
10	Ammonia:
	Carbonate of	20.00	26.45
11	Muriate of, or sal ammoniac	10.00	14.90
12	Sulphate of	20.00	24.66
19	Cement:
	Roman, Portland, and other hydraulic, in packages (barrels), in bulk	20.00	31.68
23	Cobalt, oxide of	20.00	27.29
34	Extracts and decoctions of logwood and other dye-wood	10.00	14.96
	Extract of sumac	20.00	25.75
	Hemlock bark, extract of, for tanning	20.00	50.00
35	Glue, valued above 7 cents per pound	20.00	25.00
37	Indigo, extracts of	10.00	10.50
45	Lead, orange mineral	70.00	82.08
54	Cod-liver oil	25.00	28.19
59	Olive oil	25.00	38.84
60	Whale and other fish oil, not otherwise provided for	25.00	30.18
64	Blanc-fixe, or satin white, or artificial sulphate of barytes	25.00	33.22
65	Frankfort black	20.00	25.00
75	Plaster Paris, ground or calcimined	20.00	21.40
85	Soap, castile	20.00	21.71
98	Varnishes, spirit varnishes, for the alcohol contained therein	95.30	123.79
102	Tiles, encaustic	35.00	45.00
103	Fire-brick, glazed, enameled, ornamented or decorated	20.00	45.00
131	Boiler or other plate iron or steel, etc.	31.01	39.69
134	Chains, less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter	44.37	53.25
144	Sheets of iron or steel, common or black, etc., thinner than No .29 wire gauge	30.00 30.00	68.97 64.25
146	Sheet, of iron or steel, pickled or cleaned by acid, thinner than No. 29 wire gauge	41.60	81.14
	Taggers' iron or steel	39.18	64.24

Paragraph Senate bill.	Articles.	Ad valorem equivalents at new rates based upon importations for fiscal year 1887. Existing law.	Senate bill.
		Per cent.	Per cent.
150	Wire rods, rivet, screw, nail, fence, etc., valued at 3 cents or less per pound	40.66	47.55
151	All iron or steel wire valued at more than 10 cents per pound	13.86 / 10.97	45.00 / 45.00
151	Iron or steel covered with cotton, etc., valued at more than 10 cents:
	Smaller than No. 10 and not smaller than No. 16 wire gauge	12.00	45.00
	Smaller than No. 16 and not smaller than No. 26	11.86	45.00
	Smaller than No. 26	22.17	45.00
	Galvanized iron or steel wire (except fence wire), valued at more than 10 cents:
	Smaller than 16 and not smaller than 26	15.40	45.00
	Smaller than 26	10.82	45.00
153	Steel ingots, cogged ingots, blooms and slabs, etc.:
	Valued at 1 cent per pound or less	45.00	63.07
	Valued at above 7 cents per pound and not above 10 cents	30.07	30.62
	Valued at above 10 cents and not above 13 cents	19.58	45.00
159	All iron or steel bars, etc., not otherwise provided for:
	Bars of iron or steel:
	Valued above 7 cents and not above 10 cents per pound	30.92	31.44
	Valued above 10 cents per pound	17.55	18.80
	Strips of iron or steel:
	Valued at 4 cents per pound or less	52.63	56.48
	Valued above 7 cents and not above 10	31.71	32.22
	Valued above 10 cents	12.43	13.32
	Sheet steel:
	Valued at 4 cents per pound or less	52.05	52.19
	Valued above 7 cents and not above 10	31.87	32.39
	Valued above 10 cents	10.17	10.90
	Steel circular-saw plates:
	Valued above 7 cents and not above 10 cents per pound	37.32	44.77
	Valued above 10 cents	33.72	35.70
160	Antimony, as regulus or metal	10.00	12.00
174	Gold-leaf	28.17	37.55
190	Quicksilver	10.00	14.33
191	Screws, commonly called wood-screws, one-half inch and less in length	44.59	52.02
195	Zinc or spelter, block or pigs	46.35	54.07
213	Osier and willow baskets	30.00	35.00
	Rattans and reeds, manufactured, but not completed articles	10.00	35.00
225	Glucose or grape sugar	20.00	36.92
198	Manufactures, articles, or wares, not specially enumerated or provided for, composed wholly or in part of iron, steel, lead, copper, nickel, pewter, tin, zinc, gold, silver, platinum, or any other metal, whether partly or wholly manufactured:
	Brass bedsteads and other house furniture	35.00	45.00
	Britannia ware	35.00
	Iron bedsteads and other house furniture	35.00
	Japan ware of all kinds, not elsewhere specified	40.00
	Plate and gilt ware, not elsewhere specified	35.00
	Umbrella and parasol ribs, etc., or parts thereof	40.00
226	Cigars and cheroots	107.94	116.11
	Cigarettes and paper cigars	134.87	151.94
232	Horses and mules	20.00	31.66
	Horses for breeding purposes	Free.	13.39
233	Cattle	20.00	37.21
	Cattle for breeding purposes	Free.	17.69
234	Hogs	20.00	21.10
	Hogs for breeding purposes	Free.	3.48
235	Sheep for breeding purposes	Free.	25.31
236	All other live animals, not otherwise provided for, for breeding purposes	Free.	20.00
241	Beans	10.00	24.26
276	Macaroni, vermicelli and all similar preparations	Free.	35.39
286	Pease, green or dried, etc	20.00	26.14
*287	Rice flour or meal	20.00	31.82
295	Vegetables of all kinds, prepared or preserved, not otherwise provided for	30.00	35.00
302	Still wine, in casks	71.57	85.88
	Vermuth, in casks	77.63	93.15
312	Ginger ale	20.00	37.56
	Cherry juice, prune juice or prune wine, and other fruit juice, not otherwise provided for, containing not more than 24 per cent. of alcohol	20.00	55.96
313	Cotton thread, yarn, warps or warp-yarn not wound in spools, etc.:
	Valued at over 25 and not exceeding 40 cents per pound	42.30	50.75
	Valued at over 40 and not exceeding 50 cents per pound	45.38	52.18
	Valued at over 50 and not exceeding 60 cents per pound	45.21	50.64
	Valued at over 60 and not exceeding 70 cents per pound	50.89	50.90

*Other forms of rice largely reduced.

Paragraph Senate bill.	Articles.	Ad valorem equivalents at new rates based upon importations for fiscal year 1887. Existing law.	Senate bill.
		Per cent.	Per cent.
318	Cotton cloth, exceeding 150 and not exceeding 200 threads per square inch, counting the warp and filling:
	Not bleached, dyed, colored, etc	56.19	65.55
	Bleached	55.76	62.72
	Dyed, colored, stained, etc	49.23	54.15
	Not bleached, dyed, colored, etc., valued at over 8 cents per square yard	40.00	45.00
	Bleached, valued at over 10 cents per square yard	40.00	45.00
	Dyed, colored, stained, etc., valued at over 12 cents per square yard	40.00	45.00
319	Cotton cloth, exceeding 200 threads per square inch, counting the warp and filling:
	Not bleached, colored, dyed, etc	57.54	64.73
	Bleached	51.88	57.07
	Dyed, colored, stained, etc	48.40	54.46
	Not bleached, dyed, colored, etc., valued at over 10 cents per square yard	40.00	45.00
	Bleached, valued at over 12 cents per square yard	40.00	45.00
322	Cotton damask, clothing (ready-made), and articles of wearing apparel, including hemmed handkerchiefs	38.77	40.00
333	All manufactures of flax, hemp, jute, or other vegetable fiber, except cotton, etc.:
	Valued at 5 cents per pound or less:
	Jute yarns	35.00	47.50
	Valued above 5 cents per pound:
	Flax yarns	35.00	40.00
	Yarns of China grass	20.00	40.00
	Hemp yarns	35.00	40.00
	Grass cloth and other manufactures of jute, ramie, China, and sisal grass	35.00	40.00
	Sail duck, or canvas for sails	30.00	40.00
	Sheetings, Russia and others	35.00	40.00
	Brown and bleached linens, ducks, canvas, paddings, cot-bottoms, diapers, crash, huckabacks, handkerchiefs, and lawns	35.00	40.00
	Seines and seine and gilling twine	25.00	40.00
	Other manufactures of flax, jute, hemp, or manila	35.00	40.00
	Other manufactures of grass	30.00	40.00
336	Laces and insertings, flax or linen	30.00	50.00
	Embroideries of flax or linen	30.00	50.00
340	Oil-cloth for floors, stamped, painted, or printed, including linoleum	40.00	40.38
346	Wool, hair of the alpaca, goat, etc., valued at 30 cents or less per pound	54.78	60.25
	Washed, valued at 30 cents or less per pound	58.51	64.36
	Scoured, valued at 30 cents or less per pound	74.11	81.52
	Combing wool, value 30 cents or less per pound	43.23	47.55
	Scoured, value 30 cents or less per pound	66.18	72.79
348	Carpet wool, value over 12 cents per pound	27.69	33.23
	Scoured	22.79	27.35
354	Woolen cloths, valued above 80 cents per pound	68.91	75.15
	Woolen shawls, valued above 80 cents per pound	65.41	68.26
	Composed wholly or in part of worsted, etc	61.53	68.26
	Yarns, woolen and worsted:
	Valued above 30 and not above 40 cents per pound	67.90	133.60
	Valued above 40 and not above 60 cents per pound	68.08	104.32
	Valued above 60 and not above 80 cents per pound	69.08	98.30
	Valued above 80 cents per pound	68.79	72.90
	Manufactures not otherwise provided for, made wholly or in part of wool:
	Valued above 80 cents per pound	64.46	69.74
	Manufactures of worsted, hair of the alpaca, goat, etc.:
	Value exceeding 30 and not above 40 cents per pound	69.38	148.06
	Value exceeding 40 and not above 60 cents per pound	68.28	104.70
	Value exceeding 60 cents per pound	71.99	88.73
	Balmorals:
	Valued above 30 and not above 40 cents per pound	67.72	130.44
	Valued above 40 and not above 60 cents per pound	65.59	99.48
	Valued above 60 and not above 80 cents per pound	68.15	77.20
	Valued above 80 cents per pound	66.35	77.20
355	Flannels, valued above 80 cents per pound	73.02	86.93
	Blankets, valued above 80 cents per pound	70.30	79.48
	Hats of wool, valued above 80 cents per pound	52.07	55.82
356	Women's and children's dress goods, coat linings, Italian cloth, etc., composed in part of wool, worsteds, etc., valued at above 20 cents per square yard	59.06	73.48
357	Same, composed wholly of wool, worsted, etc.:
	Weighing 4 ounces or less per square yard	82.96	92.51
	Weighing over 4 ounces per square yard	69.68	73.92
	Bunting	80.75	90.32
	Clothing, ready-made, and wearing apparel, not otherwise provided for	51.18	64.18
359	Cloaks, dolmans, etc	67.74	72.74
377	Silk, laces, and embroideries	50.00	60.00
	Clothing, ready-made	50.00	60.00
	Shawls	50.00	60.00

Paragraph Senate bill.	Articles.	Ad valorem equivalents at new rates based upon importations for fiscal year 1887.
		Existing law.	Senate bill.
		Per cent.	Per cent.
377	Hats, caps, and bonnets	50.00	60.00
	Hosiery	50.00	60.00
379	Blank-books	20.00	25.00
381	Manufactures of paper, or of which paper is component of chief value, not otherwise provided for	15.00	25.00
389	Brushes and brooms of all kinds, including feather dusters	25.00	30.00
414	Lime	10.00	34.66
415	Alabaster, glass, and paste	10.00	25.00
	Amber and wax	20.00	25.00
436	Freestone, granite, sandstone, etc., hewn, dressed, or polished	20.00	25.00
	Burr-stones, manufactured or bound up into mill-stones	20.00	25.00
440	Clocks, and parts of	30.00	45.00
	Coach and harness furniture of all kinds, saddlery, etc	35.00	45.00
	Musical instruments of all kinds	25.00	45.00

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not know that it would constitute a high crime or even a misdemeanor if the Democratic Senators had gone into caucus upon this bill last evening, and it does not appear to me a matter of sufficient importance to either contradict or affirm that statement. We had the right to do so, and followed the practice of both parties in the Senate if we did, and it is our business and nobody else's.

But the Senator from Iowa is unfortunate in his use of that assumed fact. He says that it was agreed in that caucus to attack this bill to-day all along the line, to use a military expression. The record of the Senate is rather against that assertion.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator will allow me to say that if I made that statement it was rather an inadvertence. I stated that there was a caucus and then an attack all along the line. I did not put the two together. I left that to be inferred.

Mr. VEST. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I stated that yesterday there was a caucus and to-day an attack all along the line. That was the statement I made.

Mr. VEST. I caught the military part of it and heard "all along the line."

Now, Mr. President, the records of the Senate rather militate, to use another expression in the way of battle, against that assertion. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] offered all his amendments yesterday morning before the caucus. The Senator from Iowa forgets it, but I made "a few feeble remarks" also before the caucus, attacking this very item 130, and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] replied to me, and thereupon came the motion to adjourn. So my friend is exceedingly unfortunate in his use of this caucus matter.

It may be that the Democratic party was killed, and is now dying hard, but I take great encouragement from the example set us by the distinguished Senator from Iowa. He has been killed twice in Republican national conventions as a candidate for the Presidency, but a livelier corpse I have never seen than he has been here to-day. [Laughter.] Let me assure my friend that the old Democratic party, though slightly disfigured, is still in the ring—to use another fighting phrase. We have been killed so often in the last one hundred years that the charge has become monotonous, but I observe in the light of history when election time comes around each recurring four years the poor old party is still there, exciting as much animosity and as much vituperation as it did in the preceding canvass, and let me assure my friend that it will be ready the next time and on this identical question of unlimited taxation under pretense of protecting American labor and American markets.

I want to read from another tariff authority, because if we can do nothing else even in our moribund and dying condition we can make up the record. I quote from a very high authority in the Republican party, the Steel and Iron Bulletin, the bulletin of the American Iron and Steel Association, the same association that was called upon in 1887 by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Manning, to give the items and details of the manufacture of steel rails and of steel beams, and which association applied to the Edgar Thomson Works, of which Mr. Carnegie was president, to give that information, and his reply was that he declined to do so. It was most remarkable, if he was only making the small and modest profit which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] said he was making, that he declined to go into details at all and peremptorily refused to open his books.

In the same line, not of presumption but of statement, I want to read what these gentlemen say who are in this trust. They call it a "combination," a modest, domestic sort of word:

It has been charged—

They say—that a "trust" exists—

This comes from "The Phœnix Iron Company, George Gerry White, secretary; New Jersey Steel and Iron Company, Fred. J. Slade, treasurer; A. & P. Roberts & Co., Pencoyd Iron Works, Philadelphia, Pa., August 1, 1888." Here is their own defense, and if I could not, if there were a penal statute against trusts, convict every one of them and put them in the State prison upon this statement I would surrender my license as a practicing attorney and never go into court again. Listen to their defense, made by these three leading manufacturers:

It has been charged that a "trust" exists among the makers to maintain an exorbitant price for this product. It is true that to prevent ruinous competition there have during the past sixteen years, with a single interval, been agreements of various kinds between the makers of beams to maintain the price at a figure that would yield a fair profit.

Now, mark that language. There still exists a trust. There has been, they say, for the past sixteen years, with a single interval—that was eight or nine years ago—this agreement to do what? To maintain prices at what they call "a fair profit." We know what a manufacturer's fair profit is. I quote from a deceased member of this body, who was in entire accord with his Republican associates, Senator Miller, of California, who said that the standard of the American manufacturer was to get the cheapest labor and sell the product at the highest price, and that is what they mean by "a fair profit."

We claim that the public have no right to the products of labor at a less price than will yield a fair profit on that labor. We claim, also, that when prices fall below the point at which this can be secured it is the natural right of any man to agree with his competitors to maintain prices at a fair figure.

The Senator from Rhode Island tells us that three or four manufacturers of this country are not in this trust. Mr. President, there are several gentlemen in this country engaged in the meat product, in selling the meat product, that do not belong to the Chicago trust, but they are about as absolutely impotent to-day against that giant monopoly as an infant in the cradle or "mewling and puking in the nurse's arms."

The very essence of these trusts, the very basis of their existence, is the enormous power of their capital aggregated together, which can strike down all competition except where for a mere show they permit that competition nominally to exist. Who does not know that to-day there is not one pound of beef in this country that is not controlled by that combination in Chicago? And yet we are told these trusts only want "a fair profit," and have a natural right to their profits under the laws of this country and of God himself.

I saw in a newspaper this morning that an attempt had been made to blow up a distillery in Chicago by dynamite sticks, and the proprietor charges that it is done by the whisky trust, and says he is prepared to prove it in open court.

I saw in the papers three days ago that the Anaconda Copper Works in Montana had closed and twenty-five hundred men, in the middle of winter, are thrown out upon the streets, houseless and homeless, and without pay—twenty-five hundred men—and it was done because the copper syndicate had made it to the interest of those gentlemen to close down and produce no more copper under the existing condition of the market.

Who does not know that there is a sugar trust in this country? Who does not know that there is hardly a single article that enters into the daily life of the American citizen that is not now under the control of these octopi, these commercial devil-fish that are crushing out the life of all legitimate commerce and trade throughout the United States? With this very admission here upon record in their own organ, that they exist without any apology; with the open, defiant announcement that they intend to exist and have the natural right to do this thing, speeches are made here and apologies for these combinations, and we are told that our demand upon this side of the Chamber that the Republican party shall carry out its profession to put a tariff tax upon American products which will be an equivalent for the difference between the cost of labor in this country and abroad, is an impudent assumption and not to be tolerated for a moment.

Why, sir, when the chairman of this subcommittee, my friend from Iowa, admits that he is now willing to reduce this tax and accept a duty of 1 cent, he gives away the entire argument, and that ought to be the end of it. My friend from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] suggests to me a pertinent question: "Why did not they do that before the election?" But that is going back into ancient history.

Mr. ALLISON. I will answer that "pertinent question." Does the Senator from Alabama, who suggests this to the Senator from Missouri, think that we can not alter this bill because we reported it here as a committee? In the very nature of things, I will say to the Senator from Alabama in all seriousness, many items in this bill will undoubtedly be changed. The committee will change items in this bill, or propose to change them, both in the way of reducing and increasing.

Mr. MORGAN. The drift of my suggestion was simply that at the rate of taxation contained in the bill as reported from the Committee on Finance there would be a very much larger amount of fat fried out of these people than there could be at a lower rate. The heat would not be as great, and I supposed there would be no inconvenience now in enduring the fire.

Mr. ALLISON. On that theory of course that would be a personal question, but I did not know we were going upon that theory at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], which will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 446 and 447 it is proposed to strike out "1.1 cents" and insert "six-tenths of 1 cent."

Mr. PAYNE. Is the motion to strike out and insert divisible?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PUGH (when Mr. BUTLER'S name was called). The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] are absent and paired on this question.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. TELLER'S name was called). The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. HALE. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to announce the pair of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER] with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BLODGETT].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Colquitt,	Morgan,	Turpie,
Berry,	Eustis,	Pugh,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Ransom,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Reagan,	Voorhees,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—29.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Chace,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stewart,
Chandler,	Hawley.	Paddock,	Stockbridge,
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Davis,	Hoar,	Payne,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Dolph,	McPherson,	Plumb.

ABSENT—27.

Beck,	Cameron,	Hale,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Daniel,	Hampton,	Sabin,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Hearst,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Jones of Nevada,	Stanford,
Brown,	George,	Kenna,	Teller,
Butler,	Gibson,	Pasco,	Walthall.
Call,	Gorman,	Quay,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will interrupt the Senator to lay before the Senate some bills and a joint resolution from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 236) to pay the officers, clerks, and employés of Congress on December 20, 1888, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. VEST. On page 104, line 447, paragraph 130, I move to strike out "and one-tenth," and strike out the word "cents" in the same line and insert "cent;" so as to make this duty "1 cent per pound."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the amendment be first stated from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 447 it is proposed to strike out "and one-tenth cents" and insert "cent" in lieu thereof; so as to read:

130. Beams, girders, joists, angles, channels, car-truck channels, TT columns and posts or parts or sections of columns and posts, deck and bulb beams, and building forms, together with all other structural shapes of iron or steel, 1 cent per pound.

Mr. ALLISON. I was recognized by the Chair when the Chair laid before the Senate some other business, having sought the floor with a view to offer the identical amendment which the Senator from Missouri has offered. I shall support it, and had the authority of the committee to offer it; and I gave notice of it, I will say, to the Senate early this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Let that amendment be again reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. VEST.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read the next item of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the Committee on Finance, as follows:

131. Boiler or other plate iron or steel, except saw-plates hereinafter provided for, not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, sheared or unsheared, and skelp iron or steel sheared or rolled in grooves, valued at 2 cents per pound or less, 1 cent per pound; valued above 2 cents and not above 3 cents per pound, 1.2 cents per pound; valued above 3 cents and not above 4 cents per pound, 1.6 cents per pound; valued above 4 cents and not above 7 cents per pound, 2 cents per pound; valued above 7 cents and not above 10 cents per pound, 2.8 cents per pound; valued above 10 cents and not above 13 cents per pound, 3½ cents per pound; valued above 13 cents per pound, 45 per cent. ad valorem: Provided, That all plate iron or steel thinner than No. 10 wire gauge shall pay duty as iron or steel sheets.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa why it is that the duty upon the articles in paragraph No. 131 is increased from 31.01 per cent. to 39.69 per cent.?

Mr. ALLISON. Why it is increased?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, why it is increased? What is the necessity for that increase upon that class of articles?

Mr. ALLISON. This item of iron skelp is a very small item in the schedule, as shown by the amount imported in 1887. The object of a change in classification was to more nearly equalize the rate with the value. It turns out that in making up this schedule of several rates the aggregate rate is 39.69 per cent., according to the Treasury statement. There is very little in it. I do not think myself that on the importations that would be found to be true. If there was an exactly equal amount of iron or steel imported of each class, I suppose that would be true. I do not think any harm will come from it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

132. Boiler or other tubes, or pipes, or flues, or stays of wrought iron or steel, 2½ cents per pound.

133. Bolts, with or without threads or nuts, or bolt-blanks, and finished hinges or hinge-blanks, whether of iron or steel, 2½ cents per pound.

134. Chain or chains of all kinds, made of iron or steel, not less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, 1.6 cents per pound; less than three-fourths of 1 inch and not less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 1.8 cents per pound; less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 3 cents per pound.

Mr. VANCE. In line 474 I move to strike out "three" and insert "two," being the duty on trace-chains, chains less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina will be read from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 474 it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Less than three-eighths of 1 inch in diameter, 2 cents per pound.

Mr. VANCE. That is an increase of about 25 per cent. on the present duty, which is 2½ cents a pound on a class of iron-ware that is more in common use perhaps, and is more especially used by the agricultural classes than almost any other kind of iron. I see no reason in the world why the duty should be increased upon that, especially as the product that is made by the plow that is drawn by the trace-chain has to be sold in the free-trade markets of the world, and therefore, it seems to me, they should have at least a reasonable chance on the other end.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from North Carolina is mistaken in supposing that the item to which he calls attention refers to trace-chains. There are no trace-chains involved in this amendment. No chains of the size mentioned here could possibly be used as trace-chains. They are used largely and chiefly as little chains of luxury. Ladies use them for their dogs, and they are used for ornaments, and but a very small number of them are made. There are none or few of them made in this country, I think none now; but it was supposed, on the representations of those supposed to know the details of this business, that if we could equalize the labor of producing these chains—for they are not produced by machinery at all; they are produced on an anvil and with great care by the labor of the artisan—we might, by increasing the duty somewhat upon these little dog-chains or ladies' chains, secure possibly the manufacture of them here. They are all imported now. It is a matter of no moment as respects the amount involved. A very small amount is imported, but all that are used here are imported.

For myself, I think the rate of duty is a little high as proposed here, but it does not affect the question in which the Senator from North Carolina is interested.

Mr. VANCE. I should like the Senator from Iowa to point out to me in what portion of the bill the duty on trace-chains is provided for if it is not in this item?

Mr. ALLISON. The item immediately preceding.

Mr. VANCE. These are less than three-eighths of an inch thick. If the Senator ever plowed with a mule or a horse and had ever seen a trace-chain and helped hitch one up, he would know that it was made of iron less than three-eighths of an inch in thickness; and I think if he would look at the amount of importation of this article he would be convinced that there are not dogs enough in America to have required this amount of chains, 1,243,202 pounds of the value of $70,000, yielding $31,000 taxes, all for the purpose of chaining dogs, none of which is iron less than three-eighths of an inch in thickness. The dogs must be remarkably strong and severe in the country of the Senator from Iowa that will require a chain of that size, ladies' dogs especially, ladies' pets, chained with a chain that a mule could not break [laughter], three-eighths of an inch in thickness and 1,243,202 pounds of them imported, and that, I am told, is not a trace-chain, but that immediately preceding, less than three-fourths of an inch thick, and not less than three-eighths of an inch thick, is the chain which is called the trace-chain.

Mr. President, it would require a chain even thicker and stronger than that to detain the man who would believe that that was an accurate description of a trace-chain. [Laughter.] At all events, sir, respect for the ladies and for the canine pets which require such fastenings as this, I think, would induce the Senate to reduce that tax a little. It is now 44 per cent. and this duty makes it 53; and whether that chain is used for fastening the pets of ladies or whether it is used for pulling the plow in the field, the duty is equally in either case too high. There is no reason for increasing it unless it is that it may be considered an infant industry. This business of chaining lap-dogs to ladies may have some connection with industry. [Laughter.] At all events, I move to reduce it to 2 cents.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have heard a great deal about trace-chains ever since 1872, when I first had the honor of entering Congress. I should like to know as a matter of mere statistics how many trace-chains an ordinary farmer consumes in the course of a day, to say nothing of a year. I judge it is a matter of daily diet; he lives on trace-chains and salt, judging by the ordinary free-trade argument. A pair of trace-chains costs about 50 or 75 cents, and I think with fair work on a farm they would last about four or five years. I went to a hardware store and inquired, and the hardware dealer showed me the best he had on his list, and they were 75 cents a pair. That is very cheap, cheaper than it was before you had tariffs. I think the ordinary consumption of a poor North Carolina farmer is not such as to impose a very severe burden.

Mr. VANCE. How long a trace-chain would last is manifestly a begging of the question. The question we have to decide here is what is a reasonable rate of taxation to be imposed upon the American citizen for articles in daily use, not how long do they last. If they would last forty years it does not affect the question.

Mr. HAWLEY. If it lasted forty years and the duty raises the price 10 cents, that is a quarter of a cent a year that a man pays to support his country.

Mr. VANCE. It is very little, but is as well worth contending for on the part of the farmer as it is on the part of the greedy manufacturer, who would perish if he did not have this to help him against foreign competition.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. GEORGE's name was called). I desire to announce for the last time to-day that my colleague [Mr. GEORGE] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 23, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—23.

Bate,	Cockrell,	Daniel,	Gray,
Berry,	Coke,	Eustis,	Harris,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Gorman,	Jones of Arkansas,
McPherson,	Ransom,	Turpie,	Voorhees,
Morgan,	Reagan,	Vance,	Wilson of Md.
Payne,	Saulsbury,	Vest,

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Allison,	Evarts,	Mitchell,	Stewart,
Chace,	Frye,	Morrill,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Hawley,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hiscock,	Palmer,
Davis,	Hoar,	Platt,
Dawes,	Ingalls,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—28.

Beck,	Cameron,	Hampton,	Quay,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Kenna,	Spooner,
Brown,	George,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Butler,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Teller,
Call,	Hale,	Pugh,	Walthall.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. During the debate I sent for a gauge showing the size of this chain. I have it here. [Exhibiting.] If any Senator will measure and say that trace-chains are involved in this paragraph I shall be glad to have him explain it. It is a very small chain, as I have said.

Mr. FRYE. About the size of my watch-chain?

Mr. ALLISON. About the size of the Senator's watch-chain. The Senator's watch-chain is not quite three-eighths of an inch in diameter.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It seems to me the difference between the Senator from North Carolina and the Senator from Iowa depends upon how the chain is to be measured. If the measure relates to the rod on which the chain is made the Senator from North Carolina is right. If the measure gives the entire link in the chain, then the Senator from Iowa is right in saying it could not be a trace-chain.

Mr. ALLISON. The chain must pass through that wire gauge [indicating]. There it is. This is a well-known commercial term, No. 5 wire.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to know how the Senator from Iowa arrives at that conclusion. There is nothing in the bill to determine that that is the fact. We have simply his ipse dixit in the matter.

Mr. ALLISON. It does not say the links of the chain. If the Senator thinks it means the links of the chain, and not the chain, then there would be some doubt about it; but the chain must be less than three-eighths of an inch in diameter that passes through that gauge. If any Senator will pass any of these watch-chains around me through that gauge, then I will admit that I am mistaken.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the measure of three-eighths of an inch applies to the entire link and goes across the entire loop, then the Senator from Iowa is right; but if, as it seems to me under this bill it is bound to mean, it applies to the rod upon which the chain runs, then the Senator from North Carolina is right. I should like to know how the Senator from Iowa can undertake to say that that is the meaning of the bill.

Mr. GRAY. If the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, I wish to call attention to the language of paragraph 134, which seems to me necessarily to mean just what he says it means:

> Chain or chains of all kinds, made of iron or steel, not less than three-fourths of 1 inch in diameter, 1.6 cents per pound.

That refers, it seems to me, by the necessary juxtaposition of words, to the iron of which the chain is made.

Mr. FRYE. It does exactly the opposite.

Mr. GRAY. Manifestly it would be quite impossible to have a chain, on the theory of the Senator from Iowa, 5 inches in diameter made of iron not thicker than a cambric needle.

Mr. DAWES. I think that comma is a very dangerous thing. Commas have provoked more trouble in tariff bills than anything else. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa that we change the phraseology a little. It depends entirely upon the certainty that when the bill is engrossed the comma will be there.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Another thing which it seems to me would indicate that the Senator from Iowa is not correct in his construction of this paragraph is the fact that the importations under the three sizes of these chains is $6,000 under the largest size, $8,000 under the next larger, and $70,000 under the extremely small-sized chain. If that is the chain meant, a toy chain, a chain simply large enough to hold a dog, there certainly could not have been this immense importation under that size while the others amounted to nothing. If the Senator's construction of this paragraph is right, it would seem that trace-chains would come in under the larger size, and of those there were but $6,000 worth imported into the United States, while of the toy chains, if he construes it right, there were $70,000 worth.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think there is much force in the argument of the Senator, because the rate of duty upon this class of chains now is 2½ cents a pounds. That is the highest rate of duty. My information, derived from people who understand this business, is that none of these chains are made in this country, and that they are what the Senator calls mere toy chains.

If, as the Senator from North Carolina seems to think, this relates to the links of the chain and not the chain, I shall go with him for reducing somewhat this duty, and if he will allow the paragraph to be passed over, we will look into it further and see what there is of it.

Mr. VANCE. Very well, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. Suppose we compromise it by putting the rate back to 2½ cents a pound, as it now exists.

Mr. FRYE. We ought to know.

Mr. COCKRELL. We ought to know.

Mr. HARRIS. That is true.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, paragraph 134 is informally passed over for future consideration. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

135. Forged shotgun barrels, rough-bored, 10 per cent. ad valorem.

136. Forgings of iron or steel, or forged iron and steel combined, of whatever shape or in whatever stage of manufacture, not specially enumerated or provided for in this act, 2.3 cents per pound: Provided, That no forgings of iron or steel, or forgings of iron and steel combined, by whatever process made, shall pay a less rate of duty than 45 per cent. ad valorem.

137. Hoop, or band, or scroll, or other iron or steel, valued at 3 cents per pound or less, 8 inches or less in width, and less than three-eighths of 1 inch thick and not thinner than No. 10 wire gauge, 1 cent per pound; thinner than No. 10 wire gauge and not thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1.1 cents per pound; thinner than No. 20 wire gauge, 1.3 cents per pound: Provided, That hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel flared or splayed, shall pay two-tenths of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the hoop or band iron or steel from which they are made.

Mr. COKE. I move to strike out the proviso in paragraph 137, beginning in the middle of line 491, down to and including line 497. The statement of an expert who has analyzed this bill goes to the effect that this proviso——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator from Texas will allow me to request a favor, I ask that he withdraw his amendment for the purpose of allowing me to move another one.

Mr. COKE. What other amendment does the Senator propose?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I propose to move to strike out all after the word "shall," in line 495, and to insert the words "be admitted free of duty," for the purpose of asking, first, that this item of hoop-iron cut to lengths for ties for baling purposes shall be admitted free of duty. The effect of the Senator's amendment would be to put it on the same basis as other hoop-iron. I do not think that is proper. I think the first thing we ought to do is to admit it free of duty, and I make that motion.

Mr. COKE. I prefer to make my motion to amend first, because if the proviso should not be stricken out it would then leave the paragraph ready for the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Arkansas will allow me, I will state that the amendment of the Senator from Texas being to strike out the entire proviso, the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas would be first in order, because it tends to perfect the text which the Senator from Texas proposes to strike out.

Mr. COKE. Very well, then; I will allow the Senator from Arkansas to move his amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move to strike out all after the word "shall," in line 495, down to the end of the paragraph, and to insert the words "be admitted free of duty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 495, after the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "made," in line 497, as follows:

Pay two-tenths of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the hoop or band iron or steel from which they are made.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

Be admitted free of duty.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel flared or splayed, shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yesterday when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] declared that his idea was that the Senate should follow implicitly the lead of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Finance, I had no hope of any amendment being made to this bill, but supposed that it would be passed by the power of the majority and sent to the other House, without any idea on their part that it would become a law, but for the purpose of accomplishing political ends that they had in view. The declaration of the Senator from Iowa to-day that he is willing to amend the bill where it operates unjustly has given me some hope that possibly we may have some corrections made which should be made.

We have been very much in the habit of asserting our very great desire to take care of the interests of the laborers in this country, and we have only been anxious to levy so much of the tariff tax as is necessary to advance the interests of those engaged in labor. Some years ago upon a revision of the tariff which was made almost absolutely, I believe I may say absolutely, by members of the Republican party, many of whom have been prominent in this present movement, the tariff on cotton-ties was fixed at 35 per cent. It has remained at 35 per cent. from then until now. The proposition now presented to the Senate is to increase that tax from 35 per cent. to an ad valorem tax of about 108 per cent., according to the calculations of the Treasury experts. The duty paid upon importations of this character last year was $121,098.95, and the estimate made by the Treasury experts is that if the present proposition shall be adopted the import duties paid upon this article hereafter will be $364,012.48, while we profess to have a desire to reduce the revenue—an increase of the revenues by nearly a quarter of a million dollars, and a tax levied upon an article which enters in a large measure into the preparation of the cotton crop for market.

I am satisfied that if I could make the members of the Senate understand the conditions under which those who produce the cotton of this country labor, they would believe that there was as much necessity for this class of labor having some sort of protection as any class in the United States; and I now ask the Senate to protect these people from what seems to me to be a most iniquitous and outrageous wrong.

Those people have never dreamed of eight hours a day for labor. They wear the coarsest clothes, and live on the commonest food, and labor as long as daylight will allow them to see how they are to work. Their product is prepared for market, and the price is fixed in the markets of the world where it comes in competition with the product of Egyptian and Brazilian and Indian labor. Against those there is no chance for them to have protection, and all that we can do is to give them what they are absolutely bound to have in order to prepare their product for market at the lowest possible price.

It seems to me that instead of increasing the price of cotton-ties by raising the duty, it would be good policy and fair treatment towards this class of people to give them their cotton-ties free of duty. My impression is that this article is not manufactured to any very great extent in the United States. I ask the Senator from Iowa if I am correct in that impression, as I am not an expert on this subject and am not informed accurately about it.

Mr. ALLISON. A good many cotton-ties were made in the United States some years ago, but it is now impossible to make them in competition with Belgium and Germany with the rate of duty imposed by law.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. None are now made here?

Mr. ALLISON. I think very few, if any.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Then if no cotton-ties are made here, we interfere with no American industry by putting this article on the free-list. As the $121,000 which is collected by the Government from the cotton-growers of the country is not needed, and as it does not interfere with any interest already in existence in the United States, I appeal to the fairness of Senators, I appeal to their consideration for the class of people who are engaged in cotton-growing, to yield them this pittance, and allow them to buy their cotton-ties at the lowest price at which they can be bought, when they are compelled to sell their product in the markets of the world in competition with cotton produced by the cheapest labor on earth and without any sort of protection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas for information. Are these cotton-ties sold by the pound as cotton after having been put upon the bale? When cotton is sold in the market, are they weighed as part of the cotton and sold at that price?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I have heard that question asked before, and I have heard good men assert that such was the case; but the facts are these: The price of cotton in the United States is practically fixed in Liverpool. When cotton rises in Liverpool it rises here; when it falls in Liverpool it falls here; and the American price of cotton is about as much under the Liverpool price as the freight and other transportation expenses and the tare of which we have heard, would all together make. The universal practice in the Liverpool market is to deduct 6 pounds out of a hundred.

Mr. MORGAN. Twenty-four pounds on a bale.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Six pounds out of a hundred are deducted in the Liverpool market. From a 400-pound bale 24 pounds are taken off, and from a 500-pound bale there is a deduction of 30 pounds.

Mr. DAWES. That is for ties and bagging?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir; for ties and bagging. That is the tare that comes off. So when the price of cotton is fixed in the United States it is fixed with reference to that practice, and while, as a matter of fact, the bagging and ties are weighed on the bale of cotton, the price is reduced by so much as is necessary to cover the tare that will be taken from it in the European market.

Mr. DAWES. Is it the same in the United States that it is in Liverpool?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. While there is absolutely no tare taken off in the United States, the tare is provided for by the difference in price, and while the cotton producer gets nominally the weight of his bagging and ties in the sale, still the price is lowered so much, and he absolutely gets nothing for the bagging and ties on the cotton.

Mr. DAWES. That is, when the sale is made in Liverpool?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. When the sale is made anywhere.

Mr. HARRIS. The Liverpool price fixes the price here.

Mr. DAWES. I ask for information, because I have heard that the bagging and ties were paid for.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator certainly did not pay good attention to what I said, or else I was unfortunate in making myself understood.

Mr. DAWES. I have heard, as the Senator states, that cotton-ties were sold for so much cotton, and I inquired in good faith for information. I should like to know, while the price is fixed in Liverpool, whether the custom of deduction which he says prevails in Liverpool prevails in the United States?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. So many pounds per bale are not taken off in the United States, but as much as the weight of ties and bagging bears to the whole amount of the bale is deducted in the price, so that the producer of cotton gets nothing for bagging and ties either in this market or in Europe.

Mr. HARRIS. It is an absolute loss.

Mr. ALDRICH. The modest proposition now made by the Senator from Arkansas would accomplish two results. It would provide that hoop-iron when manufactured into cotton-ties should be free of duty, and that hoop-iron when not manufactured into cotton-ties should pay from 1 cent a pound to 1.4 cents a pound.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to correct him? My purpose is to have the ties cut in links for baling made free, whether they are used to bale cotton or hay.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas, that hoop-iron, when made into ties for baling hay or cotton, is to be free of duty, but when not manufactured into ties it is proposed that it shall pay a duty of from 1 cent a pound to 1.4 cents a pound.

That is the first thing to be accomplished. The next thing is that ties for baling hay and cotton would be free of duty, while ties for other purposes, under hoop-iron imported for other purposes, would pay a duty, as I have already stated, of from 1 cent to 1.4 cents a pound.

The fairness and equity of the proposition must be apparent from this statement. The terms of the provision as reported from the committee are simply these, that hoop-iron imported into this country of certain sizes and dimensions, whether it is used in Southern States or in Northern States, whether it is used for baling cotton or for baling hay or for any other conceivable purpose, shall pay the same rate of duty. That is all there is in the Senator's proposition.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island why this increase was made from 35 per cent. to 108 per cent. ad valorem? What necessity is there for it? If this article is not manufactured in the United States, and no protection is thereby afforded to any industry now in operation, why is this increase from 35 per cent., by the present law, made to 108 per cent. ad valorem, unless it is for the very reason that the principal amount of it is used in the South, and it was the intention of gentlemen to discriminate against that section of the country?

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Arkansas, who is familiar with this subject, if there is any reason why a cotton-tie could not be made as cheaply in this country as abroad?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Massachusetts and I would perhaps differ very widely in our opinions on that question. So far as I am concerned, I believe a great many things can be produced just as cheaply in this country as they can be produced abroad if the idea that runs through the Mills bill were allowed to prevail and our manufacturers could get free raw material and such things as they are compelled to use on the same terms as a manufacturer abroad can get them. But when we saddle them with a tax upon every solitary thing they use, from the machinery they have to the buildings they employ, of course it is utterly impossible for them to produce the article as cheaply.

So I propose to make the point and call the attention of the Senate to a distinct article of commerce well recognized and understood, which the Senator from Rhode Island, who sneered so forcibly at my suggestion just now as being absurd and ridiculous, admits is not manufactured in the United States, the duty upon which I have shown is a very great hardship on the class of people who eat their bread from the sweat of their faces all the days of their lives, and who by testimony taken before his committee were shown to get less for the amount of work they do than almost any other class of people in this country. I ask that the mailed hand we have heard so much about may be lightened from them to some limited extent, and, as there was no necessity for any American manufacturer having any tax levied upon them, that they might be allowed to have this article duty free.

Mr. ALDRICH. I will now answer the question of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. He asks, why increase the duty upon the article of cotton-ties, especially as it can not be made in this country? The present duty of 35 per cent. upon cotton-ties is one of those anomalies and inequalities which it is the object of this bill to remedy. The decision of the Treasury Department which placed the duty on cotton-ties originally at 35 per cent. was undoubtedly an erroneous decision, that is, erroneous in the fact that it did not carry out the intention of Congress.

The intention was that cotton-ties should pay the same duty as other hoop-iron. The rate of 35 per cent. has been continued for the reason that there has been no power that could remedy it. This is the first opportunity that we have had to remedy that defect. It is a defect. I think every Senator here will understand that a tie for one use ought not to pay a less rate of duty than a tie for another use; that it certainly is not the purpose of tariff legislation to discriminate against one part of the country or in favor of one class of people, however deserving they may be, as against another class of people.

As to the fact of the ties not being made in this country, they can not be made in this country for the reason that the duty is 35 per cent.

Mr. DAWES. They used to be made in this country.

Mr. ALDRICH. They used to be made in this country when they were protected the same as other hoop-iron was protected, and they can be made in this country, as every one of them will be made in this country, three months or six months after this bill becomes a law.

There is not a single article in the iron and steel schedules but that its production would cease in this country if we should reduce the duty out of proportion to the article from which it is made. Take pig-iron, for instance; if we should put down the duty on pig-iron to $3 a ton, leaving other grades the same; or take steel rails, if we should put the duty on steel rails at half the sum that we put the duty on pig-iron and other products of iron and steel, within six months the production in this country would cease, for the reason that the duty would not be adequate, and would not bear the proper relation to the other duties in the bill. That is the simple story of cotton-ties. There is nothing about them difficult to make. They can be made here, and they will be made here if the duty is made ample.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Arkansas I will state that the object of raising the duty from 35 per cent. to 108 per cent. ad valorem of course is to protect the industry engaged in the manufacture of these cotton-ties. If this doctrine of protection is worth anything it should apply to all articles.

The Senator from Rhode Island says that it is not the business of Congress to discriminate between one industry and another. Certainly it is not the business of Congress to discriminate between one industry and another, but if the maker and grower of cotton is engaged in an industry as well as the man who is engaged in manufacturing the ties that bind the cotton together, then he is entitled to the same protection, to the same care, to the same zeal on the part of the Senator from Rhode Island that the man is who is engaged in making the ties that bind the cotton.

The man who grows the cotton has to sell that cotton in competition with all the cotton grown in this world, in a free-trade market. It so happens that the ties which bale his cotton are not made in this country. Now, why not protect him? Why not encourage him in his struggle in the free-trade markets of the world by allowing him to buy the ties that bind his cotton as free and as little subject to tax as possible, especially when those ties are made in a foreign country? Why discriminate against his interest is the great question?

The Senator from Rhode Island says this is the first chance they have had to remedy this defect. This bill is the first chance that the farmer has had, and I fear that he is likely to have a very small chance.

The Senator from Ohio yesterday pleaded that the manufacturers of this country should have a chance. I was struck with that plea. It went to my heart. They are the down-trodden class, sir. They have had no chance in this country; that is, to the full extent of their desires. There is still a little money left in the pockets of the consumers, and in Heaven's name give the manufacturer a chance at that, and when there is none left, then he will not desire any chance. But do give him a chance.

It so happens that nature has favored by climate and soil the grower of this American cotton so that he stands a chance to compete with all the cotton-growers of the world notwithstanding the difference in the price of labor. Give him a chance. Strengthen that one item of production in this country that constitutes the largest item in all of your foreign exports. Strengthen the hands of the man who contributes nearly one-half of all your foreign exports, who maintains your exchanges with foreign nations, who maintains the balance of trade in your favor, by at least giving him an opportunity to buy free of tax the iron which wraps his cotton and fits it for market, especially when it is not guilty of the profanation of interfering with the profits of anybody in this country, because the ties are not manufactured here.

Mr. President, if this proposition is rejected, I shall say that it is proof to show to the American people that there is only one class of industry in this country that is entitled to the care and zeal of the Senators on the other side. If they are in earnest in protecting American industries, in Heaven's name let them protect the oldest industry, the most important industry, the greatest industry that has ever sustained and blessed mankind, the industry of the man who abstracts riches from the bosom of mother earth.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, in some remarks made by the Senator from Rhode Island several days ago in his effort to have the tax taken from alcohol used in the arts and in medical preparations, he said if that tax was removed it would relieve a large number of persons who consume this article; that it would give them relief, and he had supposed that some Senators upon this side of the Chamber would favor it. Here is an effort to take off the tax of 35 per cent. that now exists on an article that is used by a large portion of the farmers of this country, and in which the colored people, too, are interested, of whom the Senator and his party claim to be the special friends and champions.

They are compelled to buy these cotton-ties, now bearing a tax of 35 per cent., and yet the Senator from Rhode Island, who seemed anxious to relieve the consumer of alcohol, not only refuses to grant this relief to the farmers of the South, but he proposes an addition to that tax, making it instead of 35 per cent. 108 per cent. ad valorem, and then he appeals to me and says, would the Senator from Arkansas discriminate between the people of any section of this Union? and that, too, when his committee has reported a bill here that reduces taxes only upon articles that are produced in the South, and upon the only articles upon which it is claimed the South receives any benefit from the protective laws—rice and sugar. He cuts them heavily, and comes forward to increase the tax on this necessary article, cotton-ties, used entirely by the people of the South, and yet claims that there is nothing sectional in the bill, but that the committee has so framed it as to discriminate against the interests of no part of the American people.

Mr. President, if this amendment is voted down, as was said by the Senator from North Carolina, it will show a clear purpose upon the part of Senators on the other side of the Chamber to tax the farmers of this country without benefiting any other citizens of the United States. It is admitted that these ties are not manufactured in the United States. It is admitted that this tax is not necessary for the protection of any industry now existing, yet they propose to put a tax of 108 per cent., more than double the value of the cotton-ties themselves, upon the farmers who are compelled to buy them, without compensating any other American citizens throughout this broad Union.

If that be justice, if that be the character of the bill that they intend to force upon the Senate, then the Senator from North Carolina should have answered the Senator from Iowa to-day, as I hoped he would do, when he made his threat to continue this bill day by day, by saying that we would be here opposing the measure at every stage until the third day of March before this iniquitous bill should be forced upon the people of this nation.

Those are my views in regard to it, and when the vote is taken it will disclose the fact whether they intend to keep up the sectional difference and force the passage of a bill so clearly unjust to the farmers of the Southern States.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I, for one, desire to see cotton-ties as well as every other article that enters into consumption in this country, produced as cheaply as it is possible to produce them in this country. For that reason I desire to see everything produced in this country which can be produced here.

When cotton-ties were manufactured in this country they were as cheap as they are to-day. The reduction of the tariff drove this manufacture out of the country. The Senator from North Carolina is desirous of keeping it out of the country and depending upon the foreigner to set the price for the cotton-ties.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to inquire of him when that reduction which he speaks of was made, and how much it was?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Rhode Island has just explained it. I am not able to give the main points. The reduction arose from a construction in the Treasury Department of the United States, and not from the enactment of law. It was a reduction caused by a ruling which put cotton-ties into another class, and brought the duty on them down so low that the production of the cotton-ties in this country ceased and the foreigner had the monopoly of our market, and to-day can set his own price upon cotton-ties.

My theory is—it may be wrong; the Senator from Arkansas thinks it is wrong, and that is why he opposes the policy which I advocate—my theory is——

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DAWES. In one moment. My theory is this: Put this duty at the rate fixed in the bill and the production of cotton-ties will spring up in this country, and the market of this country will be supplied at home at a rate as low as the ties can possibly be obtained abroad, and that notwithstanding the fact that labor abroad is a great deal cheaper than it is here. The fact that this great market is at the command of the producer in this country will so multiply the production here as to bring the price down to a level as low as it is now, and the Senator from Arkansas or the Senator from North Carolina will have American ties as cheap as he now has foreign ties, and along with that he will have the production of them in this country and all that follows such production here.

He will have those who consume cotton in the various forms of cotton production multiplied all around by that very circumstance. The market for his cotton at home will be increased, and the market for everything that he produces from his land will be increased by that operation.

The Senator is mistaken if he supposes that the intent or the purpose of anybody desirous of putting up this duty is to put a tax upon the consumer of cotton-ties. It is because we do not believe that the duty is a tax upon the consumer.. The history of tariff duties proves that they are no tax upon the consumer, but have had the contrary effect in every respect and in relation to every product protected in our own market and in our own production against the interference of foreigners.

Mr. VANCE. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts why we can not have cotton-ties made in this country now as cheaply as they are made abroad? He says we could if we had the tax high enough to keep the foreigner out. Why can we not do it now? Will the Senator answer me that question?

Mr. DAWES. Because the foreigner having our market at his disposal and at his command can put into this market at any price he pleases the cotton-ties he makes until every incipient manufactory of cotton-ties here is squelched out and extinguished, and when that is done he can set a compensatory price upon his products at home.

Mr. VANCE. Then it seems that the tax, after all, is what should enable the American manufacturer to make cotton-ties cheaper than the English now make them, and that tax it seems is not a tax either. It is a tax high enough to enable the manufacturer to get rich on making ties here, but it is not sufficiently a tax to cause any payment to be made by the man who uses the cotton-ties. That is to say, if you have three plates on the table and you put another one down, that makes two, it does not make four, and the tax added on the cotton-ties would absolutely make them cheaper to the man who pays for them, and in some inscrutable, mysterious way, known only to the depths of "protection to American labor" as exhibited in the subcommittee of the Committee on Finance of the Senate, it would enable him to get rich and keep out the foreigner, although there is no tax!

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator can not see that the foreign producer can make the consumer pay the tax only when he can command his market, and when the market is supplied at home he will be obliged to pay it himself—if the Senator from North Carolina can not see that, he is beyond cure.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I sought to interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts awhile ago in the course of his first remarks in order to ask him a question. He made the statement that prior to this tax of 35 per cent. being put on cotton-ties they were produced in this country and sold as cheaply as they are now. I wanted to ask him if the American manufacturer of cotton-ties could sell at the present price at that time, why he can not do it now, and what is the use of having a tax put upon cotton-ties now that will have the effect of increasing the price threefold, if it has any effect at all?

Mr. DAWES. I will tell the Senator why. When the manufacturer produced them under our tariff he had the home market under his command. When that tariff was taken off, the foreigner, who can produce them by cheaper labor, cheaper than he can, filled the market in his place.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The statement of the Senator was that the American manufacturers could make cotton-ties, and did sell them, as cheaply as they are sold now. If they could afford to sell them at a given price then, they can afford to sell them at the same price now.

But I wish to correct an impression which seemed to be intended to be conveyed by the Senator from Rhode Island. I wanted to interrupt him some time since before the discussion went along as far as it has done. In view of his statement that we ought not to attempt to make a rule that applied to one section of the country and did not apply to another, I want to call his attention again to the fact that there is nothing sectional in my amendment, and that no effort on his part can put that construction upon it. I will read the proviso as it would stand if the Senate should adopt the amendment I have proposed:

Provided, That hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel flared or splayed, shall be admitted free of duty.

So there is no effort to make anything sectional in this proposition. I did not only intend that cotton-ties should be admitted free, but that the farmers of this country who produce hay and who propose to put ties around it might be allowed to have ties free of duty, especially when the Senator admits that there is no American industry now engaged in producing this article, and when the statement made by the Committee on Finance was that the prime necessity that presents itself to us for consideration now is a reduction of the revenue.

The bill that we have under consideration as it came to us from the House of Representatives is said to be a bill "to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue." When the Finance Committee reported a substitute they did not propose to change the title of that bill, as they should have done. As is manifest from the course pursued by the opposite side of this Chamber, the proper title to the bill would have been "a bill to increase taxation, but to reduce revenue." The intention is that the burden of tax shall not be any less upon the consumers all over the country; that the burden of taxation upon the sixty million people here shall not be one whit lighter than it was before; but they propose only to interpose some man, some highway robber, on the roadside between the tax-payers and the vaults of the Treasury to prevent the tax going into the tills of the Government. There is an increase of taxation where there is a proposed reduction of revenue. There is no pretense of reduction of taxation, and in the report made by the Committee on Finance that accompanies this bill they state that their purpose is to reduce revenue. They nowhere state that they propose to reduce taxation.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas takes a position which is worse than free trade itself, for he proposes to discriminate against American labor and to give the foreign laborer the advantage, because the Senator proposes to put a duty on the unmanufactured article and make the manufactured article free for the purpose of giving the laborer abroad an advantage over the laborer at home.

I should suppose that our Southern friends, so largely and vastly interested in the production of cotton, would desire to have everything pertaining to the production and carrying to market of cotton at their own doors, at home, and not depend upon anybody but themselves for the production of everything that pertained to the marketing of their product. One would suppose that would be the desire on the part of these men.

It is the desire of all intelligent and enterprising producers in this country to have everything that enters into their production and which they must use, produced at their door, knowing that every mile added to the distance between them and what they use is a dead loss to them everywhere. I should suppose that nobody would be so zealous as the cotton producers of this country to devise some way by which cotton-ties should be produced at their very doors. I should expect to see those who represent Birmingham and that section of country, just waking up, as it were, in a new birth, to a new career in this world, would desire to see it half full of producers of cotton-ties rather than to send abroad and depend upon the foreigner for their production; but least of all should I expect to see them discriminating against American labor. The truth is when one gets upon that road there is no knowing where he will go or how far he will go. Absolute free trade would be better to-day than free manufactured articles with a duty upon the unmanufactured articles that enter into them.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator answer a question?

Mr. DAWES. I will if I can.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to ask the Senator if he does not consider a proposition to make the laborers engaged in raising cotton in the Southern States pay double price, pay 105 per cent. upon the articles which they are compelled to have, a discrimination against their labor; or is it only the labor engaged in manufactures that he desires to protect? And is he willing, in order to give protection to a few men engaged in manufactures, to levy 100 per cent. tax upon an article that every farmer throughout the South is compelled to buy?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator goes upon the theory that the duty is a tax on the consumer.

Mr. BERRY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. DAWES. A duty can not be a tax upon the consumer, but must be paid by the foreigner if he finds the product here. If he can have our market at his own command, then, of course, he can make the consumer pay the duty. Otherwise he has to pay it himself. There is the error that lies at the bottom of all the opposition to a protective tariff.

Now, sir, I am not discriminating against labor when I am endeavoring to find employment for labor. Employment is the only remedy against all the evils and ills which labor bears in this country, and he who can give to the laborer two days' work where he had but one before confers the same blessing upon him that he does who makes two blades of grass grow where one grew before.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator proposes in order to give the laborer two days of work to make him work at half price one day in order to give him work another day.

Mr. DAWES. He does not work at half price when he has enough to do.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I have been listening very attentively to this debate. I came into the Chamber this morning in the full belief—and I had been told it so often that I could not fail to remember it—that the Republican party in this country was the great friend of the colored man. I remember on the only occasion on which I ever had an opportunity to visit the South I saw an ancient colored man who had served in the war, crippled, diseased, ill-clad, apparently ill-fed, who came to a little station where the train stopped with a little cart that wobbled all over the road. Upon that cart was a single bale of cotton. The animal drawing the cart furnished him with the means of subsistence, a cow. I questioned him and was informed that his bale of cotton represented the proceeds of a year's labor.

I suppose nobody will deny that the major part of the cotton crop of the South is grown by the colored people, who were once held in slavery, and who are now working for themselves. The proceeds of a year's labor are necessarily very small. The soil does not yield large returns, and therefore laborers get but little in return.

I would suppose if there was any class of labor in the world that ought to be entitled to some consideration from the people of this country, especially from the law-makers of this country, and more particularly from those who set themselves up as the protectors, especially of that kind of labor, it ought to be the colored people.

I do not use an extravagant expression when I say that perhaps those very colored people produce five-sixths of the cotton grown in the South. Of the entire cotton crop five-sevenths of it is exported. If they were to import, if you please, the hoop-iron, and pay the duty upon it, and were to export it again in the same packages, they would be required to pay nothing; they would get a rebate from the Government. What are they compelled to do? They are compelled to bale the cotton, because the Liverpool market will not take it unless it is baled.

Under the rules made by the Cotton Exchange they are required to bag it and to put on hoops. What is done with the hoops on which the duty is paid? The hoops are given away, because when a bale of cotton is weighed, 24 pounds, the tare, are taken from the bale, for which they receive nothing. In short, the requirement upon them in placing their product upon the market is one that can not be avoided. They get nothing in return for it. It is thrown away and is absolutely valueless to them. They get nothing for it.

Now, I wish to know, if there is an article upon the whole tariff-list where by right and duty, and in justice to that great body of poor colored people, concession should be made, is it not upon the duty that they pay upon the hoops which bale their cotton, to say nothing of the other great products, the products of the country which are baled and barreled up and sent away, the hay, the fish, everything that goes abroad and swells very largely the exportation of our products? All these products must be sold in the openest market in the world, against the competition of the world.

When you get into the London or Liverpool markets, which by reason of England's prominence are great distributing reservoirs all over the world, you are there met by the products of every nation, of every people, and of every clime. You are obliged to sell your product in that open market. So also is this poor colored man obliged to sell the single bale of cotton that he has made as the product of a year's labor in that open market, and get nothing either for the original cost of the hoop or the duty he has paid upon it.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that notwithstanding the indirect bounty that this Government has offered to the manufacturer of hoops during all these years, it has failed to produce a hoop industry, and notwithstanding the duty has been 35 per cent. ad valorem upon the value of the hoop, no hoops are made. I want to know if any Senator will rise in his place and tell me that is the value placed upon iron in the State of Alabama, right in the very heart of the cotton industry of this country, with its limestone, with its coal, with inexhaustible beds of iron, and with all the products that enter into its consumption—if hoop-iron can not be made under a protective duty of 35 per cent. ad valorem? I tell you I think they could get rich at it. You need not ask me, then, the question why hoop-iron is not made. I will answer it in advance. It is simply because as long as you impose a duty of $17 a ton upon steel and iron rails they can make more money in manufacturing that kind of iron than they can in manufacturing hoop-iron.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. MCPHERSON. In a moment; as soon as I get through.

It is now proposed to raise the duty from 35 per cent., and I wish to say that there is not a single article upon the iron schedule if you will reduce it down to 35 per cent. but what will be made in this country in abundance. If you make no discrimination between hoop-iron and steel rails or iron rails, one at 35 per cent. ad valorem and the other at $17 a ton, you will soon find plenty of industries to make the hoop-iron.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MCPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. ALDRICH. The Senator from New Jersey voted an hour ago against the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] to reduce the duty on steel beams to six-tenths of a cent a pound, which he said was equivalent to 49 per cent. ad valorem. Why is he not willing now to have this duty increased above 35 per cent. ad valorem upon an article which is more expensive to make?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am very sorry that I have been so unfortunate as not to have made the Senator from Rhode Island understand me. After all that I have attempted to say to-day, the Senator seems to be just as ignorant of what I intended as before I started.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think I do understand the Senator.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will explain——

Mr. ALDRICH. One of those industries is in New Jersey and the other is not.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Not at all. If you are going to make a tariff bill in which you keep the rates of duty through ten or twelve pages of this bill in the same schedule at a rate of duty higher than I think it ought to be, I am not disposed, whenever you reach an industry of my State, to go to work and fight to get that down and leave the others out. Fair play is my motto.

When you will make a proportionate tariff bill I will stand with anybody in this Senate to reduce down the industries of my State on a fair and proper level with each and every other one; and there is not a single manufacturer in my State who is not willing to-day, if it is necessary to reduce the surplus, to bear his just proportion of that reduction.

But, sir, if there is any reason on earth—and there seems to be none in the opinion of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber—why we should put anything on the free-list, the reason exists more strongly than in anything else that I can see why we should put hoop-iron on the free-list. But it is now proposed to raise the duty to 108 per cent., as the Senator from Massachusetts thinks that the manufacturers can not live at 35; that they have gone out of business at 35. We make it 108, which is adding $300,000 to the tax of the poor colored people of the South, because, after all, they have to pay it.

Then the industry can live. Well, let us see, how much does it require? During the past year the entire value of the hoop-iron imported was $345,097, and we are told that the entire cost on all the hoops for all the barrels, for all the bales, and everything else is about one-third of Carnegie's profits in a single year. Therefore it is safe to say that a single factory could make all the hoop-iron. Suppose the factory employed two or three hundred men. Then that would distribute to the owner of that factory and his three hundred men, whatever the number might be, $300,000 additional tax upon the poor colored man who makes the bale of cotton. This is too contemptible for argument. I shall vote this time for the colored man.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that for a few minutes to see if we can not dispose of this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, sir; I think we had better have an executive session.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will yield for a few moments. I should like to go on with the bill until 5 o'clock.

Mr. HARRIS. You can not get a vote by 5 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have an executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HOAR and Mr. ALDRICH called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). I announced my pair with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. It has been arranged, however, to transfer that pair to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], so that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and myself can vote. I therefore desire to vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HARRIS. As pairs are being announced, I was requested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], if there was a division of the Senate, to announce that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and the Senator from Indiana are paired on any question that may arise.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Bate,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Reagan,
Berry,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Morgan,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Pugh,	Vest,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Chace,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Stockbridge,
Chandler,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hale,	Paddock,
Davis,	Hawley,	Palmer,
Dawes,	Hiscock,	Platt,

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Blair,	Daniel,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Blodgett,	Farwell,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Faulkner,	Payne,	Teller,
Brown,	George,	Plumb,	Turpie,
Butler,	Gibson,	Quay,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Riddleberger,	Walthall.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Sabin,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. COKE (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question, and declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. COKE. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. FAULKNER (when his name was called). I transfer the pair I have with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], and I vote "yea."

Mr. PASCO (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. FARWELL].

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 22, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Bate,	Faulkner,	McPherson,	Turpie,
Berry,	Gorman,	Morgan,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Pugh,	Vest,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Reagan,
Eustis,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—23.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hiscock,	Platt,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Sawyer,
Chandler,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Stewart,
Cullom,	Frye,	Manderson,	Stockbridge,
Davis,	Hale,	Paddock,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Hawley,	Palmer,

ABSENT—31.

Beck,	Chace.	Jones of Nevada,	Sabin,
Blair,	Colquitt,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Blodgett,	Daniel,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Bowen,	Farwell,	Pasco,	Stanford,
Brown,	George,	Payne,	Teller,
Butler,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Quay,	Walthall.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Riddleberger,

So the Senate refused to adjourn.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I have listened with some attention to the discussion which has taken place on the tariff question, and it occurs to me that the objections to this bill that I have heard are generally pleas for special privileges. It is assumed that somebody in this country has a right to cheaper commodities than can be produced by free labor in this country, that there are those entitled to some special privileges of that kind; and a moment ago the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] put in that plea for the colored man, that he is entitled to cheaper cotton-ties than can be manufactured in this country. That plea may be carried too far. If you put it in against everything that is manufactured, then you deprive everybody of work.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. STEWART. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My position is not what is stated by the Senator, but my position is that neither the colored people nor any other class of people in this country ought to be taxed to raise money that the Government does not need. That is it.

Mr. STEWART. I do not believe myself in the people of this country, when they can get money from other countries, bearing all the burdens of taxation, whether they are white or colored. I am willing that foreigners should pay a portion of the burdens of this Government for the privilege of peddling here.

There is another error in what has been assumed. It is assumed that duties are a tax and nothing else than a tax. What has been removed from the internal revenue is treated as no tax at all. That is not a tax because it is paid exclusively by our people for the privilege of doing business here, for the privilege of manufacturing something. Our people pay it, and therefore it is not a tax! Our friends appear to regard nothing as a tax unless it is paid by foreigners. I think that it is just as well to tax foreigners, if we can, for the privilege of manufacturing articles for sale here, as it is to tax our own people, and I would rather do it. The internal revenue is a tax upon our own people.

I think this is a pretty good bill, but it does not come quite up to my theory of a protective tariff. I believe that the tariff upon everything that can be produced in this country with ample competition should be practically prohibitory, and let none but the rich enjoy luxuries from abroad, provided there can be fair competition among producers in this country.

This talk about our tariff raising trusts here because they exist in our country seems to me very fallacious. For instance, it has been said that the cotton-ties we use could all be manufactured by one establishment in this country. If that be so, why can not they be manufactured by one establishment in some other country? And would not that trust in another country be as oppressive as it would if it were here, and more so, and particularly if you put it out of the power of the people of this country to compete with those other people and allow that trust to prevail?

There is hardly an article that is manufactured in a foreign country which is not manufactured by a monopoly, and our friends do not seem to realize the evil of monopolies in other countries. They would break up manufactures here to break up monopolies, and they would drive them to other countries. How are they going to deal with them there? Through the State Department? That has not been always successful in making other countries do right.

This argument, this plea for cheaper commodities than can be produced with free labor in this country, leads to the abolishment of all duties. If an article can be produced in this country, with ample competition, if any one of sixty million people can engage in it—for it is open to sixty million people—the plea that you want a cheaper article because you are not willing to allow the people of the United States to manufacture and you are not willing to pay the price that it can be produced for here when sixty million of free people are competing for it, is to say that you desire slave labor somewhere, that you want some special privileges, and I say let the man who wants slave labor to produce anything for him go to a slave country and let him have all the disadvantages of slavery; let him go where there is cheap labor, where there are cheap men, where ignorance and tyranny prevail. Let him go there if it is slave labor and cheap labor that he desires; but no man who lives in a country as free as this is, with its boundless resources, and its sixty millions of people to compete with each other, has a right to say "I ought to have special privileges."

The privilege of this free country, the privileges of our institutions, the privileges of our vast resources are sufficient, and the plea that somebody wants cheaper articles than our free people can produce is a special plea, is a selfish plea. There might be something in the plea if every other people on earth had not taken precaution to close their markets against us. It is not cheap labor alone that our people have to contend with. When you reduce the price of labor to the level of other countries, to the level of Europe, you have not reached the bottom if you have free trade.

You have got then to reduce the price of labor here again until you can compete against foreign tariffs. Show me the country where its labor, such as it is, cheap as it is, is not protected by high tariffs. Every country in Europe and all the colonies of Great Britain, which are open to the trade of the world—I exclude India, which is practically under a close corporation, so that it does not count—all of them have tariffs on an average as high as ours and higher. Behind those tariffs they have slave labor, many of them, and our laborers to reach their markets must not only be reduced down to their level of labor, but must compete with their protective tariffs.

I have examined somewhat the tariffs of all the countries. Great Britain is differently situated from any other country. She has a fixed market for her commodities, tariff or no tariff. She has nearly a third of the inhabitants of the earth that are bound to trade with her. The consequence is that she can maintain establishments and her people can invest in manufactures with a guaranty of fixed markets. Consequently when any country without a tariff attempts to manufacture, she can send it cheap commodities for the time being until she has destroyed the enterprise.

Germany tried that fairly. The history of Germany ought to teach us something. After the empire had been consolidated they had practically no general tariff law. Many of the little countries that were incorporated in the empire practicaHy had free trade, and not many years ago, in 1877, the balance of trade againt Germany was very large, some $300,000,000, if I recollect aright. It was ascertained, although labor in Germany was as cheap as in England, that they could not start manufactories in Germany against England, because England had her manufacturing establishments, had fixed markets, and she could send her surplus and stock the German market; and on investigation it was found by Germany that it was necessary to have a protective tariff as against England; and the best tariff speech I have ever read was made by Bismarck in explaining the situation.

France within the last few years found herself, with her cheap labor and ingenuity, in the same situation. She had no fixed market to compete with England, and England with her vast establishments could throw her surplus into France. France raised her tariff. Austria has done it; Russia has done it, and they all have done it. Now, it is proposed in America that we shall take down our tariff and open our markets to all the world, and our free labor is to compete not only against the cheap labor of Europe, but against the tariffs that they have built up against our labor.

There are no foreign markets for the United States, I say again, except for such commodities as the countries buying them can not produce themselves. You will not increase the markets of the United States, but by tearing down the tariff that has built up this country you will take the gold and silver money that we have and leave us impoverished, without manufactures and without industries.

The idea in this country of discussing the question of a reduction of the tariff when all the markets of the world are closed against us seems to me too insane for any American statesman to consider.

This bill as reported by our committee is in the right direction. It has made many duties specific that were formerly ad valorem, and ad valorem duties are subject to all the frauds imaginable. They can not be enforced. Undervaluations are a great drawback to the collection of revenue and one of the sources of demoralization to this country. This measure is admirably drawn as against undervaluations. It has made many duties specific that were ad valorem, and provided checks and balances that are invaluable. The idea which has been suggested that this bill was a mere political expedient, that we did not intend to pass it, seems to be a reflection upon the common sense of the opposition.

Does the Senator from New Jersey think that any set of gentlemen would go to the labor of perfecting a scheme for the benefit of the country which guards against a thousand evils and meets a demand universal, and now throw it away after the verdict of the people, after he says it was read in the shops throughout the country and appealed to as an electioneering argument? After, I say, it has been read in the shops and among the people as an electioneering argument and they decided that they wanted it, it seems to me that we should misrepresent not only our party but the people of the United States if we should say, after they have given a fair verdict on this question, that we propose to cheat them out of the judgment. They have rendered the verdict, and we are here now to enter the judgment. We propose to stay here and do it if it takes all winter.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 5 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 12, 1888, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 11th day of December, 1888.

MINISTER TO SPAIN.

Perry Belmont, of New York, to be envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to Spain, vice Jabez L. M. Curry, resigned.

PROBATE JUDGES.

John Houston, of Garfield County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice David Cameron, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

Francis A. Hammond, of San Juan County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice J. R. Barton, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

William C. McGregor, of Iron County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

William T. Stewart, of Kane County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice John Rider, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

James A. Melville, of Millard County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice T. C. Callister, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

Samuel Francis, of Morgan County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, whose term of office has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

James A. Stark, of Piute County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice R. A. Allen, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

The nomination of William G. Stark to the above-named office, which was made and confirmed at the last session of the Senate, was erroneous, no person of that name being a resident of Piute County, Utah.

Thomas S. Watson, of Wasatch County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice T. S. Watson, whose term has expired, as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

R. W. Cross, of Weber County, Territory of Utah, to be judge of probate in said county, vice L. W. Shurtleff, whose term has expired as provided by section 19, chapter 397, volume 24, Laws 1887, United States Statutes at Large.

INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Andrew G. Chapman, of Maryland, appointed under a temporary commission during the recess of the Senate, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Maryland, to succeed Joseph K. Roberts, deceased.

George Washington Hensel, of Pennsylvania, appointed under a temporary commission during the recess of the Senate, to be collector of internal revenue for the ninth district of Pennsylvania, to succeed John T. MacGonigle, deceased.

ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

John J. Enright, of Detroit, Mich., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be Assistant Commissioner of Indian Affairs, vice Alexander B. Upshaw, resigned.

SUPERINTENDENT OF INDIAN SCHOOLS.

Samuel H. Albro, of Fredonia, N. Y., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be superintendent of Indian schools, as provided in section 8 of the act approved June 29, 1888, to fill an original vacancy.

INDIAN INSPECTOR.

James C. Saunders, of Fort Smith, Ark., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be an Indian inspector, vice Morris A. Thomas, resigned.

INDIAN AGENTS.

Charles E. Vandever, of Indiana, who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be agent for the Indians of the Navajo agency, in New Mexico, vice Samuel S. Patterson, removed.

Samuel T. Leavy, of Kentucky, who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be agent for the Indians of the Yankton agency in Dakota, vice John F. Kinney, resigned.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

T. A. Dunlava, of Fisher, Minn., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be receiver of public moneys at Crookston, Minn., vice Lars K. Aaker, resigned.

George McGowan, of Burns, Oregon, who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be receiver of public moneys at Drewsey, Oregon (a newly established office), to fill an original vacancy.

Frank F. Randolph, of Huron, Dak., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be receiver of public moneys at Watertown, Dak., vice Downer T. Bramble, deceased.

REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

Joseph G. McCoy, of Wichita, Kans., who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be register of the land office at Wichita, Kans., vice Frank Dale, resigned.

Robert J. Slater, of Pendleton, Oregon, who was commissioned during the recess of the Senate, to be register of the land office at Drewsey, Oregon (a newly-established office), to fill an original vacancy.

ASSISTANT APPRAISER OF MERCHANDISE.

Edward R. Wolgamuth, of Pennsylvania, to be assistant appraiser of merchandise in the district of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, to succeed George H. Hoffman, removed.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

Howard Ellis, of Ridgewood, N. J., to be consul of the United States at Rotterdam, vice Richard Stockton, resigned.

APPOINTMENT IN THE REVENUE SERVICE.

Capt. Joseph W. Congdon, of Rhode Island, appointed under a temporary commission during the recess of the Senate, to be a captain in the revenue service of the United States, to succeed Capt. David A. Constable, deceased.

POSTMASTERS.

James M. Ward, to be postmaster at Tulare, in the county of Tulare and State of California, in the place of Napoleon B. Witt, resigned.

Jeremiah G. Fowler, to be postmaster at Milledgeville, in the county of Baldwin and State of Georgia, in the place of Jeremiah G. Fowler, whose commission expires December 20, 1888.

Harriett L. Vedder, to be postmaster at Washington, in the county of Washington and State of Kansas, in the place of James S. Vedder, deceased.

Gilbert H. Cooper, to be postmaster at Sag Harbor, in the county of Suffolk and State of New York, in the place of Hannibal French, sr., whose commission expires December 11, 1888.

Richard A. Dearborn, to be postmaster at Salem, in the county of Marion and State of Oregon, in the place of William H. Odell, whose commission expires December 11, 1888.

Nicholos Mackin, to be postmaster at Emlenton, in the county of Venango and State of Pennsylvania, in the place of Henry A. Hamilton, whose commission expires December 22, 1888.

Mrs. Belle P. Chreitzberg, to be postmaster at Georgetown, in the county of Williamson and State of Texas, in the place of Daniel S. Cheesher, resigned.

Mrs. M. W. Morrow, to be postmaster at Abilene, in the county of Taylor and State of Texas, in the place of Haynes H. Harden, whose commission expires December 11, 1888.

Emil Drews, to be postmaster at Lancaster, in the county of Grant and State of Wisconsin, in the place of Theodore A. Burr, whose commission expires December 20, 1888.

Myron Reed, to be postmaster at Waupaca, in the county of Waupaca and State of Wisconsin, in the place of George M. Chamberlain, whose commission expires December 11, 1888.

Fred P. Shannon, to be postmaster at Carbon, in the county of Carbon and Territory of Wyoming, the appointment of a postmaster for the said office having, by law, become vested in the President from and after October 1, 1888.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

Inspector-General's Department.

Capt. Peter D. Vroom, of the Third Cavalry, to be inspector-general, with the rank of major, December 10, 1888, vice Farnsworth, deceased.

Judge-Advocate-General's Department.

Capt. Edward Hunter, of the First Cavalry, to be judge-advocate, with the rank of major, December 10, 1888, vice Curtis, promoted.

Capt. George B. Davis, of the Fifth Cavalry, to be judge-advocate, with the rank of major, December 10, 1888, vice Gardiner, retired from active service.

Quartermaster's Department.

First Lieut. Robert Craig, of the Fourth Artillery, to be assistant quartermaster, with the rank of captain, December 10, 1888, vice Forsyth, promoted.

Subsistence Department.

Capt. Douglas M. Scott, of the First Infantry, to be commissary of subsistence, with the rank of captain, December 10, 1888, vice Cushing, promoted.

First Lieut. Charles Hay, of the Twenty-third Infantry, to be commissary of subsistence, with the rank of captain, December 10, 1888, vice Whitehead, deceased.

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

William Joseph Larkin, of Illinois, to be post chaplain in the Army of the United States, December 10, 1888, vice Kendig, retired from active service.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 11, 1888.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday was read and approved.

The following additional members appeared and took their seats:

Mr. CANDLER, of Georgia.
Mr. LIND, of Minnesota.
Mr. MAHONEY, of New York.
Mr. GAINES, of Virginia.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House, this day, immediately after the reading of the Journal, is set apart for the consideration of the bill known as the direct-tax bill, the title of which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

Mr. CASWELL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, the title of which has just been read.

The motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING OF DIRECT TAX.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

The title of the bill was again reported.

After a pause,

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What has become of the hour in which reports are to be made?

The CHAIRMAN. Under a resolution adopted by the House this day was set apart, after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of the bill the title of which the Clerk has read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Immediately after the reading of the Journal?

The CHAIRMAN. Immediately after the reading of the Journal, for to-day and to-morrow.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports to make from committees may be permitted to file them with the Clerk?

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole, and therefore that motion would not be in order.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. When this bill that is now under consideration was before the House at the last session I gave somewhat at length my views in regard to the objections raised against its passage. I do not care to repeat to-day what I said at that time. The objections which have been made at this session of course are substantially the same as those which were urged last session. The purpose for which I rise is more particularly to notice some of the reasons which are urged in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] to tack upon the bill an amendment to refund the so-called cotton tax. I listened with a good deal of interest and considerable pleasure to the legal argument made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] the other day upon that subject. It was able and ingenious, and yet, Mr. Chairman, as it seemed to me, it came short of that conclusiveness which would warrant members of this House in voting to refund to the people who paid the cotton tax, which amounts to $68,000,000 in round numbers, that vast sum of money.

Now, in the first place, Mr. Chairman, this amendment, coming as it does, is a little peculiar. It has no relation to the direct tax which is embodied in the Senate bill. It is simply placed upon this as an amendment, as a rider, by indirection, and, it seems to me, to defeat the refunding of the direct tax rather than to obtain a refund of this money under this amendment. If there is any merit in the position which is taken by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] in regard to the refunding of the cotton tax, it would be better to present that in a separate and distinct bill, so that it can be determined upon its merits. If it has any merits it will receive favorable consideration; if it is without merit, then it can be just as well considered in a separate bill as by the method which is resorted to in the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Now, Mr. Chairman, the objections which are urged against these laws which levied a tax on cotton are three, as I understand them. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] claims that under section 8 of Article I of the Constitution they violate the last clause of that section, where it says:

Duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

And he further claims that it is also violative of the provision of the Constitution which requires that—

No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

Also that it is violative of this clause, that—

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

Mr. Chairman, I have examined with a good deal of care these various sections of the Constitution and decisions of the Supreme Court bearing upon, illustrating, and explaining them, and it seems to me that these laws under which the cotton tax was levied and collected are not obnoxious to any of the objections which have been urged against them. The power of levying a tax is full and unqualified under the Constitution itself as to the extent and as to the articles upon which the tax shall be levied.

The gentleman from Georgia, however, claimed that inasmuch as cotton is only grown in a certain section of our country, therefore a tax upon cotton was violative of this last clause of section 8, Article I, of the Constitution.

It will be remembered that during the discussion the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL] very pertinently asked him this question: If it is violative of the Constitution so far as the cotton tax is concerned, will not the same argument apply to the tax upon tobacco? and the gentleman was compelled to admit that it would.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion at that point?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the tobacco tax is different from the tax on raw cotton because the tax upon tobacco is levied on the manufactured article and is therefore an excise tax.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I will come to that further on; but I will say now that the tobacco tax as originally levied was upon the leaf, and was just as much of a tax upon the raw product while that law was in existence as the tax upon cotton itself.

Mr. Chairman, I was about to say when interrupted that there is not a single article produced in any section of the country but could be exempted from an excise tax upon the principle announced by the gentlemen on the other side. There is no single article that is produced in all the States and Territories of the Union upon which an excise tax could be levied if that argument is sound. But we are not limited to reasoning from the Constitution or to illustrations derived from it. I think the Supreme Court of the United States has settled this whole question and has put it beyond debate. In the hard-money cases, so called, which were decided by the Supreme Court in 1884 (U. S. Reports, 112, 594) the court, speaking of this very clause of the Constitution, said:

The uniformity here prescribed has reference to the various localities in which the tax is intended to operate. "It shall be uniform throughout the United States." Is the tax on tobacco void because in many of the States no tobacco is raised or manufactured? Is the tax on distilled spirits void because a few States pay three-fourths of the revenue arising from it? The tax is uniform when it operates with the same force and effect in every place where the subject of it is found. The tax in this case, which, as far as it can be called a tax, is an excise duty on the business of bringing passengers from foreign countries into this by ocean navigation, is uniform, and operates exactly alike in every port of the United States where such passengers can be landed. It is said that the statute violates the rule of uniformity and the provision of the Constitution that "no preference shall be given, in the regulation of commerce or revenue, to the ports of one State over those of another," because it does not apply to passengers arriving in this country by railroad or other inland mode of conveyance; but the law applies to all ports alike, and evidently gives no preference to one over another, but is uniform in its operation in all ports of the United States. It may be added that the evil to be remedied by this legislation has no existence on our inland border, and immigration in that quarter needed no such regulation. Perfect uniformity, perfect equality of taxation in all the aspects in which the human mind can view, is a baseless dream, as this court has said more than once. * * * Here, then, is substantial uniformity within the meaning and purpose of the Constitution.

Now, taking this decision as a text, it shows that this tax upon cotton was absolutely uniform. Wherever the cotton was found the same tax was levied upon it per pound, whether it was in Alabama or in Louisiana, in Illinois or in New York. I hold in my hand and will insert in my remarks a statement from the Internal-Revenue Bureau showing that this tax which is objected to was collected from twenty-six different States and Territories, and that in all of those States and Territories where the tax was levied and collected it was uniform; that is, the same amount per pound in Georgia and in Utah; the same amount per pound was levied and collected in Illinois that was levied and collected in the Carolinas. That is the uniformity which the Supreme Court says is required by the provision of the Constitution to which I have referred.

The following is a list of the States in which taxes on cotton were collected, and the several amounts collected in each, to wit:

States.	Amount.	States.	Amount.
Alabama	$10,388,072.10	Mississippi	$8,742,995.93
Arkansas	2,555,683.43	Missouri	592,098.36
California	430.03	New Jersey	3,656.42
Connecticut	193.64	New York	867,942.68
Florida	918,944.98	North Carolina	1,939,704.87
Georgia	11,897,094.98	Ohio	447,127.12
Illinois	379,144.42	Pennsylvania	78,535.06
Indiana	992,727.22	Rhode Island	2,424.73
Kansas	286.15	South Carolina	4,172,420.16
Kentucky	553,327.45	Tennessee	7,873,460.71
Louisiana	10,098,501.00	Texas	5,502,401.24
Maryland	51,349.52	Utah	1,375.34
Massachusetts	66,679.30	Virginia	825,856.87

I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that with that decision before us it is unnecessary to take up further time in demonstrating that the objection raised by the gentleman from Georgia is untenable.

The next objection urged against this tax is that it was an export tax. If it was an export tax, we all grant that it was in violation of the Constitution and was void, and that the money collected under it should be returned. Let us look at that question. What is an export tax? An export tax is something that is levied upon goods that are shipped from this country to a foreign country; not from one State to another, but from this country to another country; and such a tax only attaches when the goods are prepared to be shipped abroad.

If the goods are not shipped, no tax is levied. The distinction between an export tax and an excise tax is this: An excise tax attaches to articles regardless of any condition; an export tax attaches only under certain conditions, and those conditions are that the goods are shipped abroad. Now, with that explanation and understanding of the law—and it can not be gainsaid by anybody—I ask the Chairman and members of this committee whether or not this tax was levied upon cotton that was exported, or whether it was levied upon all cotton alike? That is the crucial test.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me answer the gentleman from the law.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Wait one moment; you will have your own time.

Mr. HERBERT. The law shows that it was collected on exported cotton.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. The law shows that it was collected on every pound of cotton that the officers could get hold of, regardless of whether that cotton was to be consumed at home or abroad. The Constitution does not contemplate that goods which may possibly be shipped abroad shall not be taxed. Any goods which are produced, manufactured, or used in this country are liable to be exported; and the mere fact that some portion of them may go abroad does not render the law taxing such goods violative of this section of the Constitution. Suppose, for example, every pound of cotton on which this tax was collected in these twenty-six different States and Territories during these various years, under the acts from 1863 to 1868, had been consumed in this country; the tax would have been collected and placed in the Treasury of the United States just the same. And it will not do to say that simply because some of these goods may have gone abroad, therefore no tax can apply to them, because there is not an article manufactured or produced, either by agricultural or any other form of industry, which may not, under some circumstances, be shipped abroad.

Mr. LONG. Whisky and tobacco may go abroad.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Yes, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] suggests, whisky and tobacco may be shipped abroad; and the same argument which applies to cotton would apply to them.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentleman allow me to say——

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. You will have your time.

Mr. HERBERT. A drawback is allowed on whisky and tobacco exported, but not on cotton.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I can not permit myself to be interrupted; my time is limited.

But, to go a little further, there is another question presented. These gentlemen from the Southern States have assumed that their people paid this tax, and that it was thus a drain upon the States which were once in insurrection. I say that the facts are directly the contrary of that. The records of our country show that the loyal and patriotic States of the North, under all these revenue laws, paid taxation largely in excess of what was paid by the States of the South.

When this matter was first before Congress and the advisability of levying a tax upon cotton was urged, all the arguments which have been presented here by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] were then urged against this law. All the authorities which have been cited in this debate were cited then. But it was the deliberate judgment of Congress that cotton was a proper subject of taxation. It was the deliberate judgment of the various Congresses that enacted these laws during the years from 1863 to 1868 that cotton should pay a certain tax in order to help in sustaining the arm of the Government and to pay some of this enormous debt that was contracted to suppress the rebellion and to maintain the Union in its integrity. But it was not claimed in the argument at that time that the Southern people were to pay this tax upon cotton. The wisest and the ablest statesmen of that time contended that it was a tax which would be levied upon the consumer, and not upon the producer. I have in my hand an extract from a speech made by Mr. Harding, of Illinois, one of the able and distinguished Democrats of that State, a gentleman who opposed the levying of these taxes. In that speech he said:

> The tax will ultimately be extorted from the toiling millions of our country. I protest against indirect taxation of the absolute necessaries of life. My constituents are clothed almost exclusively in cotton goods. They sleep on cotton; they walk in cotton; and no matter what the price of corn is, they pay the tax.

Mr. Marshall, another distinguished member of the House at the time these laws were under consideration and when the propriety of their enactment was being discussed, said:

> I am opposed on principle to the whole tax; at least I think, if there is any at all, it should be very small in amount; and it is for this reason, that in raising revenue to support the Government we should endeavor, as far as possible, to impose the burdens of the Government upon the wealthy, and not upon the poor. The cotton fabrics of the country are consumed almost exclusively by the laboring white men of the country and by the poor freedmen. The wealthy man who can afford to wear fine linen will pay no part of it; but the poor and humble men at the South and the West and at the East and all over the country will bear the burden of the tax that is imposed by the provisions of this bill.

That was the judgment of the leading men of the House as well as of the Senate as to where the burden of this tax would rest.

A further fact which proves that the Southern people did not pay it is this: Before the war cotton which was selling at 10 cents a pound, at the time the tax was levied upon it was ranging from 25 cents to a dollar a pound.

A MEMBER rose.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. I can not be interrupted.

The demand for cotton was greater than the product itself. Now, it is the consumer under such conditions who pays the tax and not the producer. Never did we have such fabulous prices for cotton as during the very period when the Government of the United States was seeking to raise a small portion of its revenue by taxing this product, and this tax, as I have observed before, was paid by the consumers of the country North and South, East and West, and not by the people down there where the cotton was raised.

I have listened, until I have grown tired, to the arguments of these gentlemen at the South insisting they have been tax-ridden by the laws of our country. The record shows with the same population the people of the North have paid five to ten dollars under the internal-revenue laws of the country to one dollar paid by the people at the South. I hold in my hand a statement and comparison made under the internal-revenue laws of the amount paid during this period up to 1870 by some of the Southern States and the same by an equal number of Northern States. It is as follows:

According to census of 1870 Rhode Island had about 30,000 more population than the State of Florida. Florida is a cotton-growing State, Rhode Island is not.

According to the reports of the returns made from collections under internal-revenue laws Rhode Island paid $25,024,953; Florida, from other sources than cotton, $538,508.

According to the same census Alabama had a population of 996,992 persons, New Jersey a population of 906,096 persons, or 90,000 less than Alabama. Alabama is a cotton-growing State, New Jersey is not.

The collections made in Alabama from other sources than cotton were $3,812,910, while the collections from New Jersey for the same period were $48,524,642.

The population of Georgia by the census of 1870 was 1,184,109 persons; Michigan, by the same census, had a population of 1,184,059 persons.

There were collected from other sources than cotton in Georgia $6,520,515, while in Michigan, with a little less population, as you observe, there was collected $24,099,806.

Including cotton tax, the amounts collected from the several States above named are as follows:

Florida shows a total tax of	$1,457,453
Rhode Island a total tax of	25,027,378
Alabama a total tax of	14,200,982
New Jersey a total tax of	48,528,298
Georgia a total tax of	18,417,610
Michigan a total tax of	24,099,806

Let us go a step further and take the State of Georgia, the State from which the gentleman comes [Mr. STEWART], who said the other day that it had been tax-ridden. Let us look at that for a moment. It had a population under the census of 1870 of 1,184,109 persons. Michigan had a population under the same census of 1,184,059 persons. The population of these two States under the census of 1870 is nearly equal. Under the internal-revenue laws of our country, exclusive of the cotton tax, Georgia paid the small sum of $6,520,515, as against $24,995,080 in the State of Michigan. Why is not Michigan contending this tax levied there and collected in that State should be refunded? Why is it she is not here claiming the tax on various iron and copper and salt and other industries in that State should be refunded? The same argument that brings Georgia here through her Representatives insisting this cotton tax should be refunded would call the Representatives of Michigan to insist the $24,000,000 collected from that State should also be refunded.

I had the collector of internal revenue make a statement of the amount of tax collected in my State as compared with Georgia from 1870 to 1880. It is as follows:

Statement showing the receipts from several objects of taxation in Georgia and Illinois from 1871 to 1880.

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Distilled spirits.		Tobacco.
	Georgia.	Illinois.	Georgia.	Illinois.
1871	$123,139.65	$10,666,828.82	$233,483.72	$2,294,143.56
1872	159,157.69	12,431,430.06	213,965.94	1,994,050.72
1873	145,029.41	13,727,790.43	244,972.45	1,962,290.87
1874	152,193.55	12,411,924.62	173,192.52	2,210,851.83
1875	151,455.67	14,111,459.50	168,300.66	2,622,838.50
1876	152,856.29	19,821,368.38	153,057.16	2,955,972.32
1877	129,763.11	18,220,734.66	95,885.55	2,819,813.55
1878	206,246.53	16,072,539.33	61,980.04	2,829,805.58
1879	185,360.05	16,052,206.72	69,036.54	2,656,061.85
1880	191,550.18	19,589,253.97	74,147.04	2,493,226.67
Totals	1,596,732.13	153,105,536.49	1,488,021.62	24,839,055.45

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Fermented liquors.		Gross receipts of railroads, express companies, etc. *
	Georgia.	Illinois.	Georgia.	Illinois.
1871	$6,530.31	$183,603.73	$27,746.44	$161,450.66
1872	5,737.61	514,019.13
1873	7,645.43	542,070.32
1874	6,675.41	573,201.80
1875	6,741.48	555,809.48
1876	6,775.18	576,060.90
1877	8,664.61	541,872.54
1878	7,198.01	571,580.12
1879	10,409.43	618,420.94
1880	12,729.92	767,013.67
Totals	79,127.39	5,743,652.63	27,746.44	161,450.66

*Repealed by act of July 14, 1870.

Statement showing the receipts from several objects of taxation in Georgia and Illinois from 1871 to 1880—Continued.

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Sales.*		Special taxes.†
	Georgia.	Illinois.	Georgia.	Illinois.
1871	$14,430.80	$183,143.10	$64,431.48	$393,773.17
1872
1873
1874
1875
1876
1877
1878
1879
1880
Totals	14,430.80	183,143.10	64,431.48	393,773.17

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Income—individuals.‡		Income—corporations.‡
	Georgia.	Illinois.	Georgia.	Illinois.
1871	$97,031.58	$332,063.44	$83,198.46	$78,328.20
1872	53,192.86	195,748.81	80,619.01	313,522.25
1873	16,938.66	79,051.77	1,511.75	4,739.49
1874
1875
1876
1877
1878
1879
1880
Totals	167,163.10	606,864.02	165,329.22	396,589.94

Fiscal year ending June 30—	Gas.§		Aggregate receipts.
	Georgia.	Illinois.	Georgia.	Illinois.
1871	$8,841.33	$142,168.64	$736,944.02	$15,119,609.02
1872	8,357.19	124,220.28	583,160.18	15,799,667.30
1873	1,241.73	19,194.22	477,959.90	16,493,169.34
1874			384,622.55	15,419,720.89
1875			388,226.84	17,634,626.71
1876			362,726.44	23,730,694.18
1877			278,879.30	21,870,203.14
1878			333,519.90	19,668,791.32
1879			322,770.60	19,470,641.75
1880			322,074.18	23,035,614.49
Totals	18,440.25	285,583.14	4,190,883.91	188,242,738.14

*Repealed by act of July 14, 1870.
†Repealed May 1, 1871, by act of July 14, 1870.
‡Expired by limitation December 31, 1871.
§Repealed August 1, 1872, by act of June 6, 1872.

I find from this table that there has been collected in the State of Illinois during this period, under our internal-revenue laws, the amount of $188,242,738, against the sum of $4,190,000 collected in the State of Georgia.

Again, sir, if the argument should prevail that it is the producer who pays this tax and not the consumer, then the State of Illinois is paying and has paid to support the Government $188,000,000, in round numbers, against four million and some odd hundred thousand dollars paid by the State of Georgia for the same period. If that argument is to prevail, you can see the inequality; and I cite the facts to show you that instead of its being the producer it is beyond all question the consumers all over the country who pay the tax. We helped to pay the tax that was levied on cotton, and every person in the State of Illinois and elsewhere throughout the country paid his proportion of that tax precisely as did the people of the State of Georgia; and I take it that upon the whisky tax collected in Illinois the people in the State of Georgia pay their proportion with the people of Illinois.

But, Mr. Chairman, another argument has been urged by the gentleman from Georgia why this tax should be refunded to the people of his State. He insists that it is a tax upon the land itself. Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States a direct tax is limited to realty and to the poll-tax. The gentleman from Georgia insisted that because the tax was levied upon a product of agriculture that it is, therefore, a tax upon the soil that produces that product, and claims that in the whole history of this country and England there is no precedent for it. Mr. Chairman, any student of English constitutional history, and especially any lawyer who has read Blackstone's Commentaries, knows that excise taxes were imposed in England of the very character of this cotton tax. Under the statutes that were enacted during the time of George II, an excise tax was levied upon hops precisely as it was levied in this country upon cotton. Hops are a product of the soil under the same condition that cotton is a product of the soil. It is manifest, therefore, to any student of history that precedents are against the position assumed by the gentleman from Georgia.

Now, fortunately for us, Mr. Chairman, the Supreme Court of the United States has settled that question also. In 6 Wallace, 594, the savings-bank case, the court held that a franchise tax upon the bank proportioned to the amount of its deposits is not a tax upon the Government securities in which these deposits are invested. In other words, that a tax on the amount of money received as interest on the Government bonds is not a tax of the bank itself, which is by law exempted from taxation.

Anybody who will take the time and trouble to examine the decision in full will find that it meets exactly and fully the point raised by the gentleman from Georgia.

But the argument the gentleman made on that occasion would lead the members of this body to believe that this is a tax which was levied upon the soil while the cotton was growing. That is not the case, as I understand it. There was, it is true, his coincidence, that this cotton tax was upon the statute-books of the country at the time, and necessarily so, that the cotton was growing, but, as I have said, that was a necessity of the case itself, for we find that the cotton tax existed from the year 1863 to 1868. That, however, is the only connection between the growing cotton and the tax. Anybody who will examine the subject will find that the intention of Congress was to levy, and the act did levy, a tax upon the cotton that had been gathered, ginned, and placed in bales or packages ready for market; that the tax was levied not upon the raw material itself, but upon the product after the hand of labor had added an additional value to it. It was the joint product of the soil and the labor of man, precisely as articles of manufacture are the joint product of the skill of man and of nature. There is no difference between them, and I defy anybody to follow this out and show there is. The very fact that we find portions of this cotton in Illinois, where we do not grow it, and in fifteen of the different States of the Union where cotton is not produced, is ample evidence to the mind of any man who reasons that the tax was levied upon the cotton with the additional value that was given to it by the hand of man.

Mr. LONG. How does this differ from the tobacco tax?

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. There is no difference. The principle is precisely the same.

But I go a step further. I contend that there is no clause in the Constitution of the United States exempting the products of agriculture from taxation under the excise law of the country any more than there is to exempt the products of manufacture. I contend that as a mere question of constitutional right there is absolutely no difference between them. As a question of expediency the fathers of the Constitution, and the great men who followed them in giving us legislation, refrained from levying a tax upon the product of the soil. But I contend, sir, that when this tax was levied the exigency of the country warranted it. It was a case of absolute necessity. We were plunged in the midst of a domestic war, a causeless war of colossal proportions. One portion of the country was arrayed in arms against the General Government. To suppress that rebellion brought sorrow and suffering into millions of homes at the North. It required the patriotic people of the North to submit to all forms of exorbitant taxation on all business pursuits and upon every article they had or produced, and I say that it was but scant justice for the General Government to reach out and declare that this product that had this enormous value because of the great demand for it all over the world should pay a portion of that tax in restoring this country to its rightful status, and giving to these very people the blessings that they now enjoy under this great Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, as there are grave constitutional questions and grave questions of governmental policy involved in the proposition to refund to the States the direct tax, there seems to be a general desire to hear my views on this important matter [laughter], and this being my first public utterance since the late campaign, in which I took so conspicuous a part, what I have to say will be listened to with attentive interest. [Laughter.]

It is not my purpose to repeat what has been so well said by others against the constitutionality of the proposed legislation. The party to which I am proud to belong has always insisted that the powers of Congress to collect taxes and appropriate the same when collected were limited by the Constitution, and that the only safe rule is to keep at least within the spirit of such limitations.

Upon an examination of this sacred instrument I fail to find either in its letter or spirit any power which authorizes Congress to appropriate the money carried by this bill. What is the proposition? It is to pay back to the several States that paid the same what is known as the direct tax—a tax that, it is admitted, was constitutionally levied, collected, and expended twenty-odd years ago.

I have heard the advocates of the measure discuss it time and again, but have not heard from any of them an attempt to show its constitutionality; but I must remind my friend from Alabama [Mr. OATES], who raises the question of the constitutionality of the measure, that a great many of the members on this floor have very slack views on the Constitution. They seem to think there is such a thing as constitutional limitation when applied to a measure some one else wants passed and they do not, but that it was never intended that it should stand between them and anything they want done.

Their idea of the Constitution seems to be about as well defined as were those of a witness I once heard testify in Mississippi as to the interest he was taking in a prosecution. It was in the trial of the case of the State vs. Eubanks, in Itawamba County, Mississippi. [Laughter.] I was the leading counsel for the defense in that case—you have all doubtless heard of it. [Laughter.] I asked one of the witnesses for the State if he was not taking a very great interest in the prosecution. His answer was, "Only so far as necessity, civilization, and agreement of his family extended."

I then asked him how far "necessity, civilization, and agreement of his family" extended. He said, "Just as far as morality would lead." I then asked him how far morality would lead, when he replied, "Morality should exist throughout all civilized worlds." [Great laughter.] Now, his answers to these questions were about as explicit as the ideas many gentlemen on this floor seem to have of constitutional limitations; they think they only go so far as necessity, civilization, and agreement of a member's constituents extend. [Laughter.]

I do not agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART], who said the other day that the object of the friends of this measure was to pile appropriations for which to hold this Democratic administration responsible. I think he misapprehends the true object of the gentlemen who favor this bill. I think their real object is to get the money for their States which this bill carries, and if ever passed at all it will be passed by a combination or sort of pool of those members from those States, who are more particular about getting the money than how they get it.

But I indulge the hope that this Democratic administration will never be responsible for this bill, even should it pass this House.

Mr. Chairman, the reasons urged why this tax should be refunded are not that it was not properly, legally, and constitutionally collected and expended; but it stands alone upon the ground that of the $20,000,000 levied only about seventeen and a half millions were collected; and that as some of the Southern States did not pay their part of the tax, the other should therefore be refunded.

It will be remembered that at the time this tax should have been paid the Southern people could not find the tax-collectors of the United States. Many of them were out on the hunt of them, but they were not to be found. They were at least inconvenient of access.

Now let us see where the logic of the position assumed will lead us. It is that whenever a tax is levied and for any reason it is not all paid the Government should pay back what has been collected. In other words, that in States where a poll-tax is levied if any persons should fail to pay (as many always do) the State should pay back what is collected in order to equalize the matter; or, to take a case in point for which this would be a precedent on the part of the General Government, as all know, the Government taxes all distilled alcoholic spirits, and many hundreds of millions of dollars have in the last twenty-five years been paid into the United States Treasury as such tax. But suppose some mountaineer locates his still at the head of some sequestered hollow in the mountains, and, in order to have quiet that he may do his work well, observes the necessary secrecy to prevent being disturbed by revenue officers, and after he has perfected some good fruit brandy or corn whisky, and in his anxiety to minister to the thirst and wants of his fellow-men, he puts some of this on the market, forgetting to go by and see the revenue collector. [Laughter.]

Now, if such things have happened, then the logic that demands the refunding of the direct tax would require that all the money collected on whisky or brandy under the internal-revenue laws should be refunded in order to equalize those who have paid with those who have not. No, sir; there are almost always some who do not pay their part of a levy of taxes; some who purposely evade it, and some who are unable to pay, but that is no reason why a tax, constitutionally levied and collected of those who do pay, should be returned to them; and if this were a constitutional measure it would be a bad precedent.

Mr. Chairman, many of the gentlemen who have spoken in favor of refunding this tax have referred to the times and conditions under which it was levied and collected—that it was for the purpose of carrying on the war and crushing out the rebellion. We all understand what that is brought in for, but I can not for the life of me see what it has to do with the question. The argument, if it amounts to anything, only goes to show that these gentlemen think it was levied and expended for a proper purpose.

There are but few questions presented in this House but this same argument is made to do duty. I am not going into any discussion of that question. I hope I will be excused to-day from again shaking hands across the "bloody chasm." I have done that until I have corns on my hands [laughter]; nor do I intend to mingle any tears in sentimental poetry over the union of the blue and the gray. This is all very well for a summer pastime, but I find that it does not amount to much for the practical purposes of a campaign or for legislation [laughter]; but I will say here what I have often thought since I have been a member of this body, and that is that the many wrongs, inequalities, hardships, injustices, and oppressions of the unhappy period to which reference is so often made, can never be undone, corrected, or equalized; nor do I believe any good can be accomplished by discussing them.

Take the matter under consideration for an illustration. The people who paid this tax are not many of them the people who would receive the benefits of this measure. The population of the States that paid it have greatly changed by deaths, births, and removals. Many of those who paid their taxes in the States that did pay have removed to States that did not pay, and vice versa; so you see this proposition could not secure equality.

Many of those who suffered most by what happened then have passed away, and others are fast going the same road. I, therefore, for one, am in favor of "spitting on the slate" and rubbing out. Let us as far as possible forget all that is unpleasant or irritating in the past, and devote ourselves more to the present and the hopeful future.

But, Mr. Chairman, if we are going into the business of righting the wrongs of the past, and if in order to right one of those wrongs you must return a tax that was properly collected, simply because it was not all collected, then I want to call your attention for a few moments to the cotton tax; that, I think, I can demonstrate was wrongfully and unjustly collected.

It seems to me that when the constitutionality of this tax was brought in question before the Supreme Court of the United States soon after the war, when the prejudices against the section on which it fell were at their height, the fact that that court was equally divided on the question of its constitutionality, that four out of eight of the judges were of the opinion that it was an unconstitutional tax, would be enough at least to give our friends, who now contend for its constitutionality, pause; and to show that the arguments against its constitutionality are not frivolous or far-fetched.

But whether it was against the letter of the Constitution or not, I do not believe any fair-minded man can read the debates that preceded the adoption of the Constitution without coming, as I have done, to the conclusion that it was clearly against the spirit of that sacred instrument. There was no portion of the Constitution that provoked more debate or was sought to be guarded with more jealous care than that portion relating to the taxing power of the General Government; and the fear that unequal taxation or such as might bear more heavily on one section of the country than another seems to have received the special attention of the authors of that instrument, and we are informed that those who represented the agricultural States were specially anxious on this subject, and when objection was made that such unequal burdens might be put upon some States or sections under the Constitution, Mr. Alexander Hamilton, replying to such objections, said:

> Where is the difficulty? Where is evil? They never can oppress a particular State by unequal impositions, because the Constitution has provided a fixed ratio, an uniform rule by which this must be regulated.

And Mr. Madison, the great expounder of the Constitution, in answer to the suggestion that States which had slaves and made tobacco might be taxed while others which had them not might escape, denied positively that such a thing could happen. He said:

> On the contrary, there is a proportion to be laid on each State according to its population. This is a constitutional scale which is an insuperable bar against disproportion, and ought to satisfy all reasonable minds.

Cotton was not mentioned in that debate as one of the products of a certain section that might be unjustly dealt with, but it was because we then produced but little, if any, of it; but if we had then had the "cotton States" it would doubtless have figured in that debate.

There are many others who took part in that debate who might be quoted, but this is sufficient to show what was then understood by the framers of the Constitution. Now, it is no answer to the objection to this measure to say that the law was uniform and applied to every State in the Union. The fact remains that it was a tax on the production of cotton, and that cotton is only produced in the South. The terms of the law may be uniform, but its application and effect were of necessity confined to the Southern States. Nor does the fact that a small amount of this tax was paid in Northern States alter the case at all, for wherever and whenever cotton was raised and sold after the passage of this law, it was sold with the burden of the tax upon it, and sold by the producer for its market price, less the tax if the same had not been paid.

It was not, therefore, a tax equal or uniform in its effect, and, as has been said, it was the first and only instance in which this Government has ever levied a tax on a raw product of agriculture; and it levied and collected this at a time that the section that paid it was without representation in Congress. The tables read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], showing that some of the States of the Union paid largely more taxes into the Treasury under the internal-revenue system than others, do not affect or answer this argument at all, for those were taxes paid on manufactured articles that he shows were in reality paid at last by the consumers, who are scattered over all the States, and bear no analogy to the cotton tax.

Mr. Chairman, as hard as it is to surprise me after my experience here, I must confess I was surprised at the position assumed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], that the tax on cotton was a tax on the consumer, and not on the producer. Sir, when I see two such great leaders in the Republican party, two members of Congress contending on this floor that a duty on imports is not a tax on the consumer, but that a tax on raw materials in the hands of the producer is a tax on consumption and not on production, I can readily see how it was we were not able to succeed in our late "educational campaign" in a few short months. [Applause on the Democratic side, and great laughter.]

The tax was a charge on the cotton in the hands of the man who produced it, and had to be paid. Now, will some gentleman please inform me how the tax added anything to its value? The producer had it to pay? Where was the price enhanced by the tax? The price of cotton is not fixed in this country; it is fixed in the markets of the world, the great center of the cotton market being Liverpool. The price is regulated by just two things, supply and demand and the manipulation of speculation. The purchaser in Liverpool or in New York does not pay one cent more for it because it has paid a tax. Do you not see that if we could tax cotton in Mississippi, and then make the consumer pay the tax, we would resort to this scheme to raise our revenue, and make outside countries pay all taxes?

Now, with import duties just the reverse is true; the price of the article imported is fixed in open market abroad, but in order to sell it here the importer must pay in addition to the price it costs him abroad the import duty to get it in here, and this he adds to the price and makes the consumer pay it. I have hopes of these gentlemen; they are learning. They have learned that one sort of tax comes out of the consumer and one out of the producer; when they learn which is which they will be all right. They only missed it in which tax it was that came out of the consumer.

Now, I have always regarded the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] as a tolerably honest though a muchly misguided man. [Laughter.] He expressed great doubt about the propriety of refunding the direct tax, but said he would vote for it in obedience to the wishes of his constituents; but said he would vote against refunding the cotton tax, regardless of its constitutionality, because it came out of the consumers and could not be returned.

Now, I think I have convinced him that he is misguided. I hope he will convince me by this vote that he is honest. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to inform this House that I am an expert on the question of the cotton tax. I know more about it than any of the statisticians from whom gentlemen have gotten their figures. I was one of the leaders in the movement that produced the cotton that paid that tax. [Laughter.] I was the conductor that pulled the bell-cord over an old army mule that helped to make that cotton. [Laughter.] I hoed the lead row in one of the cotton-fields of the South.

I know all about the operation of that tax. Gentlemen say that the records show that cotton was much higher while the tax was in force than ever before or since. I think I have already shown that the tax did not make it higher. The cotton that was on hand at the close of the war had generally found its way into the hands of speculators and did the people who needed it most but little good. That what was produced afterwards, on which this tax fell most harshly and unjustly, was not produced at a profit, farming wrecks of that period will demonstrate. I remember particularly about the crops of 1866 and 1867. Eighteen hundred and sixty-six was a very wet year and a most disastrous year to the cotton-planters. The crop was very small and but few farmers made expenses.

In 1867 the farmers expected good prices and made their calculations accordingly, and I remember distinctly that most all of the cotton that year passed out of the hands of the producer at very unremunerative prices. It was sold by the producers largely at from 9 to 12 cents per pound. It is true that later in the season, when most of it had left the hands of the men who made it and paid the tax, it went up to as high as 28 cents per pound, but the tax-payers did not get the benefit of this advance.

There is another thing I wish to inform you: there are over $68,000,000 of that cotton tax in the United States Treasury, and I doubt if much more than half that was collected from the people ever found its way into the Treasury. More than $8,000,000 of that in the Treasury was collected from the people of Mississippi, and I know that the revenue officers stole a large portion of what was paid by the people of my State, and the United States Treasury never got it.

Mr. Chairman, I will not attempt to describe the desolation that met the Confederate soldier on his return home after the war. The desolate homes, desolate farms, the wasted fortunes, and the roofs that "let in the sunshine and the rain," have all been so often and so pathetically described in poetry, painting, and song, that I shall not attempt it here. Nor is it my purpose to argue and contend with you gentlemen about the causes that had taken them away from their homes.

For the purposes of this argument you can call it their "crime," their "sin," or their "folly." Do not understand me as speaking of this desolation for the purpose of blaming or censuring anybody for it. I am not after getting up a discussion as to what was right or wrong about that. I know war is war, but what I do want to illustrate to you is that it was a "condition and not a theory that confronted us." [Great laughter.]

If you could have seen the horses and tools with which we had to go to work! The most of our horses were branded "I. C." Now, I do not expect the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KERR] knows what an I. C. horse is.

Mr. KERR. I do not.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I. C. means inspected and condemned. They were army horses that had been condemned as no longer fit for service, and were branded I. C. so that private individuals could own them.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. Although they could not see at all. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. No; a great many of them did not see at all, as the gentleman from Georgia aptly suggests.

With such stock as this, worn-out plows and hoes, amid all these cheerless surroundings, the poor Confederate soldier set to work to make the cotton that was burdened with this tax and that has from that day to this contributed so much to your national prosperity. I hope I may be pardoned if I lay aside my usual modesty [laughter] and indulge in some personal reminiscences pertaining to these hard times. I do not like to speak of myself, but I do sometimes overcome my well-known modesty in order "to point a moral or adorn a tale." [Renewed laughter.]

When I went home and went to making cotton I must admit that I enjoyed some advantages over many of my comrades in my neighborhood. My brother, older than I, was a shifty man and a good trader, and in some trade he had come in possession of a box of paper collars. [Laughter.] He was always kind to me, and he gave me three of them; he did not charge me, of course. These collars enabled me to dress better than most of the boys [laughter], and they looked very nice on my homespun shirt.

You know you can make a paper collar go a good ways by being careful and turning it when one side becomes discolored [laughter]. So I made these last a good while and was somewhat envied by those who were less fortunate; but it was my great desire to be able out of my first cotton crop to purchase me a black coat. Now, to show you how the hopes and aspirations of some of our best young men were blasted [laughter], when I sold my cotton and had to pay 3 cents a pound tax on it, I was not able to buy the coat, so it forced me to borrow one to use on Christmas occasions. This caused a coolness for several years between the friend from whom I borrowed and myself. [Laughter.] You see, a crowd of us threw in and bought a bunch of fire-crackers, and it resulted in burning a small hole in the coat, and being an accommodation, Bailee, my friend, thought I did not use ordinary diligence to prevent the injury. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, jesting aside, I shall at the proper time offer an amendment to this bill to return the cotton tax to the States whose people paid it, to be by them used as an educational fund and dedicated alone to educational purposes. I am opposed to the effort to return it to the individuals who paid it, because I know this is impracticable.

It is true there are some large planters who paid the tax who have their receipts, and there are probably some other receipts that are held by speculators or syndicates, who got them up in the hope of some day collecting them; but the great mass of the poor toiling people, both white and black, who produced this cotton, have no receipts, and I am opposed to doing the very partial justice that could be done by returning the money to the individuals unless justice can be done to those who stand most in need of it. I think this could be better accomplished by devoting the money to educational purposes in the South. The children of the parties who paid it would get more of the benefit of it in this way than any other, and beside it might help to solve a great problem with us.

In our recent tariff discussion here gentlemen on the other side were constantly taunting us of the South with our poverty and with the great wealth of the North, and they sometimes talked about the number of illiterates at the South. Now, gentlemen, I have been in the North and I know it is rich and powerful; I know as compared with the North we are poor indeed.

You of the North get nearly all the eighty-odd millions paid for pensions, you get almost all the benefits of protection, you get enormous amounts from our section in interest and dividends. Now I appeal to you, if you are going into the tax-refunding business, to do a simple act of justice to us and give us back what went into the Treasury, of this cotton tax, for the purpose of educating the children of the poor of the South. You claim to be anxious about the illiteracy in that section; here is your chance to remedy it by a simple act of justice.

I think I have shown this was an unjust tax, and I am sure that gentlemen on the other side who have had so much to say about the magnanimity of the General Government in its treatment toward us after the war will not attempt to justify the imposition of this tax on a particular section as a legislative punishment for our part in the war. Come up now, gentlemen, and show your good feeling for us.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I ask that the time of the gentleman from Mississippi be extended by unanimous consent.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Of course we have no objection to an extension of the time, but it must come out of the time allotted to that side.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. If I may be recognized now, I will yield to the gentleman from Mississippi any length of time he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia has thirty minutes.

Mr. CASWELL. I simply call attention to the agreement heretofore made, that the time is to be equally divided upon this question during each day that the discussion runs.

Mr. TURNER, of Georgia. I will yield from my own time to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. There are some other things I desire to say, but I can have an opportunity under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SENEY. Mr. Chairman, the legislation proposed by the bill now before the House can not be intelligently understood unless we have in mind the condition of the country at the time this direct tax was levied and in part paid. We were then in the midst of a great civil war, and to maintain the Union side in that struggle vast sums of money were required. The public Treasury was empty and the public credit was low. The revenues of the Government, sufficient in peace, were insufficient in war. Bonds were made, paper money issued, duties on imports increased, internal taxes imposed, and a direct tax was levied. This direct tax, amounting to $20,000,000 a year, was levied in August, 1861, and apportioned to the States and the Territories and the District of Columbia, as follows:

States and Territories.	Amount.	States and Territories.	Amount.
Alabama	$529,313.33	Nebraska	$19,312.00
Arkansas	261,886.00	Nevada	4,592.67
California	254,538.67	New Hampshire	218,406.67
Colorado	22,905.33	New Jersey	450,134.00
Connecticut	308,214.00	New Mexico	62,648.00
Dakota	3,241.33	New York	2,603,918.67
Delaware	74,683.33	North Carolina	576,194.67
District of Columbia	49,437.33	Ohio	1,567,089.33
Florida	77,522.67	Oregon	35,140.67
Georgia	584,367.33	Pennsylvania	1,946,719.33
Illinois	1,146,551.33	Rhode Island	116,963.67
Indiana	901,875.33	South Carolina	363,570.67
Iowa	452,088.00	Tennessee	669,498.00
Kansas	71,743.33	Texas	353,106.67
Kentucky	713,696.33	Utah	25,982.00
Louisiana	385,886.67	Vermont	211,068.00
Maine	429,826.00	Virginia	729,071.02
Maryland	436,823.33	West Virginia	208,479.65
Massachusetts	824,581.33	Washington	7,775.33
Michigan	501,763.33	Wisconsin	519,688.67
Minnesota	108,524.00
Mississippi	413,084.67	Total	20,000,000.00
Missouri	761,127.33

Most of the States assumed the payment of their shares of this tax, and for so doing the law provided a discount of 15 per cent. It will be observed that the law required the payment of $20,000,000 each year; but it is to be remarked that no payments or collections were made, except for the year ending in August, 1862. It is to be remarked, also, that the law has no provisions respecting the time it shall continue in force, nor has the law, to my knowledge, been repealed.

At the Treasury Department the books show that $17,359,685.51 of this tax is paid and $2,640,314.49 thereof is unpaid. These books show also that twenty-seven States, two Territories, and the District of Columbia paid in full, and that eleven States and two Territories are delinquent. The Territory of Utah paid nothing and the Territory of Washington owes nearly one-half of her tax. Colorado is in arrears. Alabama owes $511,028, having paid $18,285. Arkansas paid about 60 per cent. and owes 40 per cent. Florida paid less than $5,000 on her tax of $77,522. Georgia paid $117,982 and owes $466,384. From Louisiana $71,385 is due. The State of Mississippi paid $111,038 and owes $302,046. North Carolina paid $377,452 and South Carolina $222,396, and the former still owes $198,742 and the latter $141,174. Texas paid $180,841 and owes $174,265. Tennessee paid $392,004 and still owes $277,493; and Virginia paid $442,408 and owes $286,662.

Mr. Chiarman, with this condition of the direct-tax account there is great discontent. The eleven non-paying States and two non-paying Territories and their 13,209,325 people are apparently satisfied, but the twenty-seven paying States and two paying Territories and the District of Columbia and their 36,813,460 people are dissatisfied. The tax-paying States do not complain of the law under which this direct tax was levied, but they do complain of the manner in which the law has been executed. The fact is before us that the administration of this law has not been uniform. Against twenty-seven States the law has been enforced and against eleven States it has not been enforced.

One State has paid less than 4 per cent. of her tax, another State less than 7 per cent., another about 20 per cent., another 27 per cent., two States less than 33 per cent. each, one about 52 per cent., two 61 per cent. each, while from all of the other States full payment was exacted. Had this law been executed differently these inequalities would not exist, and that they do exist is proof that great injustice has been done. The fact that some of the States have paid their respective shares of this tax and other States have not suggests that some legislation is needed to make equal the burdens imposed by the direct-tax law of 1861. Whether or not Congress, at this late day, ought to compel the delinquent States to pay what they still owe of this direct tax is a question which ought to be thoughtfully considered.

These tax debts, for obvious reasons, ought to be either collected or released, and what is to be done in this respect ought to be done now. If we were to insist on their collection, the delinquent States could not in fairness complain, nor could they of right complain if, to the sums they ought to have paid twenty-six years ago, interest be added from then until payment is made. It is safe to assume that no part of these delinquent taxes will be voluntarily paid, and for several reasons their payment ought not to be enforced.

Twice did Congress suspend the collection against the non-paying States; the first time in July, 1866, until January 1, 1868, and again in July, 1868, until January 1, 1869, and since the last suspension, now twenty years ago, nothing has been done upon the part of the Government to compel either of the non-paying States to make good its deficiency. Indeed it would seem that all purpose to collect these arrearages was long ago abandoned by the Treasury Department, and this policy, whether it be wrong or be right, appears to have had the favor of Congress, if not the approval of the people.

Again, the delinquent States were greatly impoverished by the war, and to exact from them at this time two and a half million dollars would be no inconsiderable hardship. Then, again, the Government is not in need of money unless it be to make larger the large idle surplus now in the Treasury. While there may be no intention at this time to collect these unpaid taxes, yet the obligation to pay them is in full force; and unless it be otherwise enacted it is possible, if not probable, that their payment may be enforced at some future day. The intention of which we speak, as long as it exists, is perhaps as an effectual release from the payment of what is due as any law we might pass for that purpose. Still, in the absence of a statute remitting these debts, the questions before us to-day will remain open, and as the years come and go be more and more difficult to close.

Sir, the equalization of the burdens imposed by the direct-tax law of 1861 ought not to be longer delayed. The plan of equalization proposed by the bill now under consideration seems to be equitable and just, and no reason occurs to me at this time why it should not have a cordial support.

The bill, it will be noticed, proposes to refund all of the direct tax paid, and it proposes also to remit all that is unpaid. This is equitable, this is just.

If it were proposed to refund what has been paid without remitting what is unpaid, or if it were proposed to remit what is due without paying back what has been paid, then the bill would be manifestly inequitable and unjust and would have no favor at my hands. To the eleven delinquent States and to the two delinquent Territories this bill is a generous measure. It is generous because it releases them from the payment of a large sum of money which they owe to the Government, and which the Government, if so disposed, could compel them to pay.

The bill is just because it proposes to refund what has been paid as well as remit what is unpaid. The seemingly settled purpose of the Government not to collect this delinquent tax creates an obligation, equitable at least, to refund all taxes paid, and to this obligation we ought not to be indifferent. This controversy is between States having equal claims to legislative regard. Upon the basis of perfect equality all existing differences may be readily and satisfactorily adjusted. If we can put the States upon an equal footing respecting this direct tax our whole duty is done. This bill if enacted into a law will place each and every State where it stood in 1861, when this direct tax was levied. As every court in our country treats copartners or the members of a corporation where assessments are made to promote a common interest and some are paid and some are not paid, so let us treat the States in legislating respecting these paid and unpaid tax levies.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this measure is grossly misrepresented to the people. In the newspapers and at political gatherings it is said that this bill is a mere raid by the so-called loyal States upon the Treasury of the United States.

Read the bill; read also the law imposing the tax, and then examine the direct-tax account and it will be seen that the so-called disloyal States will receive their due proportion of the money. The loyal States, including Delaware, Kentucky, Maryland, and Missouri, paid $15,022,773 of this tax, and therefore they would be entitled to receive this sum. The disloyal States paid $2,336,911 and would get back this sum, and in addition would be released from their existing obligation to pay $2,305,727. In other words, to the disloyal States the bill, if it becomes a law, has a value of $4,642,638, and if twenty-seven years' interest be added to their unpaid tax, then the value is $6,747,915, and to the loyal States the value is $15,022,773.

These facts show plainly that the eleven disloyal States have more to get out of this so-called scheme than the twenty-seven loyal States.

It is true, sir, that this bill if it becomes a law will take from the Treasury surplus $17,359,685.51, but it will be observed that this money is not to be wasted or squandered or go into individual or corporate hands, for the bill directs that it be paid to the States, and by the States it will be used in the interests of their tax-paying people.

The money this bill appropriates belongs to the people, and the sooner it is legislated out of the Treasury and into their pockets the better it will be for the Government, and better, too, will be the condition of the country. This money the people need, and for it the Government has no use. In the Treasury at Washington it does harm rather than good, while in the different State treasuries it will help in no small degree to lighten the tax burdens of the people. The State of Ohio paid $1,332,025.98 of this direct tax, and if this sum be paid back it will go into her treasury and thus directly benefit all of her people.

The direct tax paid by other States, if returned, will go into their treasuries and thus benefit all who pay taxes under their laws. Refunding to the States what they paid to the Government as a direct tax during the war will directly or indirectly benefit each and every one of our people. Is it wrong to return to the States for the use of their people money which the Government has but does not need? Fifty-two years ago the Treasury had idle money in its vaults. Through the States it was returned to the people, and the law under which this was done had the approval of President Jackson. Was Andrew Jackson a Treasury raider, or was he what history tells us, a bold and determined champion of the rights of the people?

The raising of revenue by a direct tax is in no particular favor with the American people. While the Constitution provides for laying such a tax, it is worthy of remark that but twice in our history have direct taxes been levied. In 1812 Congress laid a direct tax, and again in 1861. These years are remembered as years of war. When we are at peace, at peace with ourselves and the rest of the world, other methods for raising revenue are employed. A levy of a direct tax in war, and for war purposes only, has every appearance of a compulsory loan. This tax, it will be remembered, was not collected from the people, but the amount of the tax, less 15 per cent., the loyal States paid to the Government. Were these payments advances? Ohio laid no tax upon her people to pay her share of the direct-tax levy. By a pledge of her credit she had raised money and used it in putting her sons into the Union Army until her advances for the Government footed up in the millions.

From Ohio's account against the Government for these advances an amount equal to the amount of her direct tax was taken and put to her credit. Is Ohio raiding on the Treasury in asking that what she thus advanced to the Government be paid back?

Mr. Chairman it, will be remembered that this bill passed the Senate at the last session after a brief debate and with only ten opposing votes. When the bill reached the House in April last it met with an opposition which resulted in what is known to parliamentary bodies as a deadlock, and this deadlock continued for ten consecutive days. During this period it was quite apparent that the House by more than a two-thirds majority favored the bill, but the small minority opposing it succeeded by divers and sundry parliamentary maneuvers in preventing its passage; and, strange to say, Representatives from the non-paying States led in these revolutionary movements.

Upon what ground Virginia objects to reducing her debt $286,662, or to opening her empty treasury to receive $442,408, we are wholly uninformed. We know well that if that old commonwealth had more money and less debt far greater would be her prosperity. If there are any reasons why Tennessee, North Carolina, Georgia, and Mississippi are unwilling to be discharged from what they owe the Government, aggregating $1,244,665, to say nothing of twenty-seven years' interest upon this sum, or to receiving what this bill proposes to pay them, $998,476, they have not been stated in the course of this debate. And the State of Alabama, why does her opposition to refunding and remitting this direct tax have such a determined and desperate form?

Sir, we can not forget that this direct tax was levied for the defense of the Government against armed efforts to destroy it. To the State of Alabama the Government appealed for help. What help did Alabama give? The direct-tax roll says $18,285.03—a sum less than that paid by either of the five counties composing my Congressional district—a sum less than that paid by either of the other eighty-three counties in Ohio with possibly three exceptions. But Alabama has a right to oppose this bill, and to oppose it for the reason stated by one of her Representatives on this floor, that it is a $17,000,000 raid on the Treasury, and that Representative has a right also to ask the House to support his two amendments to the bill, which propose two raids on the Treasury, one for $68,000,000 and the other for $10,000,000, and in which Alabama's interest, according to the gentleman's statement, is $10,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, in the course of this debate much has been said about the Constitution of the United States, but no more, perhaps, than is said about that instrument in most of the debates of this body. The Constitution, for mere talking purposes, is a great favorite, not only in the House, but in the Senate. As a rule, whenever a measure of importance is before us we are reminded by some one that the Constitution is in the way of making it a valid law. In construing the fundamental law of the Government all law-makers feel that they are at home. In the country debating societies the same feeling is to be seen. It must be that some debate on the Constitution at a country schoolhouse, or it may be in Congress, was in the mind of him who wrote:

> If Webster from his grave
> Could to this place repair
> And hear the Constitution thus explained,
> Great God, how he would swear!

Sir, the enemies of this bill tell us that Congress has no constitutional power to make it a law. Point out, say the honorable gentlemen, the clause of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to remit or refund a tax legally laid. We read in the Constitution that Congress has sole power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States. From this clause alone it is clear that the taxing power of the Government is vested in its legislative department, and therefore it is that over the subject of taxation, from first to last, the Congress of the United States has exclusive, if not absolute, power.

If this be the power of Congress respecting taxation, it necessarily follows that Congress has the same power to remit or to refund a tax that it has to lay and collect it. If Congress can not remit a tax or refund a tax, then it has not either exclusive or absolute power over the subject of taxation. If the power to remit or refund a tax be not in Congress, then it has no existence. What an oversight upon the part of the Constitution-makers, and what an opportunity for Constitution-amenders. The power to refund or remit a tax is a law-making power. Upon the well-settled principle that the less is in the greater, the power to remit and refund is in the power to lay and collect. The power to remit or refund is a part of the power to lay and collect. From the express power to lay and collect the power to refund and remit is necessarily implied. The power to remit or refund a tax is but an incident to the power to lay and collect it.

From whence comes the power of Congress to suspend the collection of a tax if not from the same clause of the Constitution which authorizes it to be laid and collected? Twice did Congress suspend the collection of this direct tax, and its power so to do no one has questioned. If Congress may suspend the collection of a tax, why may it not refund a collection or remit what is not collected? The direct-tax law of 1861 is still upon the statute-book, and therefore its force at this time is the same that it was on the day it was enacted. Unquestionably Congress has power to repeal the law, and if this were done, what would be the effect of the repeal upon the uncollected portions of this direct tax? In my judgment, the repeal of the law would remit every dollar and every cent.

Then, upon the question of remitting the unpaid part of this tax it is plain that Congress has power so to do, either by a law remitting the tax or by repealing the law levying the tax. What would be the effect upon the collected portions of this direct tax if the law imposing the tax was repealed, presents a question more difficult to determine. While it may be that the repeal of the law would not place the Government under a legal obligation to refund what it received while the law was in force, yet, having repealed the law and thereby remitted what is unpaid, in good conscience and just judgment it could not retain what had been paid.

But we are told by those opposing this bill that in the courts of the country a tax legally levied and voluntarily paid can not be recovered back, and therefore they argue that a tax thus levied and paid can not be refunded by Congress. That the judicial power of the Government can give no relief in such a case is no reason why the relief is not to be had elsewhere. The courts may relieve against an illegal tax, but against a legal tax relief must come from the power imposing it. In the one case the power is in the courts, and in the other case the power is in Congress. The Congress, as well as the courts, may relieve against an illegal tax before or after it is paid. In refunding a tax because it was illegally assessed, or for other cause, or for no cause at all, Congress exercises taxing power, and in so doing neither the executive nor judicial power can, of right, interfere.

But the more active opponents of this measure give us reason to believe that they are not sincere when they say Congress has no constitutional power to make it a law. Their two amendments to the bill show their purpose to get out of the Treasury what are known as the proceeds of property captured from the enemy during the war, amounting to $10,000,000, and what is known as the cotton tax, amounting to $68,000,000. In effect these gentlemen say to the friends of this bill, "Vote for our amendments and we will change our views and believe as you believe, that there is power in the Congress to remit and refund a legal tax, and we will so vote." The time at my command does not permit a discussion of the validity or the invalidity of the cotton tax, or the propriety of voting the amount of the tax out of the Treasury. At some other time, if the opportunity offers, my views upon this subject may be presented to the House.

Another objection made to this bill is that if this tax be refunded now it will not reach the hands of those who paid it twenty-seven years ago. So far as twenty-seven States are concerned the money will go back to the same place it was paid out in 1861. The sum of $15,022,773 which these States paid as their direct tax was in 1861 in their State treasuries for State purposes, and for the same purposes it is proposed by this bill to put back an equal amount in 1888.

The people of 1861 made the public debt, yet the people of 1888 are obligated for its payment. We appropriate money for purposes which had no existence at the time the money was paid into the Treasury. The surplus revenue distributed to the States in 1836 was money which had been collected from the people in former years. Duties on imports are now and then refunded and in some instances years after their payment. The duty is paid by the importer, but he gets the duty back when he sells the import, so that he is not out a penny, but in case the duty or a part of it is refunded the importer gets it, and puts it low down in his pocket, for it is his clear gain.

Less than five years ago duties were levied upon a heavy importation of silk goods. The importer thought the duty excessive and unauthorized, but he paid it under protest. He, however, was not out a cent, for he got back the duty he paid when he sold the goods to the jobber. The importer sued for the excess, recovered it, and with the money he is importing more silk. This case was heard of frequently in the late political campaign. Of this case the opponents of this bill, if consistent, must say that the excessive part of the duty ought not to be refunded because the importer, instead of those who in the end wear out his goods, gets the money.

Mr. Chairman, no wrong will be done if we remit and refund this direct tax. The Constitution will not be violated, nor will any statute law be broken. This measure carries benefits for the whole people, and it is their interests that our legislation ought to promote. It is to be hoped, sir, hoped confidently, that neither the jealousies of sections nor the memories of the past will be in the way of this House being generous to the erring and just to those who did not go astray.

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is regulated by the agreement.

Mr. OATES. The extension can not be had under the agreement, because the debate is limited. The side on which the gentleman is speaking can, of course, yield him time.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is controlling the time on that side.

Mr. SENEY. I might assert my rights under the rules of the House as a member of the Judiciary Committee and occupy an hour, but I desired only a few moments longer to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes of my time.

Mr. SENEY resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, this subject of the distribution of public moneys or property of the Government among the States is by no means a new one. It has slumbered for fifty years, but it is again revived when, as in 1835 and 1836, there is a surplus of money in the Treasury, and attention is directed to plans for expending it without a severe reduction of the public taxes. From 1832 to 1837 this subject of distribution was more or less under consideration in both Houses of Congress.

It was proposed to distribute the public lands among the States. It was more frequently proposed to distribute their proceeds, either the gross amount received by the Treasury or the net amount after deducting the cost of survey and sale, and a bill passed both Houses distributing the proceeds among the several States and Territories in proportion to their representative population. Passing at the end of a session of Congress, the President of the United States had not an opportunity to examine it. He retained the bill, and was greatly abused for what was denominated a "pocket veto." At the commencement of the next session he sent in a message, which I could desire that every gentleman on this floor had read, in which he met this question of distribution and treated it in a masterly manner.

There is the document in the collection of Presidential vetoes lying before me, although it was not strictly a veto; but all gentlemen can there find and read it, a message transmitted to the two Houses of Congress on the 5th of December, 1833.

Subsequently it was proposed instead of distributing the proceeds of the public lands, that the money should be deposited with the several States, as you would deposit money in a bank, to be drawn for as the public expenditure might require, upon order of the Secretary of the Treasury. That bill on its face made the several State treasuries places of deposit for the public money subject to the order of the financial officer of this Government. In that form the bill became a law—the deposit act as I have stated it to be.

The public-land moneys were to be paid over to the State in five installments under that act at recurring periods of time. Three of those installments were paid, but when the fourth payment fell due Congress interposed and arrested its payment, providing that the payment should be deferred for upwards of a year, and provided that the fund might be recalled only at the pleasure of Congress instead of by the Secretary of the Treasury—requiring an act of the law-making power to withdraw the money from the States instead of the action of the Secretary of the Treasury as before.

The fourth installment was never paid, nor was the fifth; and the power of Congress to withdraw this money from the States—that is, to order it to be paid over for public, national, purposes—that power has never been exerted. Over fifty years have passed, and not a dollar has been recalled, even in the utmost stress of public necessity during the war of the rebellion. No State has been called upon for its deposit fund, to wit, the first three installments which had been paid to it. Now, about 1837 it was also proposed that this Government in another form should use the public moneys for State purposes; that it should assume the debts of the several States, mostly incurred for purposes of public improvement. That was proposed, and a resolution hostile to it in the Senate, and denouncing it as unauthorized by the Constitution and of a corrupt nature, passed by a vote of only 24 to 17, so rampant had become the appetite for public money created in the States at a time when they were engaged in public improvements and other matters involving an extraordinary outlay.

Public opinion had so grown and strengthened in this direction of calling upon this Government to pay the State debts out of the public money that there were 17 votes against 24 in the Senate. But times of disaster came, and the firm position of President Jackson had called attention to this great subject. It was considered, and from that time to this, or until a year since, as far as my information extends, nobody has proposed to deplete the Treasury of the United States to any extent to supply the State treasuries with public moneys.

The deposit act of 1836 proved to be of a mischievous nature by its effects. It went out like a political pestilence into every portion of our country, and I speak advisedly. A large part of the $40,000,000 of State debt heaped up in my own State was produced by that deposit—by a moderate amount of public money not raised by State taxation, but received by my State from the United States. The Legislature broke loose, became wild, and not only spent that money, but heaped up millions afterwards under the impetus it had produced. That was the result of the deposit act upon Pennsylvania in 1836 and subsequent years; and I for one, as a representative of that great State, protest against throwing this two millions of money into the Legislature of that State, to embarrass and perhaps to debauch its action.

Instead of desiring my State to receive its proportion of this money I deprecate its reception, and, as far as my voice goes, will oppose it. I think it was in Ohio, the State from which the able gentleman comes who has just addressed the committee [Mr. SENEY], that the money was loaned out to the counties by the Legislature; dribbled out for this and that local purpose. Here are gentlemen on this floor from Kentucky who can tell you, going back to that former time, how the act operated in that State—mischievously and badly. Public opinion was formed strongly and decidedly against that act all over the United States, and the men who proposed it, the men who started it, instead of becoming Presidents or becoming high officials of the Government, were discredited by the results of the act, and I well remember that in 1844 it was one of the main charges that appealed to public opinion and caused the defeat of a candidate for President that he had supported the distribution of United States money among the States and thus supported a dangerous and unconstitutional proceeding.

Now, take my own State at the present time. We have our financial system well established and well understood. While under the laws taxation is authorized by counties and cities for local purposes, the main sources of State revenue are corporation taxes and licenses. You take the great railroads of my State. Their chief offices are located in Philadelphia—the Pennsylvania Railroad, the Reading Railroad, and many others. There are also great corporations located at Pittsburgh. These companies have their lines and improvements throughout the State. We do not tax them locally. The railroad is taxed upon its capital stock and business. Its lines and improvements throughout the State are not taxed for local purposes.

The corporations are taxed where their principal offices are located, and when the State imposes State burdens or State taxation upon them it is paid in Philadelphia, doing justice to the rest of the State. The State government is supported by the great corporations in Philadelphia and a few other points to a great extent. Thus our system works equally—local taxation upon local property and improvements; general taxation in the State upon corporations, in addition to licenses. The money is virtually raised for State outlay, to the general advantage of every locality that escapes contribution.

What does this bill do? It pays these two millions or a little less over to the State of Pennsylvania. What? Relief to corporations that are able to pay and not to the people of my State! It is to relieve the corporations and not the people.

Two years ago a bill adjusting taxation was prepared by a very able commission, was reported to the Legislature, and passed both houses; but from some accident it did not become a law; it was not signed by the president of the senate. Because of that there was some temporary inconvenience. That gave a pretense for argument in favor of getting the money somewhere else. The governor was obliged to curtail some of the appropriations; but all this is past. The Legislature will be in session in three weeks, and the error respecting the bill will be corrected and our tax system go on regularly.

Then there is an alternative; the question is whether this two millions is to relieve the corporations of Pennsylvania from bearing just State burdens or whether the money is to be applied by the Legislature to extraordinary purposes. Well, to what? Nobody knows. No one can foretell what will be done with it if it is not applied to ordinary State purposes in relief of the corporations, unless it is to be applied to hazardous or questionable measures. I do not desire to see the wisdom and integrity of the State Legislature tempted by the acquisition of a large sum of money and a renewal of the experiment of the deposit act of 1836.

Now, sir, in this connection I will ask the Clerk to read a passage describing the results of distribution under the deposit act of 1836, which is found in Benton's Thirty Years' View, volume 1, page 39.

The Clerk read as follows:

This was the end of the distribution schemes which had so long afflicted and disturbed Congress and the country. Those schemes began now to be known by their consequences—evil to those they were intended to benefit, and of no service to those whose popularity they were to augment. To the States the deposit proved to be an evil, in the contentions and combinations to which their disposition gave rise in the General Assemblies—in the objects to which they were applied—and the futility of the help which they afforded.

Popularity hunting, on a national scale, gave birth to the schemes in Congress; the same spirit, on a smaller and local scale, took them up in the States. All sorts of plans were proposed for the employment of the money, and combinations more or less interested, or designing, generally carried the point in the universal scramble. In some States a pro rata division of the money, per capita, was made; and the distributive share of each individual being but a few shillings, was received with contempt by some and rejected with scorn by others. In other States it was divided among the counties, and gave rise to disjointed undertakings of no general benefit. Others, again, were stimulated by the unexpected acquisition of a large sum to engage in large and premature works of internal improvement, embarrassing the State with debt, and commencing works which could not be finished.

Other States, again, looking upon the deposit act as a legitimate fraud to cover an unconstitutional and demoralizing distribution of public money to the people, refused for a long time to receive their proffered dividend, and passed resolutions of censure upon the authors of the act. And thus the whole policy worked out differently from what had been expected. The States and the people were not grateful for the favor; the authors of the act gained no Presidential election by it; and the gratifying fact became evident that the American people were not the degenerate Romans or the volatile Greeks, to be seduced with their own money—to give their votes to men who lavished the public moneys on their wants or their pleasures—in grain to feed them or in shows and games to delight and amuse them.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Chairman, the difficulty and embarrassment of a surplus in the Treasury of the United States are, by this act, to be transferred to and to be felt in the treasuries of the thirty-eight States or governments of States. When you have made that transfer have you abated the evil? Have you discharged the mischief from the United States? On the contrary, will you not have increased it immensely and brought into the discussion an infinite variety of local and selfish interests all over the country with which the subject is not now disturbed, but which will certainly be awakened by the passage of this bill?

But this is a refunding bill, I am told; and I am told also that it is completely covered by a just construction of the tax-power of the Government. Doubtless, sir, you may exonerate citizens or States from the payment of taxes or other dues to this Government. Doubtless, also, even though the money has been paid into the Treasury, if the United States does not need it for the purposes for which it was raised, you may return it, provided you do so equally and justly, to those who have contributed the money. But we have presented here no such question as either of these. We have here this state of facts, and the question arising upon them, namely, that Congress, by the exercise of a constitutional power, in 1861, called for this money from the people of the several States, accepting afterwards, in certain cases, payment by the States themselves, as representing their own people and prepared to meet the quotas imposed upon them.

By constitutional authority you levied this tax. By constitutional power you collected it, or received it into the Treasury. But the case does not stop there. By like constitutional power you expended this money; you applied it to the several constitutional objects to which you were authorized to apply it. The money was expended, and then the powers of Congress regarding the entire transaction were ended and complete. If you can go back now and upon the pretext of doing abstract equity between the different States, restore to certain States this money (a little less than sixteen millions, I believe, with the 15 per cent. for collection deducted), if you can now pay out these $16,000,000 from the Treasury, where does the money come from? Is it the fund received in 1861, and which was expended twenty-seven years ago for public objects? Or is it the money which the present people of the United States, through the channels of Federal taxation, paid into your Treasury in the year 1888?

You take the contributors, the tax-payers, into your Treasury in 1888, and impose upon them the burden of returning to the tax-payers of 1861 moneys then paid and which were constitutionally expended, the benefits of that expenditure having been received and enjoyed by those tax-payers at that time. Is this equality? Is this justice? Is this equity? Is this sensible or even allowable public policy? A new generation has arisen; new forms of taxable property have come into existence. Penniless boys have earned great wealth by industry and ability, and are now contributing their money to the public Treasury—on what principle? That it will be spent for constitutional purposes, to carry on the Government.

Have you any moral right to take their money and go back twenty-seven years and hunt up another class of tax-payers who paid money into the Treasury, and make this payment to them when they at the time got the full advantage of what they paid in the protection of the Government, possibly in the very preservation of our Union? I deny your right to do this upon any principle of equity, justice, or reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCKALEW] has expired.

Mr. OATES. I desire that the gentleman from Pennsylvania may have time enough to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I thank the gentleman, but I will not proceed further.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, had come to no resolution thereon.

ELECTORS OF PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House letters from the Secretary of State, transmitting certified copies of the final ascertainments of the electors for President and Vice-President appointed in the following-named States at the election held in the said States respectively on the 6th day of November, 1888, to wit: New Jersey, Kansas, Alabama, Louisiana, Missouri, Maryland, North Carolina, and Georgia; which were laid on the table, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed.

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE DURING THE REVOLUTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, submitting an estimate of an appropriation to enable Francis Wharton to make searches for diplomatic correspondence of the United States during the American Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FURNITURE FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the chief clerk of that Department of appropriation to supply new public buildings with furniture; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR PUBLIC PRINTING.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Public Printer of an immediate appropriation for public printing for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXCHANGE OF GOVERNMENT PUBLICATIONS WITH CHILI.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a letter from the minister of Chili communicating request of the Chilian Chamber of Deputies for a regular exchange of publications between the legislative bodies of the two countries; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES FOR REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of expenditures for the revenue-cutter service during the fiscal year, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

W. L. PINNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of appropriation to pay W. L. Pinney for services as stenographer in the trial of certain Apache Indians in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF COSTS OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation to pay costs adjudged against A. A. Wilson, United States marshal, District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey of the operations of the survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAGE-STAMPS, ETC., FOR NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimate of an appropriation for postage-stamps and foreign postal-cards for the use of the National Museum for the fiscal year 1890; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OVERPAYMENTS OF INTEREST ON INDIAN TRUST BONDS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the First Comptroller relative to the adjustment of the accounts of the State of Louisiana with the United States in respect to overpayments of interest on State bonds held as Indian trust funds; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL MILITARY AND NATIONAL MUSEUM.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, in response to a resolution of the House calling for information relative to the proposed national military and national museum; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CONTINGENT FUND, POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting reports relative to disbursements of the contingent fund, compensation to employés and time employed, the finances of the Department, contracts other than for carrying the mails, and to postal business in foreign countries; which was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF ELECTRIC WIRES FROM THE SURFACE OF THE STREETS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report by Maj. Charles W. Raymond, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, on the subject of the best method of removing all electric wires from the air or the surface of the streets; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting conclusions of law and of fact in certain spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES R. SHIRLEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of fact by the court in the case of James R. Shirley, administrator, etc., against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report from the clerk of the Court of Claims of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims for the year ended November 30, 1888, with a synopsis of the cases in which they were rendered; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENTAL EXHIBITS, PARIS EXPOSITION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a joint resolution (S. R. 115) authorizing the Departments of the Government to use articles in their possession for exhibition at the Paris exposition of 1889; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] asked by unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill (H. R. 5615) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced agreement to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2254) to increase the pension of Mrs. Ellen M. Grover. Also, that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 779) for the relief of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, in which concurrence was requested.

Also, that, in compliance with the request of the House, a duplicate copy of concurrent resolution to print 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey had been transmitted to the House.

REPRINTING BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. STOCKDALE] asked by unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5615) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua be reprinted, the numbers on file having become exhausted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

DIRECT TAX.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the special order.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by the act of Congress approved August 5, 1861.

Mr. ELLIOTT withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HERBERT withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. GROSVENOR withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, when this measure was before the House last spring I was so strongly opposed to it that I felt justified in engaging in filibustering in order to defeat its passage, while the friends of the measure held so tenaciously to it that it required almost the unanimous action of the Democrats to even defer consideration until after election.

Why did the Republicans so strongly press this bill at that time? Every man in the House knows that it was a part of a well-concerted scheme to defeat tariff legislation and to arouse sectional animosities in order to carry the election, and I believe that this, with other appeals to prejudice and selfishness, was more thoroughly relied upon than an intelligent understanding of the tariff.

The pretext that it is to adjust inequalities between States will not, I think, bear intelligent scrutiny.

Who in this broad land but a partisan will desire to pay out fifteen and a half millions of the people's money from the national Treasury in both an unconstitutional and an unjust way in order to exact indirectly from a part of the country two and a half million dollars when the conditions which have existed since the tax was laid have in a natural way prevented its forcible collection, and even precluded with any degree of magnanimity its payment?

Let us see what the effect of the return of the direct tax would be. In Michigan, for instance, it would return $426,000. The State has about 500,000 voters. So that if this money went directly to the voters it would give about 85 cents to each voter; but as in most of the States, including Michigan, it goes directly to the State treasury, it has the direct effect of saving just so much State taxation, and therefore practically goes only to those who own property. In Michigan some two or three hundred of the largest property-owners would save in State taxation say about $300 each. Yet in most instances these men neither paid any of the tax in 1862, nor have their contributions toward the surplus proposed to be voted out by this bill been but very little larger than the thousands of men in the State who will get nothing.

Is this then either just or wise? I think it will hardly be claimed, and I think it is about time that the members of this House learned that we have a President who will not sanction such legislation, for in his last message he makes use of the following language:

> There should be no scheme accepted as satisfactory, by which the burdens of the people are only apparently removed. Extravagant appropriations of public money with all their demoralizing consequences should not be tolerated, either as a means of relieving the Treasury of its present surplus, or as furnishing a pretext for resisting a proper reduction in tariff rates.

Again he says:

> Existing evils and injustice should be honestly recognized, boldly met, and effectively remedied.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the time has arrived when Congress should agree upon some plan of paying out the surplus, so that the labor of the country may be employed. The inability of honest men who have families dependent upon them for the bare necessities of life to find employment is most sorely threatening the business interests of the country, and even the peace and conscience of every good citizen.

In my judgment the return of the direct tax will not induce the beneficiaries to even spend an extra dollar. It will simply disappear like a stone falling into the water. But if a well-defined plan of internal public improvement should be promptly inaugurated, dealing fairly with all parts of the country, it would prove a source of great relief to the poor first, and would act directly as a check to further business depression. Mr. Chairman, such a great work is not only thoroughly practicable, but is knocking at the door for action. The President in the message above referred to uses the following language.

> A bill, proposed by the Postmaster-General, was introduced at the last session of the Congress, by which a uniform standard in the amount of gross receipts would fix the right of a community to a public building to be erected by the Government for post-office purposes. It was demonstrated that, aside from the public convenience and the promotion of harmony among citizens—invariably disturbed by change of lensings and of site—it was a measure of the highest economy and of sound business judgment. It was found that the Government was paying in rents at the rate of from 7 to 10 per cent. per annum on what the cost of such public buildings would be. A very great advantage resulting from such a law would be the prevention of a large number of bills, constantly introduced for the erection of public buildings at places, and involving expenditures, not justified by public necessity. I trust that this measure will become a law at the present session of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the erection of post-office buildings in the smaller cities and villages, thereby recognizing rights which in the past have been entirely ignored. Who dare deny the right of the smaller towns to appropriations commensurate with their needs? The larger cities are supported by the smaller ones, and the smaller ones are more injured and inconvenienced by the frequent changes of sites than the larger ones. The construction of the buildings would call for American material and American labor, and in all parts of the country. While it would be carried into operation by a Republican administration, I would most cheerfully give it my support.

Mr. Chairman, I can only account for the desire at this time on the part of the Republicans to pass the refund of the direct tax on the basis that they wish to be consistent with their ante-election record. This is not compatible with the welfare of the country I hope they may anticipate somewhat now the responsibilities they must soon assume. [Applause.]

Mr. ENLOE. Mr. Chairman, the proposition to refund the direct tax is neither sustained by law nor by precedent.

It is generally safe to assume that Congress has furnished some precedent for almost any illegal appropriation of public money that may be contemplated, but the nearest approach to a precedent for this bill was the loan of the surplus to the States in 1836. There is all the difference in law between the two propositions that there is between a loan and a gift.

The surplus of 1836 was divided into loans to the States in proportion to the population, so that the distribution of the loan was equitable and just.

The money then in the Treasury was the revenue resulting from taxation, and Congress refused to redistribute it except as a loan to the States on the ground that there was no constitutional authority vested in Congress to distribute the surplus revenue.

The Constitution directs Congress in the appropriation of the revenues by the enumeration of the purposes for which taxes may be collected, and there is no grant of power, expressed or implied, which would warrant the collection of taxes for distribution among the States or the people.

The direct tax was a constitutional tax. It was levied to carry on the war for the suppression of the rebellion. Some of the States and Territories collected the tax from their citizens and paid it into the Federal Treasury, less 15 per cent. reserved for the cost of collection. Certain other States and Territories took advantage of the terms of the act of Congress and assumed and paid the tax, less 15 per cent., in accordance with the terms of the act of Congress. The Southern States were at the time beyond the jurisdiction of the Federal Government so far as the collection of the tax was concerned. They were in the Union for the purposes of taxation, and out of it for the purposes of reconstruction. Wherever the Federal armies had restored the jurisdiction and authority of the Government the tax was collected from individuals or enforced against the lands, often resulting in great hardships and outrageous wrongs.

Only $17,359,685.51 of the twenty millions levied were ever collected. After the war the collection was stopped. From time to time the subject was revived in Congress up to 1868, when by common consent the matter slept. So it stood for nearly twenty years—the act unrepealed, the balances uncollected, the States which had not paid in full standing charged with the unpaid balances. Now, Mr. Chairman, why is it that this Congress is moved to pass this bill? No one will deny that it is never too late to refund money illegally collected; but it is not pretended that this bill is predicated upon the illegality of the tax. Then upon what legal ground does it rest? Will some friend of the measure enlighten the House on this question? I have listened to the arguments of the advocates of this bill, I have examined the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, the repository and source of legal light in this body; and I have listened and looked in vain for precedent or law to justify it.

I think the morals and the law of this case may be summarized in a sentence. It will not be found in the Constitution, but it will be found in the moral code of many people, and it is the maxim which animates more than one measure before this body. I commend it to the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary as a substitute for the report in this case. It is—

> The good old simple plan,
> That he should take who has the power,
> And he should keep who can.

The majority of the committee almost insinuate against the constitutionality of the direct tax, but it is only the shadow of an insinuation. Their report says.

> Direct taxation under the provisions of the Constitution is onerous by reason of the means required to collect it, and bears unequally because it is apportioned among the States according to population without regard to the means of payment.

There is no impeachment of the constitutionality of the tax in that report. It is merely a general complaint against the inequality of direct taxation "under the provisions of the Constitution."

The excuse for the existence of this measure is contained in another sentence of the brief report by the majority of the committee, which alleges that—

> A feeling of injustice in bearing unequally the burdens of the Government has become wide-spread and is increasing.

The inequality of the burdens of the Government is then the only pretext for the existence of this bill.

The friends of the measure stand in the attitude of asking Congress to assume and to exercise the power to correct inequalities in the burdens of the Government. They ask it now only in this particular case, but the rule once established would embrace all inequalities, and to that I am sure I would not object from any selfish motive if it could be made mandatory in the Constitution upon Congress to make such corrections; but I distrust the justice and the integrity of any legislative body acting independently of and in violation of the Constitution.

I take it as a sound proposition that taxes should be uniform, and that the burden should rest equally upon all the people of all the States. I believe that a tax is a burden to be borne, and not a blessing to be sought, though some of our political teachers hold the reverse.

I will admit that a tax collected for a wise public purpose, while it is in one sense a burden, it may prove in its proper use a blessing. Government is a system of burdens and benefits, and regard should be paid to the principle of uniformity in the disbursement as well as in the collection of taxes. If some States pay much more than they receive, and other States receive much more than they pay, the inevitable result must be the impoverishment of the one class and the enrichment of the other.

The complaint which the committee lodges against the operation of the direct tax will also lie against the internal-revenue tax, but the greatest inequality and the grossest injustice of all arise from the operation of our tariff system.

Like much of the legislation of Congress since 1860, it seems to be based upon the idea that the Government must take care of the rich, that God will take care of the poor.

The committee is right in declaring that—

> A feeling of injustice in bearing unequally the burdens of the Government has become wide-spread, and is increasing.

This feeling is not engendered by the quarter-of-a-century-old memories of the inequalities of the direct tax, but it is the outgrowth of existing conditions. It is not seeking the correction of the inequalities of a dead tax, but it is demanding the correction of the inequalities of the tariff system now in operation. The trusts organized behind the protective tariff wall levy tribute at will on the people of the United States. They limit production that they may tax consumption.

God created everything necessary for man's comfort, and created it in such abundance that individual industry under His laws would command enough for individual comfort, but the Republican party has suspended the operation of the divine law, and substituted the monopolistic law of selfishness and greed. The devout citizen who returns thanks to his Creator for the abundance of His gifts has had the scope of his vision so narrowed by Republican legislation that the burden of his prayer must be thanks that He has made the sunlight, the air, and the water in such abundance that no trust can be formed to sell to the people sunlight by the square yard, air by the mouthful, and water by the drop.

Inequality and injustice are written all over the present tariff system, and it is a curious spectacle to see gentlemen ranting over the inequalities of the burden of the direct tax who rejoice in riveting upon the people the unequal burdens of a system unparalleled in the history of iniquitous legislation. The direct-tax bill is a subterfuge and a fraud. It is a false pretense.

Professedly aimed at the inequalities of the burdens of government, it is inspired by the monopolies and trusts, and aimed at the perpetuation of their power to exact tribute from the people.

It is the entering wedge to open up the Treasury surplus for distribution, not upon the principle of equality and justice, but upon the log-rolling and jobbing principle.

The Treasury surplus is a dangerous menace to the power of the trust. That "wide-spread" and "growing," feeling for which the majority of the committee have so much regard must be checked, or monopoly must go. How can it be checked? The inequalities of the burdens must be reduced by an honest revision of our taxing laws, or the Treasury surplus must be thrown to the public whale.

Early in the first session of this Congress we were confronted with this bill. It made its escape from the Committee on Rules and became a privileged question. It was wedged in ahead of the tariff bill. It was used to deadlock the House for the longest period in the history of the Congress.

I did everything in my power to defeat it then, and I will do all that I can honorably do to defeat it now. If I had the power I would veto its passage.

It is not a bill sui generis, but on the contrary it is one of a series to follow it.

It is inspired by the dominant political influence in this Government—the money power—a power which has neither politics nor religion and recognizes no law but the law of increase. It was, in its present organized forms, the creature of Republican legislation, but it has acquired such proportions and such power that it has become the master of the party which fostered it.

The creation of law, it has become the creator of laws. It makes and unmakes Presidents, Cabinets, and law-makers. It rules the interests of the Republic with an iron rod of home manufacture. It has thrown itself into the scales against the public will, and debauched popular government by making the freeman's ballot a commercial commodity.

Under a false and fraudulent pretense of a desire to equalize the burdens of government, it inspires this bill to perpetuate greater inequalities. Of all the series of similar measures, this is given the precedence as the most promising. It appeals to the cupidity of more States and more people. It puts more "pork" in the barrel for everybody, and hence it is pushed to the front. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

GROSVENOR] very properly says that the great principle involved in this bill is a question of dollars and cents.

There is a vast army of unthinking people who care not how the Treasury is filled so that they may see a prospect of individual or local benefit to result from the emptying of it.

The monopoly and the trust demand the refunding of the $17,359,685.51 direct tax because it will deplete the Treasury.

The same power is demanding the passage of the $25,000,000 swamp-land bill for the same reason. It is clamorous for the payment of $30,000,000 more for the French spoliation claims. Though it thrives on ignorance and fattens on corruption, it joins the clamor of the philanthropic Blair bill brigade and demands the payment of $78,000,000 for the centralization of the Government.

With patriotic fervor it lifts its voice with the grand army of Treasury raiders and demands the payment of $250,000,000 for pensions to the dependent relatives of soldiers, and $250,000,000 more for arrearages of pensions.

Under the military talent of organized wealth these measures are formed in the shape of a V, with the direct-tax bill in front to break the columns of tariff reform, empty the Treasury, and substitute a deficit for the existing surplus. I hope that the accomplishment of these iniquitous designs will not lie at the door of this Congress.

Later on I propose to test the sincerity of the professions of the friends of this bill, if given an opportunity to do so.

Early in the first session of the present Congress I presented a bill which has every merit possessed by this bill, or claimed for it, and it is in addition a constitutional measure. I allude to the bill to refund the cotton tax. I have given notice of an amendment, published in the RECORD of last Saturday, which embodies the substance of that bill. It proposes to refund to the States the cotton tax received from them respectively, as shown by the books of the Treasury Department, to be applied, as far as practicable, to the repayment of individuals who actually produced the cotton, and any unclaimed balances to go to the common-school fund.

This tax amounted to $68,072,388.79.

The following table shows the amount of the cotton tax collected from the different States:

Alabama	$10,388,127.12	Mississippi	$8,742,995.93
Arkansas	2,555,638.43	Missouri	592,098.36
California	430.04	New Jersey	3,656.42
Connecticut	193.64	New York	867,942.68
Florida	918,944.98	North Carolina	1,959,704.87
Georgia	11,897,094.98	Ohio	447,127.12
Illinois	379,144.42	Pennsylvania	78,534.06
Indiana	92,727.22	Rhode Island	2,424.73
Iowa	.27	South Carolina	4,172,420.16
Kansas	486.15	Tennessee	7,873,460.71
Kentucky	553,327.45	Texas	5,570,401.25
Louisiana	10,098,501.00	Utah	1,375.34
Maryland	51,349.52	Virginia	825,856.87
Massachusetts	66,679.30

It was a tax on the labor of the South. Owing to the fact that a portion of the cotton crops on hand at the time the tax was levied had passed into the hands of merchants in other States some of the tax was collected from States that do not produce cotton, but if the amounts collected from the cotton-growing States, as shown by the books of the Treasury Department, were refunded it would approximate the justice of the case, though a distribution of this tax to the cotton-producing States on the basis of production as shown by the census of 1870 would be a closer approximation to justice.

The cotton tax stands alone in the history of legislation as a monument of legislative injustice. It was levied on a raw product, the immediate product of the soil, in the hands of the producer. It is a contemptible quibble to say that he did not have to pay the tax until he shipped the cotton, because the producer of cotton is never a manufacturer of cotton, and he was compelled to ship it in order to sell it.

The tax on tobacco is not a parallel case. The tax on tobacco is levied on the manufactured product, which may be made anywhere. The tax on whisky is levied not on the grain, the raw material from which it is made, but it is levied on the manufactured product. Objectionable as these taxes may be they are not obnoxious to Article I, section 8, of the Constitution of the United States, which declares that—

All duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

A tax on oranges, hemp, or rice could not be an uniform tax. Neither could a tax on cotton, which is produced mostly in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia, and to a limited extent in Missouri and Kentucky. Corn would furnish the most uniform basis for a tax of any of the agricultural products, but the idea of taxing it would not be tolerated for a moment. Why make an exception of cotton?

This tax, Mr. Chairman, was not only in conflict with the provision of the Constitution just cited, but there is another clause which should have protected the cotton-planter against such an imposition. I allude to the third prohibitory clause in the Constitution of the United States, which says:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

At the present time more than two-thirds of this product is exported from the United States, and at the time this tax was laid almost the entire crop was exported from the States where it was grown.

These provisions of the Constitution were incorporated by the framers of that instrument for the protection of the people of the different States against the unrestrained exercise of the taxing power by Congress. The requirement of uniformity in laying taxes is a safeguard to prevent combinations on sectional lines or combinations among special interests to so shape revenue legislation as to impose the burdens of Government upon certain States to the exclusion of others.

If the constitutionality of this tax can be sustained, then the Congressional conscience is the repository of the taxing power of the Constitution, and the most destructive power known to civil government is to be exercised according to the self-interest or the caprice of politicians. I hope that this Government has not reached that point of decadence, and God forbid that it ever should.

The reason for this legislation, this dangerous innovation upon all recognized rules of taxation, must be found outside of the Constitution. It was not an unnatural idea for the time of its birth. It was conceived when the States at which it was aimed were engaged in a desperate struggle with the States whose representatives enacted it. It took root in the passions and prejudices that warped the judgments and swayed the minds of men in the midst of civil war. It stands as a constant threat against the right of the people of all the States to have taxes levied with uniformity, and it is a constant menace to the rights and interests of those States whose peculiar products are raised largely or exclusively for export.

It is a standing invitation for the stronger to combine against the weaker to set in motion the destructive machinery of unequal taxation. It is a relic of war legislation that ought to be reconsidered, and restitution be made.

If the circumstances which constitute the equities of the case are to be considered, they furnish very powerful and persuasive reasons why we should restore this tax to those who paid it.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] undertook to read a lecture to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEWART] because he spoke of the matter of equity. Now, if this bill for refunding the direct tax stands on any other ground than that of equity I want to know where he finds the law or the precedents to justify it. Why, sir, no gentleman who has addressed the House has advanced a single legal argument to show that this bill rests upon any other ground than upon the equities growing out of the inequalities of the collection or the tax.

And when we come to deal with all the equities alluded to by the gentleman from Ohio, the people of this country will want to rip up the public credit act of 1869, which changed the contract between the bondholder and the people, adding by that change $500,000,000 to the burdens of the tax-payers; and there are many similar equities in the legislation of the Republican party which they will want to adjust.

I say, sir, that we have the right to present the equities of this case, and if this bill goes through, then the cotton-tax provision should go through with it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to go through with the entire argument on the equities at this time. There are, however, some other things which I wish to say in addition.

The Southern States had been swept by fire and sword. When the bulk of this tax was collected the country from which it came presented a picture of ruin and desolation that would have moved to pity any but the heart of a demon. A brave people had lost in the grandest struggle of the ages, and there was little left to many of them but life and honor. The magnanimous terms tendered by the great leader of the successful armies revived hope and stimulated a brave people to begin the work of rebuilding their wrecked fortunes.

The story of their struggles for citizenship and honest local government is a part of history. The cotton tax was a trifle to the local burdens imposed while they were getting back into the Union under reconstruction, after millions of men and money had been sacrificed to establish the proposition that a State could not secede from the Union. As I have before stated, they were in the Union for the purposes of taxation, and only out of it for the purposes of reconstruction.

Their churches, common schools, universities, colleges, manufacturing industries, and the millions of dollars which their products annually give to the commerce of the world, all bear testimony to their progressive spirit, and emphasize their identity with all that is noblest and best in the Republic.

Even now the illegal cotton tax is but a trifle compared to the inequality of burdens imposed upon them by the operation of existing laws. They pay more than one-third of the taxes for the support of the Government, but when the taxes are distributed again in the shape of legal appropriations they receive only a small percentage of the benefits.

Take the matter of public buildings. The report of Mr. Mahone, submitted to the Senate February 8, 1886, shows that in all the expenditures for public buildings from the foundation of the Government, they received only $13,679,219.60 out of an expenditure of $84,590,191.22. This is only a sample of the whole list of the appropriations for public purposes, and not as strong as might be adduced.

The following table shows the amount expended for public buildings in the States named from March 4, 1789, to March 4, 1885:

Alabama	$640,402.07	South Carolina	$3,337,591.98
Arkansas	309,317.73	Tennessee	1,423,073.62
Florida	234,776.94	Texas	344,973.43
Georgia	500,850.05	Virginia	936,341.53
Louisiana	5,182,249.24
Mississippi	234,859.89	Total	13,679,219.60
North Carolina	482,783.12

Total expenditure in the United States for the same time, $84,590,-191.22.

Equality of burdens and equality of benefits is what we want. Now let us look for a moment to the matter of pensions. The report of the Commissioner of Pensions for 1888 shows that the Government has paid out on this account since the close of the war $963,086,444.72. To this fund the cotton-producing States, whose product was singled out as the subject of unconstitutional taxation, have paid over $320,000,000. That sum represents approximately their part of this burden. Let us see what represents their distributive share. It is less than 6 per cent. of the amount paid in, so that on the pension account since the cotton tax was collected the excess of their burdens over their corresponding benefits amounts to over $300,000,000. That amount of money has been taken away from them by the taxing power of the Government never to return again, except in the shape of loans that draw interest against labor.

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions for 1888, first quarter, shows the payment of $13,832,697.33 for current pensions, which at the same rate would make $55,331,789.32 per annum.

Of this latter sum the annual payments to the Southern States, respectively, would be as follows:

Alabama	$162,456.06	North Carolina	$175,066.60
Arkansas	390,526.00	South Carolina	60,902.00
Florida	124,696.00	Tennessee	982,234.00
Georgia	145,382.92	Texas	400,899.00
Louisiana	151,463.88	Virginia	481,734.48
Mississippi	114,178.00

The payments of arrearages, etc., would be distributed, I suppose, on about the same basis.

The annual pension appropriation bill for 1889 carried $81,758,700, and the one for 1890, which passed the House yesterday, carried $81,-757,500. The pro rata share which will be paid to the States named aggregates each year less than 6 per cent.

Even this might be passed without comment as one of the results of the war if this were all; but it will continue the same way for the next three-quarters of a century, and hundreds of millions more will go to the same side of the account.

The tariff system is another constant drain on every agricultural community. The glowing descriptions of the prosperity and happiness of the laboring man under this system read well in the newspapers, but the agricultural labor of this country fails to realize the truth of the picture. Mortgaged homes, empty pockets, and diminished profits too often represent the true condition of the farmer.

If the revenues were collected on a per capita basis the tax would amount to over $6 per head for every man, woman, and child, paid to the Government, and four times as much more paid in obedience to the exactions of monopolies and trusts which exist in only a portion of the States.

This discrimination in the distribution of the burdens of government ought to cease, and the "equality" which the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary so much desires should be substituted for it. It must eventually come or "the communism of wealth" will create new agencies for the distribution of property.

The Southern States are not on the mendicant list, and justice demands that the sixty-eight millions of cotton tax which belongs to them shall be refunded before the poison of centralization is injected into the heart of our system of government on the hypocritical pretense of charity and philanthropy.

When we take into consideration the fact that Southern State bonds are nearly all held by Eastern capitalists, that our municipal, county, and railroad bonds are nearly all in foreign hands, that the bulk of the life and fire insurance of the Southern States is carried by foreign companies, that the pension money nearly all goes from us to swell the volume of capital which draws interest against our labor, that the boasted benefits of the protective-tariff system drain the agricultural population to enrich the favored few in the great manufacturing centers, the wonder is not that the Southern States are poor in comparison with the more favored States, but that they can survive such conditions, even with all their enterprise and with all their great natural resources.

If the great and rich States of the Union, into whose coffers the wealth of the nation has been drained for a quarter of a century, are becoming impatient on account of the inequality of the burden of the direct tax, is it not time that the Southern States, out of the multitude of their burdens, should at least be heard with patience, and justly to demand the return of the unconstitutional cotton tax?

Poise the cause in justice' equal scales,
Whose beam stands sure, whose rightful cause prevails.

The time having expired, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN, by unanimous consent, Mr. ENLOE's time was extended until he had concluded his remarks.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee who has just addressed the committee, upon what ground he characterizes the cotton tax as an unconstitutional enactment?

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman had listened to my argument he would not have asked that question.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish to know whether the gentleman is arguing against the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. ENLOE. I am not, because there has been no decision in favor of the constitutionality of the act.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why do you not sue to recover your money if there is no decision as to its constitutionality? Why do you not prosecute your claim?

Mr. ENLOE. Why do you not open the Court of Claims?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Why do you not go to the Supreme Court?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ENLOE. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. CASWELL. I yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE].

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I propose simply to occupy the time allotted to me to give a few figures in relation to the amount which has been contributed by the State of South Carolina, which I have the honor to represent in part on this floor, to the Treasury of the United States under the operation of this law. I do this because I did not have the opportunity to interrupt gentlemen in their statements when they were limited in time, and because the erroneous statement has been made that South Carolina is in arrears in this matter.

The direct-tax commissioners in South Carolina, it will be remembered, did not make during the time of executing their office full returns and reports to the Treasury. They did not pay into the Treasury of the United States all the moneys collected. They were not required so to do, for the money in some cases was to be paid out in other directions under the law. But we find that the moneys which were paid into the Treasury of the United States were distinguished under special accounts, and we have the covering warrants under which the money was actually received as an unerring guide showing to which of these accounts that money was to be accredited.

There are several varying and conflicting statements made on an investigation in the Treasury twenty years after the event, which charges the State of South Carolina with a deficiency. But I propose to show by the cotemporary action of the commissioners themselves that these statements are wrong, and that the quota of the State of South Carolina has not only been paid, but overpaid. It was so reported by Secretary Folger, and was also so reported by First Comptroller of the Treasury Lawrence, and the vouchers in the Treasury Department bear out the assertion.

When I say that some of the money collected was to be paid in other ways, and not into the Treasury of the United States, I do not allude to the direct tax itself. That was to be paid into the Treasury; but it will be remembered that in South Carolina there were tax sales of land, to actual purchasers, and certain lands were also offered for sale and bid in by the United States, the portion so bid in by the United States being some of it resold, and some leased, while some is still held by the United States Government.

The direct-tax commissioners for South Carolina, who began to make their collections in 1863, returned the money into the Treasury of the United States, a part of it to the credit of the State's quota and a portion to their own credit as commissioners, for the amounts they had to account for on resales and leases of property. I have here, and will print with my remarks, certified statements from the Register of the Treasury which show by the numbers, dates, and amounts of the warrants that the sum of $377,961.30 was covered into the Treasury to the credit of the State of South Carolina under the direct-tax act; and that at the same time, cotemporaneous with that return to the Treasury of $14,000 more than the quota to the credit of the State, there was also turned in to the credit of the direct-tax commissioners in the discharge of their other duties from resales and leases of lands during the same period of time, the sum of $93,417.29.

The following letter, from Hon. W. S. Rosecrans, Register of the Treasury, is submitted:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 11, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of to-day I inclose herewith, first, a statement of warrants covered into the Treasury to the credit of the State of South Carolina on account of direct tax, acts of August 5, 1861, and June 7, 1862, as appears from the books of this office.

Also, second, a statement of warrants covered into the Treasury to the credit of the tax commissioners of the State of South Carolina on account of direct taxes, under the same act, from which it appears that the former amounts to $377,961.30 and the latter to $93,417.29.

Trusting they will cover the ground of your wishes I remain,

Very truly, yours,

W. S. ROSECRANS, Register.

Hon. SAMUEL DIBBLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

The following is a duplicate of one of the inclosures, which was mislaid after I received it:

Statements of amounts of direct tax covered into the United States Treasury by the State of South Carolina pursuant to the acts of August 5, 1861, and June 7, 1862, giving the number, date by quarters, and the amount of each warrant.

No. of warrants.	Dates.	Amounts.
21	Fourth quarter, 1863	$8,035.06
18	First quarter, 1864	39,000.00
13	Second quarter, 1864	51,066.07
		89,101.13
12	Third quarter, 1864	230.00
44	First quarter, 1865	6,282.88
14	Second quarter, 1865	9,739.58
18	....do	3,240.00
27	....do	126,162.58
		145,655.04
521	Fourth quarter, 1865	23,000.00
522	....do	4,444.09
647	....do	12,943.37
618	....do	26,700.00
292	First quarter, 1866	2,297.45
293	....do	8,000.00
687	....do	13,029.75
335	Second quarter, 1866	8,500.00
474	....do	4,000.00
525	....do	30,800.00
		133,714.57
350	Third quarter, 1866	$1,200.00
590	....do	1,500.00
263	First quarter, 1867	790.56
637	Second quarter, 1867	6,000.00
		9,490.56
		377,961.30

L. W. REID, Acting Register.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE, December 7, 1888.

Statement of warrants covered into the Treasury to the credit of the direct-tax commissioners of the State of South Carolina on account direct tax per acts August 5, 1861, and June 7, 1862.

No.	Date.	Amount.
11	Second quarter, 1863	$19,364.87
369	First quarter, 1864	2,000.00
	Fourth quarter, 1865	68.77
762	First quarter, 1866	135.37
821	Third quarter, 1866	203.50
887	First quarter, 1867	93.15
741	Third quarter, 1867	29,610.00
115	First quarter, 1868	201.58
618	....do	800.00
808	....do	1,000.00
532	Second quarter, 1868	2,000.00
621	....do	898.50
818	....do	1,200.00
276	....do	4,033.76
230	Third quarter, 1868	3,600.00
397	Fourth quarter, 1868	1,000.00
419	First quarter, 1869	360.00
173	....do	65.59
420	....do	1,434.50
874	....do	235.00
402	Second quarter, 1869	1,696.75
617	....do	1,000.00
884	....do	1,000.00
523	Third quarter, 1869	3,000.00
795	....do	2,000.00
375	Fourth quarter, 1869	500.00
842	....do	1,000.00
296	First quarter, 1870	1,677.07
297	....do	1,000.00
29	....do	3.72
711	....do	1,000.00
710	....do	1,000.00
483	....do	1,200.31
298	Second quarter, 1870	1,000.00
299	....do	1,000.00
501	....do	1,000.00
815	....do	1,000.00
558	Third quarter, 1870	1,000.00
673	Fourth quarter, 1870	14.63
285	....do	1,000.00
528	....do	500.00
374	First quarter, 1870	2,514.71
1169	....do	5.51
	Total	93,417.29

ROS. A. FISH, Assistant Register.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE, February 11, 1886.

Then there were other sums collected from resales and leases; but, as stated before, they were not required to be turned into the Treasury, but were to be turned over to certain officials in the administration of the school funds and in the discharge of obligations incurred under the freedmen's act, and in various other ways. So that this does not represent the entire total collected by the direct-tax commissioners in that State. They admit in their very imperfect reports that they received from sales to private parties (that is, the original tax sales) $28,232.29. Up to the 3d day of May, 1880, Commissioner Raum, of the Internal-Revenue Bureau, reported that the resales of lands bid in by the United States up to that time represented in the actual cash received $315,677.86.

The direct-tax commissioners admit in their account, so far as turned in, in a statement made by them, that the absolute collections in cash made in the city of Charleston, S. C., and in other portions of that State where the tax was voluntarily paid without sale of lands, represent the sum of $238,207, and after the matter was turned over to the collectors of internal revenue and the direct-tax commissioners were relieved, Internal-Revenue Commissioner Rogers reported to Comptroller Lawrence, in 1883, that the amount received by the Internal-Revenue Department was $43,475.62, making a total of $625,000 in actual cash received from the State of South Carolina.

There were other items, which I have not been able to get, from which they realized moneys, but the particulars can not be obtained. So it can not be said that South Carolina has not contributed her quota. The truth is she turned into the Treasury on account of the quota, as shown by the covering warrants, $377,000, when her quota was only $363,000, and from the profits made by the Government on the lands bid in by the Government there was turned in in cash up to the close of the fiscal year 1869, nineteen years ago, $93,417.29, besides the moneys that have been turned in by the internal-revenue collectors since, and besides the money which the direct-tax commissioners collected and turned over to certain school-fund commissioners and to the Freedmen's Bureau, as well as other moneys which they collected, of which there is no account that can be made accurately by the Treasury on account of defective returns. But we have, of actual cash received, a total of $625,000, as I have just shown you.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the condition of South Carolina, and I think it is but a measure of justice, as the Constitution of the United States prescribes that there shall be equality in these taxes, and since it would be a great hardship to enforce the collection of this tax upon the impoverished States of the South, that the moneys actually received by the Government should be paid back to the States that have paid the tax. I confess that it seems to me this is in compliance with the Constitution of the United States.

Now, sir, a word as to the cotton tax, and I say this mainly on account of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois to-day [Mr. HOPKINS], in which he compares the payments made into the Internal Revenue Office from States such as Rhode Island and Illinois with those from Florida and Georgia, and attempts to draw the conclusion that the State of Illinois and other Northern States have contributed largely in excess of the State of Georgia and other Southern States to the support of the Government.

Now, there appears to me this distinction: The internal-revenue tax is paid by the consumer. The 50 cents a gallon on whisky certainly enhances the price of whisky to the consumer; but in the case of cotton, the tax was, in effect, paid by the producer of that article. In the case of the articles of whisky, tobacco, and other products taxed under the internal revenue, the market for them was protected from any interference and interruption elsewhere by the fact that all goods coming from abroad of the same nature were not only subject to the tariff duty but had to pay the same internal-revenue tax as the home product. But as to cotton, it was a product the price of which has been fixed from time immemorial, as every man who has had anything to do with it knows, by the prices in the Liverpool market.

There the taxed cotton of the South came into competition with the cotton of Brazil, Egypt, India, and other cotton-producing countries, which did not have any such burden upon them, and the price was established on the sum total of the crop of the world. At that time, Mr. Chairman, owing to the condition of affairs, the crops of India, Brazil, and Egypt had grown during the war to meet the demands of the consumers of the world, and largely exceeded their present proportion of the world's cotton production. Our crop had been diminished in the Southern States by legislative restriction of the amount to be produced year by year, and from causes growing out of the state of the country. For that reason, the Liverpool market fixing the standard, we got no more for our cotton because of this tax upon it, and therefore it must have come out of the producers. So that its burden fell upon the Southern planters of cotton, while the internal taxes fell upon the consumers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. CASWELL. I would like to reserve the balance of my time until to-morrow, and yield the floor to the gentleman from Minnesota, if he is prepared to go on to-night.

Mr. OATES (to Mr. CASWELL). Have you any objection to the committee rising?

Mr. CASWELL. No; I have no objection to the committee rising if the gentleman from Minnesota is not prepared to go on to-night.

Mr. MCRAE. Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises I wish to ask leave to print in the RECORD two amendments for information.

Mr. CASWELL. Is it for information?

Mr. MCRAE. Only for information; and I will not ask that time be taken to read them.

Mr. CASWELL. Then I yield for them to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas asks leave to have the amendments printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MCADOO. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is it necessary, in order to have amendments considered, to present them now?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments may be offered without objection and printed. That is what I understand to be asked by the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. MCADOO. I desired to know, as I want to offer an amendment to-morrow.

There was no objection.

The first amendment is as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to each State a sum equal to the amounts collected therein respectively as a tax or duty on raw cotton, under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the supplemental and amendatory acts thereto, which sums, when so credited and paid, shall be accepted and held by the States in trust, first, for such of the producers who paid said tax or duty, or their legal representatives, as may make claim to and prove their identity, and the amount of taxes paid, in two years after the passage of this act; and, second, the remainder, if any, to be held and used only as a permanent free-school fund.

SEC. —. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That any State accepting the trust hereby created is prohibited from paying any part of the funds received to any person, syndicate, or corporation except the producers who paid the taxes on cotton grown by them, or their legal representatives; and in no case shall the payment be made to an assignee of such claim.

The second amendment is as follows:

SEC. —. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit and pay to each State a sum equal to the amounts collected therein respectively as a tax or duty on raw cotton, under the provisions of the act approved July 1, 1862, and the supplemental and amendatory acts thereto, which sums, when so credited and paid, shall be accepted and held by the States in trust as a permanent school fund.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk may be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC. — That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to such person as shall in each case apply therefor, and furnish satisfactory evidence that such applicant was at the time of the sales hereinafter mentioned the legal owner, or is the heir at law or devisee of the legal owner of such lands as were sold in the parishes of St. Helena and St. Luke's, in the State of South Carolina, under the said acts of Congress, the value of said lands in the manner following, to wit: to the owners of the lots in the town of Beaufort, the value assessed thereon for taxation by the United States direct-tax commissioners for South Carolina; to the owners of lands which were rated for taxation by the State of South Carolina as being usually cultivated, or capable of cultivation, $10 per acre for each acre thereof returned on the proper tax-book; to the owners of all other lands, $1 per acre for each acre thereof returned on said tax-book: Provided, That in all cases where such owners, or persons claiming under them, have redeemed or purchased said lands, or any part thereof from the United States, they shall not receive compensation for such part so redeemed or purchased, but they shall receive whatever amounts were paid by them to the United States for such redemption or purchase: And provided further, That in all cases where said owners have heretofore received from the United States the surplus proceeds arising from the sale of their lands, such sums shall be deducted from the sum which they are entitled to receive under this act.

SEC. —. That in all cases where persons, while serving in the Army or Navy or Marine Corps of the United States, purchased any of said lands under section 11 of the act of Congress approved June 7, 1862, and such lands afterwards reverted to the United States, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to such persons as shall in each case apply therefor, or to their heirs at law, devisees, or grantees in good faith and for valuable consideration, whatever sum was so paid to the United States in such case.

SEC. —. That before paying any money to such persons the Secretary of the Treasury shall require the person or persons entitled to receive the same to execute a release of all claims and demands of every kind and description whatever against the United States arising out of the execution of said acts, and also a release of all right, title, and interest in and to the said lands.

SEC. —. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $850,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to pay for said lots and lands, which sum shall include all moneys in the Treasury derived in any manner from the enforcement of said acts in said parishes, and not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. —. That section 1063 of the Revised Statutes is hereby made applicable to claims arising under this act without limitation as to the amount involved in such claim.

Mr. CASWELL. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, the Chairman (Mr. MCCREARY) reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (S. 139) to refund the direct tax, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal;

A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes;

A bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh;

A bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner;

A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;

A bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catharine Tate; and

A bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PEEL. I ask that the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw that motion for a moment. I ask unanimous consent to have a resolution read and adopted.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That January 10, 1889, immediately after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of measures reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs in such order as may be presented by said committee, not to interfere with appropriation or revenue bills, and if in any case whatever said day shall not be so used, this order be continued from day to day until so occupied.

Mr. MCCREARY. I ask to amend the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will object to this, unless it is provided that it shall not interfere with the Oklahoma bill, as well as revenue bills.

Mr. PEEL. Well, I accept that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas accepts the amendment. The gentleman from Kentucky suggested an amendment. [After a pause.] Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that not subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is, if the gentleman asks for consideration of it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move to strike out "Indian Affairs" and insert "Invalid Pensions."

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman asked unanimous consent for its passage, not for consideration.

The SPEAKER. What was the request of the gentleman from Arkansas? There was such confusion that the Chair did not hear.

Mr. PEEL. My request was for unanimous consent to pass it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MCCREARY. I desire to offer a resolution and ask unanimous consent to set apart Thursday, the 18th of December, immediately after the reading of the Journal, for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs,

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that unanimous consent to have the order made?

Mr. MCCREARY. It is.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I object.

Then, on motion of Mr. MCMILLIN (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PRIVATE BILLS INTRODUCED AND REFERRED.

Under the rule private bills of the following titles were introduced and referred as indicated below:

By Mr. E. P. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 11749) to place the name of James M. Fuller on the pension-roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BAYNE (by request): A bill (H. R. 11750) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BIGGS: A bill (H. R. 11751) to remove the political disabilities of Henry B. Davidson—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLARDY: A bill (H. R. 11752) for the relief of Cogswell & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FORD: A bill (H. R. 11753) granting a pension to H. A. Hydorn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11754) granting a pension to Joseph Hart—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MAISH: A bill (H. R. 11755) for the relief of Ferdinand Wetzel—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11756) for the relief of Richard Thrush—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MATSON: A bill (H. R. 11757) granting a pension to Rebecca H. Lyon—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: A bill (H. R. 11758) for the relief of Joseph Whitaker—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 11759) to correct the military record of Hosea Stone—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHIVELY: A bill (H. R. 11760) granting a pension to Dennis Kane—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. T. L. THOMPSON: A bill (H. R. 11761) for the relief of General George Stoneman—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WISE: A bill (H. R. 11762) to remove the political disabilities of J. H. Rochelle—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. YOST: A bill (H. R. 11763) for the relief of J. Henry Rives—to the Committee on Claims.

Changes in the reference of bills improperly referred were made in the following cases, namely:

A bill (H. R. 11323) to place the name of Charles T. Strocklien on the pension-roll—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 11448) for the relief of William F. Denmure—from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. E. BROWN: Memorial for the removal of the charge of desertion, by James Mays, late of Company G, St. Louis Legion, First Regiment Missouri Volunteers in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DUNHAM: Petition of Maria McMurdie, in reference to bill number 11668—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, petition of John Boyle, of Chicago, for release from charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of A. G. Cadle, of Tazewell, Tenn., for payment of his war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MAISH: Petition of 37 citizens of Cumberland County, Pennsylvania, for a pension to Richard Thrush, late of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JONES: Petition of J. J. Simpkins, of Monroe County, Alabama, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Petition of Joseph Whitaker, late private in the Forty-ninth Ohio Volunteers, with others, for his relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of citizens of Independence, of Piatt, and of Creston, Iowa, in case of Anna M. Pifer, daughter of Cornelius Pifer, late private Company F, Second Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Mrs. W. F. Privett, of Shelby County, Tennessee, heir of Mrs. E. T. Harvey, for reference of her claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, resolutions of a meeting of Union soldiers of Elk County, Kansas, for the passage of the service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RYAN: Resolution of a convention held at Wichita and at Douglas, Kans., in favor of the organization of Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. SYMES: Petition for land office in Colorado at Akron—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The following petitions against the passage of the international copyright bill were received, and severally referred to the Committee on Patents:

By Mr. DALZELL: Of Gust. Blockinger, of Homestead, Pa.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Of Commercial Publishing Company of Pensacola, Fla.

By Mr. DORSEY: Of A. N. Bohn, of Tilden, Nebr.

By Mr. KERR: Of J. W. Merrill, of State Centre, Iowa.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Of William Bryan & Son, of Hudson, and of D. Browne, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 12, 1888.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

H. H. RIDDLEBERGER, a Senator from the State of Virginia, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STEWART (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3704) to provide for the construction of pneumatic torpedo-throwers to be used in the fortification and defense of certain harbors in the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FAULKNER introduced a bill (S. 3705) for the relief of the trustee of St. Joseph's Catholic Church at Martinsburgh, W. Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PADDOCK introduced a bill (S. 3706) to establish two additional land districts in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

C. B. WILSON.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar under Rule VIII at the point last reached in its consideration.

The bill (H. R. 5080) for the relief of C. B. Wilson was announced as first in order, and it was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to give credit to C. B. Wilson, postmaster at Buena Vista, Colo., for $225, money-order funds remitted by him to the post office at Denver, Colo., in accordance with the postal rules and regulations, and mislaid or lost in the post-office at Denver.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JAMES ALBERT BONSACK.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 593) for the relief of James Albert Bonsack.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that that bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over under the rule, and will take its place on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I hope there will be no objection to the bill retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate of September 25, 1888, to print additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1887.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PEEL, Mr. HUDD, and Mr. NELSON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 11764) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 2240) for the relief of George S. Thwing;

A bill (S. 2483) granting a pension to Catharine Tate;

A bill (S. 2639) granting a pension to Mrs. Louisa Ward;

A bill (S. 2666) granting a pension to Lemuel S. Skinner;

A bill (S. 2842) granting an increase of pension to William H. H. Welsh;

A bill (S. 3144) granting a pension to Nancy A. Hayes; and

A bill (S. 3397) granting an increase of pension to Caroline M. McDougal.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be stated.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9051.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in paragraph 437, line 495, of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Finance, after the word "shall," to strike out all down to and including the word "made," in line 497, as follows:

Pay two-tenths of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the hoop or band iron or steel from which they are made.

And to insert in lieu thereof the words:

Be admitted free of duty.

So as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel, flared or splayed, shall be admitted free of duty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken on the amendment proposed by my colleague I wish to reply to some observations made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] yesterday.

The Senator from Massachusetts stated, as I understood him, that if the tax on cotton-ties was increased it would be paid by the importers and not by the purchasers. I desired to ask him, if he had been present in his seat, whether he intended to deny in the Senate that if, in addition to the 35 cents now paid by each importer upon each dollar's worth of cotton-ties imported into the United States, 73 cents more, levied by this bill, are added to that, the importer would add that 73 cents to the price that he would charge the purchaser of the cotton-ties. Does he not know that if the importer is compelled to pay 73 cents more upon each dollar's worth of cotton-ties at the custom-house in New York he will add that 73 cents to the price for which he sells it to the the planter?

This proposition to increase the tax on cotton-ties illustrates as much as any other item in this bill the absolute injustice of the whole protective idea that runs through the bill. Here is an article which it is admitted is not manufactured in the United States; an article which if the tax is taken off will not injure any business now in operation in the United States; will destroy no manufactory and reduce no man's wages; a tax that is not needed for public purposes in any way whatever; but it is proposed by the Senate bill to force the farmers, who are compelled to buy these ties, to pay 108 per cent. upon the amount of their purchase for no purpose whatever so far as has been disclosed by this bill or by its advocates. There is no infant industry to be protected, although the Senator from Massachussetts intimates that it was for the purpose of providing for one hereafter to be born.

The proposition is now to force these people to pay this money with no benefit to accrue to any one hereafter. In other words, it is asserted by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] that these cotton-ties can not be manufactured at the price that the cotton producer is now paying for them. They therefore say that he shall pay 73 cents more upon every dollar's worth of cotton-ties in the hope that it may induce some one in America to engage in the manufacture of these ties.

Can the Senators upon the other side of the Chamber believe that that is not discriminating against any portion of the people of this Union? Is it not a direct discrimination against the farmers of the country, and that, too, without benefiting any laborers in any part of the Union?

This is the reason why we so seriously object to this proposed increase of duty. This is the reason why we believe it is absolutely unjust to the farmers of the country, and that it ought not to be forced upon this bill.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] said yesterday that wherever we have opposed these items it was simply a proposition to fight the election over again. I say to him that we intend to fight it over again. If he thinks that the late election settled the question that such injustice as is involved in this cotton tax shall be continued without a fight, then he mistakes the temper of the farmers of this country. The fight is not over, but has just begun. A majority of those who cast their votes on the 6th day of November voted for Grover Cleveland and not for General Harrison. It is true that under our peculiar electoral system General Harrison was elected and Cleveland defeated, but the majority of the people of this country do not believe that Congress has a right to force by law from the farmers of this country 108 per cent. tax on an article that they are compelled to buy, and to place that money in the Treasury of the United States when the Government has no need for it whatever, when it can not be used, when we already have more than we know what disposition to make of.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] said yesterday that he was in favor of so shaping this bill as to afford protection. I say so far as I am concerned in that idea I do not agree with him. I am in favor of passing the bill in such a way as will produce revenue only, and not one dollar more than is necessary for the economical administration of the Government. Here is a proposition to increase the revenue not needed, that can not be used, and that, too, upon an article that every Senator is bound to admit is necessary for the farmers of this country.

I hope that the amendment proposed by my colleague will on a yea-and-nay vote be adopted, because there is no feature in this bill that is more absolutely inequitable and unjust to a large part not only of the farmers of the South but the farmers in the Western States than the paragraph now under consideration before the Senate.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, for myself I undertand that the Senate substitute is a political measure, and I understand that the division between the Democratic party and the Republican party upon the tariff is a political division. I expected that the Mills bill, to which the Senate substitute is proposed as an amendment, would have received the unanimous support of the other side of the Chamber.

Several Senators here have alluded to the fact that they knew nothing of the details of the Senate substitute until it was reported to the Finance Committee. It was publicly announced in that committee by leading Democrats upon it that they proposed to stand by the Mills bill in all its features, and all that they wanted of us was to present our substitute to it. The Democratic national convention had approved the bill. President Cleveland in his letter of acceptance approved it, and criticised the Republicans at the other end of the Capitol for their opposition to it. I do not know that the Senator from New Jersey said that he proposed to stand by the House bill, and I do not remember that he said that they did not care to know the provisions of our bill, but that declaration was made so often in the committee that it does seem to me that he must have heard and acquiesced in the statement made by his colleagues upon that committee. We were never asked by them to be allowed to unite with us in the consideration of the Senate substitute.

As the Republican members of the committee, we prepared the bill from a Republican standpoint, illustrating by it, as we believed, the principles of our party and the faith and wishes of the members of our party respectively. The bill was presented here, and it went to the country, in my State at least, as an illustration of the Republican platform on the question of protection.

I supposed that when we came into this Chamber the other side would be content with offering their amendments to the bill, and that they would do what they have done, offer as amendments the provisions of the House bill. Now they criticise the manner in which the Senate bill was presented and discuss the provisions of the bill upon the merits. I am entirely willing to meet them in the discussion of the bill upon the merits, but I want it distinctly understood that upon the merits I discuss it from an entirely different standpoint from what they do. I believe in a bill which shall afford adequate and complete protection to all the American industries which may be so successfully prosecuted in this country as to supply our American markets; and more than that, I am willing to depend upon American competition to force down the prices in a market which is assured to American producers; but I am not, in opposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas proposing to put hoops for baling cotton upon the free-list, to rely upon that principle.

I will in this discussion of the amendment call the attention of the Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from New Jersey to the Mills bill, and base my argument in opposition to the amendment upon the provisions of that bill, which has had the high indorsement that I have mentioned of it.

This provision, paragraph 137 of the substitute for the Mills bill, provides customs duties upon four classes of hoop, band, or scroll iron. Upon the first class the duty is now fixed at 1 cent per pound. Our substitute proposes the same duty. This is the raw material for a more finished product. The Mills bill makes no change; it leaves it at 1 cent a pound. The next class indicated in the substitute under the present law is 1.4 cents per pound. The Mills bill does not change that. It passed under the severe scrutiny of the gentlemen who had charge of this branch of legislation at the other end of the Capitol and they made no change of the present law. The Senate substitute reduces the rate of duty one-tenth of a cent a pound. We are lower than they are in reference to this class of raw material, which, I believe, is the absolute raw material from which cotton-ties are made. The present law is 1.2 cents a pound. The Mills bill does not reduce it, but the Senate substitute does reduce it one-tenth of a cent a pound. This is the raw material cotton-ties are made from.

Now, then, we come to the sectional character of the House bill and the sectional character of the amendment which has been offered here. The amendment proposes to lift cotton-ties alone out of the next or third classification, upon which the House bill and Senate substitute both have fixed a duty of 1.3 cents a pound, and put them alone upon the free-list. So far as the raw material is concerned from which the ties are made, we have provided a greater reduction than was made by the Mills bill. I should like to have some Senator upon the other side explain this, and why it is that these appeals are made. The proviso which is contained in the House bill is as follows:

Provided, That all articles not specially enumerated or provided for, whether wholly or partly manufactured, made from sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron herein provided for or of which such sheet, plate, hoop, band, or scroll iron shall be the material of chief value, shall pay one-fourth of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the iron from which they are made, or which shall be such material of chief value.

The Senate proviso is as follows:

Provided, That hoop or band iron, or hoop or band steel, cut to length, or wholly or partially manufactured into hoops or ties for baling purposes, barrel hoops of iron or steel, and hoop or band iron or hoop or band steel flared or splayed, shall pay two-tenths of 1 cent per pound more duty than that imposed on the hoop or band iron or steel from which they are made.

We make a greater difference than is made by the Mills bill between the raw material and the finished product, but the final result or rate is the same upon the advanced manufacture and manufactures advanced no more but as much as these cotton-ties. The amendment proposes to retain them upon the dutiable-list and put the cotton-ties on the free-list. I hope that some Senator will enlighten this Chamber upon the reason for the proposed legislation, what justice there is in it, what fault they can find with the rates of duty that are fixed by this clause, and what occasion they have for criticising the increased duty for the advancement in the manufacture of all the goods, including cotton-ties, and why discriminate between goods equally advanced in manufacture.

The appeal of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is especially on account of the colored people of the South. Well, I say to the Senator from New Jersey there is another way except through this amendment that he could do more complete justice to the colored people of the South. Other advocates of the amendment base it entirely upon their affection for the farmer, and tell us how grievously he is oppressed by it.

Let us look at the oppression that under this provision of the bill, if it should be adopted into law, the Southern planter will be subjected to. A bale of 500 pounds of cotton costs him 20 cents for the ties; perhaps a trifle more than that. A large ad valorem rate of duty has been indicated here as imposed upon them, and what is claimed in reference to that, in view of the fact which I will state, illustrates the unsatisfactory appraisal of goods at the custom-house, which forms the basis for the ad valorem rate. If Senators will take the actual market value of these cotton-ties and the rate of duty which is imposed upon them, they will discover that it is about 75 or 80 per cent. ad valorem. At least that is the evidence which was submitted to the committee that had charge of the preparation of this substitute. Twenty cents a bale upon 500 pounds of cotton is the full cost, duty and all, which is paid by them for baling the cotton in the first instance.

I grant for the purpose of the argument that this cost comes from the cotton-planter as much as transportation to a foreign market. I have no doubt that both that and the bagging are included in the cost to him, and I am not going to make any argument against that position. I will concede that all the oppressed farmer loses in the purchase of the cotton-ties is an absolute tax upon him. The evidence before the committee was that when the cotton-ties were used and taken from the bales at the Liverpool market they could be sold there for two-thirds their original value. There was no dispute about that fact. Two-thirds of their cost is reimbursed to him, and about 6 cents or 7 cents at the outside is the full cost to the abused planter, to the colored people, the friends of the Senator from New Jersey, of the cotton-ties which are placed upon his bale of cotton of 500 pounds.

Mr. McPHERSON. Would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, no.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if that is a fair way of stating this question, either to the Senate or to the country? Is it a fair thing to say that because the hoops upon a bale of cotton do not cost more than 20 cents the price of 20 cents may not be extortionate? Is it a fair thing to say that when the bale of cotton goes to Liverpool and there enters in consumption in the factories of England, and the hoops are thrown away, the poor cotton-planter is permitted then to have some benefit upon it, when in reality perhaps the same hoops are remolded over and sent back, and he is again compelled to pay his 108 per cent. duty?

Let me illustrate it a little more forcibly——

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator is going to make a speech, perhaps he had better make it in his own time.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me illustrate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think I have done so.

Mr. McPHERSON. I was shown a knife yesterday by a distinguished member of the House of Representatives. The cost to him of that knife in the wilds of California, after it had been imported from England, had been confronted by a custom-house officer at the port of New York, and paid its duty, and paid the freight——

Mr. HISCOCK. If there is to be a speech made in mine, I can not yield further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HISCOCK. No; if there is to be a speech made on knives I will not yield.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will not the Senator yield to me in justice——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York is entitled to the floor and declines to yield.

Mr. McPHERSON. Then I wish to make an appeal——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. One moment. The Senator from New Jersey must not proceed. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. HISCOCK. I shall be disposed to yield to the Senator from New Jersey for any question that he may be pleased to ask which is pertinent to the discussion of the subject before the Senate; but if I take any part in the discussion of the duties upon knives, it will be when we reach that point in the bill. In reply to the question which he did ask me, whether I regarded this form of discussion in which I have engaged as proper, I say to him most emphatically that I do.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HISCOCK. When there is an attempt made here upon the floor of the Senate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will pause one moment. The Senator from New Jersey rises.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York, if he will permit me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, to have my attention called to something.

Mr. McPHERSON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I have asked him no question. He did not permit me to finish my question.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator, when it is printed, will look in the RECORD, he will discover that he did ask me a question, and the question which he addressed to me was as to the propriety of the argument in which I was engaged. As I understood his question, it was whether what I was stating was an answer; whether it was fair to oppress, however slightly it might be; the point, as I understood it, being whether it made any difference if the duty which was imposed or the loss which followed from it was large or small if it was extortionate. I believe it was entirely proper to follow the line of argument I did in view of the pathetic appeals that were made by Senators for the farmers, and especially for the colored farmers, on account of the extortion in this bill.

I believe there is a principle underlying this bill. Senators are not discussing it upon that principle when they confine their argument to one particular item which is covered by this proviso. Their argument is purely sectional, and it is an appeal for a section when they confine it to a class of goods which are used in one section only; and when they urge here that it is an unnecessary or an onerous tax put upon an industry of the section that they represent, I have the right to demonstrate to the Senate just how much they pay, just how much the burden is, just what it is which inspired the species of sectional legislation at the other end of the Capitol, and inspires the amendments which are offered here in a line with the legislation at the other end of the Capitol. I repeat that the full cost of the cotton-ties for a bale of cotton to the cotton-planter is 7 cents to 500 pounds of cotton.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do.

Mr. BERRY. The Senator misstates the figures. The cost, according to my understanding, is about 20 cents (a fraction more than that) for the ties upon each bale, and not 7 cents, as has been stated by him

Mr. HISCOCK. What I stated was that the full cost of baling a bale of cotton originally is a fraction over 20 cents to the bale.

Mr. BERRY. For the ties alone?

Mr. HISCOCK. And the ties, after they have been removed from the bale, are sold for two-thirds of their original value.

Mr. BERRY. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that, whether they be sold at that or any other price, no benefit comes to the cotton-planter, but that he loses entirely both ties and bagging, the original cost to him.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator will look at the prices given for the cotton and the amount which is deducted for tare, the number of pounds that are deducted for the bagging, for the cotton which is supposed to be injured, and for the cotton-ties which are around it, he will discover that he is entirely mistaken in that statement, and that in deducting the tare in the weight of the cotton a full allowance is made for the money which should come back into the hands of the cotton-planter for the ties. A full allowance is made to him for the money that is received from the sale of these hoops.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. BERRY. I do not understand the facts as stated by the Senator from New York to be the true facts. However, if they were true, the argument of the Senator is that instead of robbing the farmers of the South of 20 cents a bale we are robbing them of only 7 cents a bale, and therefore we have a right to take this small amount because it is small.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. President, we have been through with the canvass in which upon the Democratic hustings throughout this country we have heard this cry about the robbery of the tariff. The Northern States that are largely in favor of a protective tariff were specially invaded last fall by gentlemen who have indulged in this sort of declamation, "the robberies of the tariff." A verdict has been taken upon that; it has been rendered by the people. You will have a chance four years from now to try it over again.

This is not the time nor is this the place so soon after this full discussion, so soon after the rebuke of this sort of declamation, to indulge in it again, and I imagine it will have no effect upon this side of the Chamber, nor will it have any effect upon the country. If we were confronting another national election, or State election, or a Congressional election, I should welcome all expressions of that kind from Senators as we welcomed those that were made by them previous to the adjournment of Congress in the discussion of this subject. We do not believe it is a robbery. We believe in building up American industries, and we believe that we have the raw material here from which to make these cotton-ties. We believe that this industry here can be so successfully established with home rivalry, that the effect will be to force down the price of cotton-ties to a point heretofore unknown in their history, as it has with reference to the other products of our manufacturing industries; and it is upon that broad ground that we have put this provision in the bill. If it was an industry that could not be successfully prosecuted here, if we had not the raw material, the labor, and the capital with which to make them, no proposition would come from the committee to increase the duty upon this class of goods. But if the Senator believes that it is a robbery he must believe that it was a robbery that formulated the Mills bill. The proviso in that bill covering all other classes of goods equal as to the cost and somewhat kindred in their form contains the same principle. Why contest the principle here?

Mr. JONES of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The reason is perfectly obvious why, in the Mills bill, there was no proposition to interfere with hoop-iron as such. Capital has been invested in this country in the production of that article. It is a common thing, whenever there is a proposition to reduce the tariff anywhere, for gentlemen who think as my friend the Senator from New York does on these economic questions to urge that you ought not to reduce the tariff because American citizens have been induced by the laws as they stand to invest capital in the production of this or that or the other article; and the argument would be that as Americans have invested money in the production of hoop-iron, there should not be a material reduction of the tariff duty on that article, because Americans are producing it. But there is not one single dollar of American capital invested in producing cotton-ties and ties for baling hay, and the bands that are cut for the purpose of making hoops on barrels; and the fact that there is no money invested in producing them was a good reason why there should be a difference in the provisions as to the two articles.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator from Arkansas entirely mistakes the argument upon which protection is based. With the commencement of this Government those in favor of protection have advocated it to develop new industries equally with protecting those already established. Wherever we have believed it possible to develop a new industry, so that its product might fill the American market and supply it, protectionists have always been in favor of it.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. To what extent does the Sonator desire to go on that line?

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to go to the farthest extent.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. To the production of oranges and bananas?

Mr. HISCOCK. Certainly, sir. You can not indicate a thing, a fruit, a product of our soil, that can be produced in this country equalizing the cost of labor and capital elsewhere, but that I am in favor of the protection of that industry. I am not in favor of producing oranges in the State of New York, nor of affording that protection which would make the raising of oranges a profitable industry in the State of New York. I am not in favor of the protection of an industry of any kind that can not be made so successful in the country as to supply the home market.

But, Mr. President, I did not enter upon this discussion this morning intending to consume nearly the time which I have occupied. My object was to demonstrate the unfairness, the want of principle, if you please, underlying the amendment now offered; and by reference to the bill which gentlemen upon the other side stand here favoring, to dispose of the question whether there is any unreasonable duty or any unnecessary duty imposed upon these cotton-ties. The Mills bill recognizes the fact that the duty is no more than it should be. I have no doubt the investigations that were made by the gentlemen who had charge of that bill led them to recognize that this rate of protection should be given to kindred goods, those in the same advanced stage of manufacture. And I proposed to demonstrate further, in answer to the pathetic appeals which have been made for the farmers, the poor planters of the South, for the colored people of the South, that in no sense is this provision which we have incorporated in the bill a burden upon them or upon the industry in which they are engaged.

Mr. REAGAN Mr. President, it seems to me that the radical mistake made by the gentlemen who are advocating high protection is that they do not consider agriculture an American industry That appears to me to be the great mistake which is made, and they consider agriculture the proper field upon which to levy tribute for all other industries.

Mr. President, of the 17,000,000 people in the United States who by the census of 1880 were found to be engaged in gainful occupations, about 8,000,000 were engaged in the business of agriculture. Another important fact to be mentioned in connection with that is that of the more than $700,000,000 of exports of last year, $523,000,000 worth were agricultural products. I did not think of this question coming up in this form, and I am not prepared to show the value of the farms in this country, the amount of the money invested in farms, agricultural implements, and the means of carrying on agriculture.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, I will make a statement of what the last census shows about that.

Mr. REAGAN. I should be glad to have the Senator make that statement.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The capital invested in farming and farming implements in the United States, according to the last census, was $12,104,081,440; and in manufacturing the total amount invested was $2,700,000,000—more than four times as much invested in farming as there was in manufacturing.

Mr. REAGAN. I am obliged to the Senator from Arkansas for making the statement.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator will allow me to make a single suggestion. It would be very desirable under these figures, I should think, that there should be some more money put into manufacturing.

Mr. REAGAN.. I did not understand the Senator.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think, from the statement made, that it would be desirable for the general happiness and prosperity of the country that there should be more money put into manufactures.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not propose to go into that question now further than to state that already under the high bonus given by protective tariffs to manufacturing interests we have more money invested in manufacturing and more factories in existence than can have continued employment, and therefore there is no room for the investment of more money in manufactures. The tariff legislation has put everything in this bill so upon stilts that we can only rely mainly upon our own country for the consumption of our manufactures. We can not go into the markets of the world to any great extent, as we might do under reasonable legislation on this subject. The friends of high protection prefer limiting the field of plunder to the United States rather than adopt a liberal policy which would give them the markets of the world and employ their capital and their machinery constantly and give constant and steady employment to the labor engaged in manufactures.

But that was not the point that I started out to discuss. I rose to call attention to the fact that these Senators seem not to recognize agriculture as an American industry, that pursuit which gives employment to more people, which invokes the investment of larger amounts of capital than any other in this country; that employment which was once honorable, and commanded the attention and respect of the young men growing up in this country, but which is now a degraded occupation to such an extent that the young men in the country will not work on a farm if they can get other employment. The men who own the farms are year by year having to mortgage them to meet indebtedness growing out of the exactions levied upon them through the instrumentality of a protective tariff. Why has the Senator from New York made the observation that he was for the protection of every product of the American soil? Does he propose to protect this great interest?

Mr. HISCOCK. What interest is that?

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator said he was in favor of protecting every product of American soil.

Mr. HISCOCK. I say I am in favor of protecting every product of American soil which may be made large enough, taking into account climatic influences, the soil, and all that, to supply the American market. I am not in favor of protecting the production of oranges or lemons in New York.

Mr. REAGAN. That is hardly an answer to the suggestion I made.

Mr. HISCOCK. In Florida I would.

Mr. REAGAN. I said nothing about lemons and oranges in New York at all, but I was speaking of the largest of the exports that go from this country—cotton, much the largest article exported from this country, commanding the labor of millions of men who depend upon the raising of cotton for their living as much as the gentleman's constituents depend upon the manufacture of manufactured products for their living.

Mr. HISCOCK. I will state one line of protection, one way in which I would protect the cotton-planters. I would have them have here upon American soil a market for the cotton which enters into every single piece of cotton fabric which is used in this country and save to them the cost of transportation from here to the other side. I believe if the Senator wants to protect them he can do far more in that direction by relieving them of the tax of this transportation than he can in striking out this insignificant tax upon the cotton industry of 3 cents at the outside upon 500 pounds of cotton.

Mr. REAGAN. If I understand the position of the Senator from New York it is that in order to protect the raisers of cotton we must put the duty on manufactured cotton goods so high as to secure to the makers of cotton a higher market price for their cotton.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggested to the Senator from Texas a way in which, in my opinion, he can render the producers of cotton a more signal service in advancing the price of their cotton or relieving them of a tax upon their cotton than by spending all his strength of body and mind in his assaults upon this provision of the bill and in an attempt to procure sectional legislation upon this bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I believe I stated correctly what the Senator's plan was. Let us look at the facts upon which that proposition rests. We make, I believe, about 7,000,000 bales of cotton a year. The American manufacturers consume less than 2,000,000 of them, I believe—I am speaking in general terms and may not be precisely accurate, but I am not far wrong. Now, will the manufacturers of cotton raise the price of raw cotton to conform to the rate of duty imposed upon manufactured goods? Is there a Senator, is there a man in all this broad land, who believes any such thing? On the contrary, the manufacturer pays the price for raw cotton which is fixed by the market price in Liverpool, where the larger portion of this cotton is marketed.

Mr. CHACE. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the price of cotton is fixed in Liverpool?

Mr. REAGAN. Substantially.

Mr. CHACE. What is the evidence of that?

Mr. REAGAN. It is well known that the price is established there, it is shown by the price current, and it is a fact that that is the great cotton market of the world.

Mr. CHACE. But does not the Senator know that the cotton crop of this country is sold in the city of New York five times over every year?

Mr. REAGAN. I know there is a sort of gambling going on in the pretended purchase and sale of cotton without a bale of cotton being owned or handled there by the persons pretending to sell and buy.

Mr. CHACE. And nine-tenths of it is done by the producers of cotton in the South.

Mr. REAGAN. That remark is hardly justified by facts; and the men thus engaged are guided in fixing the prices at which they propose to buy and sell by what they understand the Liverpool market will be, and not what the New York market will be, for the price of cotton is fixed by the Liverpool market.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator from Texas will allow me, I wish to say—and I can prove it by the record—that over and over again the price of cotton in the market of New York has been higher than in Liverpool. That is a simple fact, and if the Senator was familiar with the market reports he would know it to be so. It has occurred not once or twice, but twenty, fifty, or a hundred times.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. And that is because the New York dealer believes there will be a rise in Liverpool.

Mr. REAGAN. The stock gamblers may have on occasions made mistakes and raised prices above what the producers can get in this country or elsewhere, but to assume that the New York market controls the Liverpool market, I was about to say would be absurd, but I should not like to say that the Senator would be guilty of stating anything absurd. We all know, however—it is not worth while to argue the question—planters, manufacturers, and merchants all know that the price is controlled by the price in Liverpool and not in New York.

Mr. CHACE. How do you know it when it is not a fact?

Mr. REAGAN. I will not enter into a contention with the Senator about what the facts are.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator will look at the market reports he will find that it is occurring constantly.

Mr. REAGAN. I will not argue with the Senator about that. The Senate will judge whether he or I is right, and the country will judge, and no argument he can make will change that judgment.

Mr. CHACE. But it is a question of record. Can you not take the record, the market reports? I do not make the assertion on my own authority, but I say it can be easily demonstrated by the market reports, that over and over again the price of cotton has been higher in New York than in Liverpool on the same day.

Mr. MORGAN. On "spots" or "futures?"

Mr. CHACE. Both.

Mr. MORGAN. I deny that.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that the skill of those interested in class legislation exceeds the skill of almost any other class of people, sharpened, as it is, by the love of money. I do not propose to go into that.

Mr. CHACE. This is done by the Southern cotton men to force up the market.

Mr. REAGAN. I will ask the Senator to excuse me; we can not agree on that. I was trying to call attention to the fact that this great interest, which employs such a vast amount of money, such a vast amount of labor, in a vocation which is taxed for everything that goes to the support of the various favored interests, is again to be taxed, not as now, 35 per cent. ad valorem, but 108 per cent. ad valorem, as I understand the tax is to be as proposed by the Senate bill on this necessary article.

What reason is there for that? The Senator from New York chooses to say that it is sectional. Why, Mr. President, it is true that latitudes and longitudes are sectional, and perhaps the products of the different parts of the country are sectional; but here is a great interest of the country that is entitled to common fairness in the consideration of the public interests. The labor and capital which go into the making of cotton are as much entitled to the favor of Congress, and more, because so much larger than the interests which ask that that production be taxed for their protection beyond what is reasonable and just.

The Senator from New York said the North was in favor of protection. Does he mean by that to say sectional protection? He observed that we had taken the verdict of the American people on this question. It is true that the Republican party was successful in the recent Presidential election. It is true that the question of protection and a tariff for revenue were important questions in that contest; and yet it is true, in my opinion, that but for two other things, entirely outside of that question, the Republicans would have been defeated instead of being successful. One of them was the veto of the dependent-pension bill by the President, which indicated his wisdom, his statesmanship, his justice, and patriotism, but it encountered the self-interests of a sufficient number of men alone to have beaten him for the Presidency in the close division between parties.

Another is on a subject which may give a lesson to American statesmen—the subject of civil-service reform. But for the discontent in New York and Indiana on that single question, my opinion is that Mr. Cleveland would have been elected, independent of the tariff question; and, take the two together——

Mr. CHACE. Does the Senator mean discontented because the President did not carry out his pledges?

Mr. REAGAN. The discontent was not because he did not carry them out, but because he extended the principle of the law to offices not embraced in its terms and kept too many Republicans in office, which the law did not require him to do.

Mr. CHACE. Those Republicans who voted for him four years ago were very much dissatisfied inasmuch as he did not carry out his part of the bargain, because he failed to carry out his civil-service-reform pledges.

Mr. REAGAN. I know that has been said for party purposes, but history will not write it down that way.

Mr. DAWES. Does the Senator mean to say that the President's party deserted him because he would not break his pledges?

Mr. REAGAN. No, sir; I do not mean that and did not say that.

Mr. DAWES. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. REAGAN. If the Senator will possess himself in patience a moment he will see what I mean. I mean that it was his duty to carry out the law, to execute the law of Congress, but it was not his duty to extend the spirit of the law to other appointments and to other officers not embraced in the law itself.

Mr. DAWES. He said he would, did he not?

Mr. REAGAN. He did, but——

Mr. DAWES. And he kept his pledges, and enough of his party went back on him, because he kept his pledges, to defeat him.

Mr. REAGAN. The Senator I will not say is sharp, because he is a very pleasant gentleman; but I mean to say that there was discontent with the President's doctrine of civil-service reform, and the Senator himself will get plenty of evidence on that subject in a very short time. He will get abundant evidence of discontent with that doctrine of civil-service reform.

Mr. HISCOCK. The Senator from Texas will allow me to say that I think he will fail to find any evidence whatever in the State of New York of any discontent in the Democratic party with the President of the United States on account of his policy in respect to civil-service reform for the last year of his administration. If there is any discontent on that subject existing in New York, I have never met it, and I say to him it does not exist. They were entirely satisfied with the President and he has received the entire approval of his party on that question for the year preceding the election.

Mr. REAGAN. Now, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to submit to interruption for any question that is propounded to me, but I do not care to be being interrupted in the middle of every sentence for the injection of speeches, which I think do not rest on facts. The Senator from New York may be very good authority for Republican policy, Republican doctrine, and Republican opinions, but I profess to know as much as he about Democratic policy and opinions.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the Senator from Texas know of a discontented Democrat in New York—I mean discontented with Mr. Cleveland's policy with respect to civil service during the last year?

Mr. REAGAN. I have stated, and I have no occasion to restate it except in answer to what the Senator has said, that if the President had limited his action simply to carrying out the law and had not extended it to the exclusion of Democrats from offices to which they could have been appointed, in my opinion the result would have been different. That policy, I believe, changed enough votes to secure his defeat in the recent election. The Senator can have his opinion; I have mine, and that opinion is not shared by me alone. I will say to the Senator that he will have the test put upon him very soon about civil service, and the Republican advocates of an honest and earnest execution of the civil-service law who made themselves so conspicuous on that side of the Senate will get an opportunity to reread some of their speeches on that question during the next session of Congress. I have no doubt of it.

In presenting these things I simply mean to say that whether the President was right or not in vetoing the dependent-pension bill and in extending the operation of the civil-service law, in my opinion if his position had been different on those questions he would have been re-elected President without reference to the tariff issue. I presented these points for the purpose of showing that in my view the tariff question did not of itself control the result, while it had a most important influence on it. But whether it did or not, for twenty-odd years the protectionists, through the possession of newspapers and the employment of able writers, have been indoctrinating the American people into a belief in certain fallacies which by the debates of this Congress will be exploded. One of those fallacies is that high protection gives high wages. Now, sir, I do not think a grosser fallacy could enter the mind of man. If labor is scarce and there is a great demand for it its market value will be higher; if labor is abundant and the demand for it small its market value will be lower. If the country is prosperous the price of labor will be higher; if it is in an adverse condition the market value of labor will be lower. If money is abundant the price of labor will be higher; if money is scarce the price of labor will be lower.

Things like these control the price of labor, which, like any other commodity, brings simply what the market calls for, and is entirely independent of the question of whether duties are high or whether duties are low. I admit that when gentlemen get $50 of other people's money for every $100 of their own they are able to pay higher wages. But do they? Will they? I presume the practical experience of every Senator will teach him that there is no probability of any such thing occurring.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Texas think that people pay higher wages when they are able or when they are not able to do so?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, they are able to pay higher with one set of the conditions I have mentioned. They are under the necessity of paying higher wages when labor is scarce; they are able to pay higher wages when the country is prosperous; they are able to pay higher wages when money is abundant; but the way in which the Senator presents it would be simply going off from the main issue which I am trying to present.

That is one of the fallacies with which the American people have been inoculated, and which we mean they shall understand the other side of before this contest ends; it was not ended by the last election. It is but begun, and it will go on.

Another one of the fallacies was that the encouragement of domestic manufacturers gave us a market for agricultural products. That is the great stock argument, and has been for years, in favor of protection; and yet, as I stated in my remarks a little while back, after supplying all the demands of the local market, of merchants, of manufacturers, business men, and all others, last year there was $523,000,000 worth of agricultural products exported, being 74½ per cent. of all our exports, and that embraced perhaps $250,000,000 worth of cotton exported, and aided to give us the balance of trade and to swell the annual accumulation of gold in the Treasury of the United States.

It is the policy of these gentlemen, the reactionary policy, of making the tariff so high as to exclude imports, to build, as some gentlemen said during the canvass, a Chinese wall around this country, so that these $523,000,000 of agricultural products which were exported would have to rot upon the soil. It would have been a loss to the owners; it would have bankrupted this country. That would have been the effect of such a policy, and just to the extent to which this policy of the exclusion of imports goes it tends to the very evil to which I am referring.

That is another of the fallacies; and one other to which I will call attention, and to which I invite the attention of the Senate, is the assumption that agriculture is not one of the industries of this country. That industry which has over a billion dollars invested in it; that industry which 8,000,000 of the 17,000,000 of the American people are engaged in gainful occupations; that industry which does more to build up the manhood, the independence, and the respectability of the people of the American Republic than any other, is not only to be ignored, not fostered, not protected, but is to be made the source from which every class interest and every monopoly is to draw its advantages, its wealth, its immense fortunes.

Mr. HISCOCK. Right in that connection—it is well to have attention called to it here—that the agriculturist is not unmindful of the attentions that he has received, I call the Senator's attention to the fact that New York State went to Harlem River with 85,000 majority. That part of the State is fairly agricultural.

I call his attention to the 30,000 majority in Iowa—fairly agricultural. I call his attention to the 75,000 or 80,000 majority in Kansas—fairly an agricultural State. I call his attention to the agricultural districts of Michigan. I say to the Senator from Texas the agriculturists do not understand that they are being neglected and they do not understand that those who advocate the doctrines that the Senator from Texas does are their prophets; and I want to say to him that, so far as the agriculturist is concerned in the Northern States, he ranks beneath no other class in point of education, in point of a full and complete understanding of the necessities and needs of the great industry in which he is engaged.

Mr. REAGAN. I stated a little while ago, if the Senator had remembered it, that for twenty-odd years the protectionists had been engaged in educating the people to believe certain fallacies, and the Senator states the fruits of that education when he tells us of agricultural States that vote to plunder themselves for the benefit of class interests different from their own.

Mr. HISCOCK. The agriculturists of the North can listen to arguments on both sides, they hear both sides of this question, and they have sat as the judges of the arguments upon this great question, and they have seen themselves thrive where those industries that are protected are established. They have seen their markets established: they have seen that they were not compelled to depend upon a foreign market for their prosperity and for the sale of their goods. It has been built up around them and we have felt that they enjoyed the blessings of this protective system.

As I said a moment ago, they have heard both sides. Those believing as the Senator does in our State have discussed the question with them, and in this last canvass it has been a forum in which those from his State and sister States believing as his State does have had a fair and a complete hearing. It is because our people recognize the blessings of this protective system that they are wedded to it. Go among them, if you please. Look at their wealth, look at their increase of wealth during the last two decades, and in that is found the reason. Look at the increase of their educational facilities, and in that also is a reason.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to yield further. I did not yield for a speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas declines to yield further.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Texas will allow me a moment, in connection with the remark of the Senator from New York upon the people reading both sides, I wish to suggest also to the Senator from Texas that the President's message, which was largely an appeal to the farmers upon this issue, was more extensively circulated among the farmers of the North and the Northwest by the Democratic committees than any other document that has been before the people for years, the circulation being millions upon millions, which the farmers read and answered in the election.

Mr. REAGAN. I am aware, sir, that the President's message was very extensively circulated; but I go back to the point of my first statement, that the people have been educated wrong, and in a single canvass of a few months there has not been time to correct the errors into which they had been led; but I assure the Senator, without any attempt at prophecy, but resting alone upon reason and a sense of justice, that he will find that the American people are not going to make a permanent policy of plundering the agricultural and laboring and professional classes for the benefit of manufacturers to the extent of from 30 to 100 per cent. as a permanent policy.

Mr. DAWES. We all agree with you as to that.

Mr. REAGAN. I am glad to have the verbal agreement suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, but I should be more delighted if Senators would only put it in the bill we have before us.

Mr. DAWES. We have got it in now.

Mr. REAGAN. In response to what was said by the Senator from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] about the prosperity of the farmers of the North, I regret that I did not anticipate that such a question would arise for discussion to-day, so that I might have shown what is partially shown in Mr. Blaine's book, the enormous increase of wealth in the manufacturing States, the relative depression in the non-manufacturing States of the West and South, and the fact that the people of the manufacturing States own a very large portion of the property in the non-manufacturing States of the Northwest which have been mentioned, and among them the State from which my friend the Senator from Iowa comes. The manufacturing capitalists and other capitalists in the East who urge this legislation hold mortgages enough upon the land and the farms and homes of Ohio, of Indiana, of Illinois, of Michigan, of Iowa, of Wisconsin, and of Minnesota, if they were enforced, to bankrupt those States to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I can not speak for Michigan or for Ohio, but I assure the Senator from Texas that the farmers of Iowa were never more prosperous than they are now and never better able to pay any debts they owe.

Mr. CULLOM. The same is true of Illinois.

Mr. REAGAN. That may be, but that does not alter the fact that to-day the farms are mortgaged for I do not know how much, but for many millions. The farms of Iowa are mortgaged to Eastern capital extorted from the people through class legislation for the promotion of class interests. But, Mr. President, this discussion was unexpected to me and I shall not pursue it further.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. HALE. I desire to call up the House bill making appropriations for the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and to ask that it be put on its passage, as the need for it is immediate in the other branch of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The bill will be laid before the Senate.

The bill (H. R. 11764) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriations for the contingent expenses of the House of Representatives was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. The Committee on Appropriations has informally considered this bill and recommend its passage.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $12,000 to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for miscellaneous items and expenses of the special and select committees of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year 1889.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, in response to a resolution of the Senate of August 26, 1888, concerning certain canceled desert-land applications; which, on motion of Mr. STEWART, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives non-concurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7935) for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist on its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. JONES of Arkansas, and Mr. STOCKBRIDGE.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HISCOCK. If the Senator from New Jersey will allow me one moment, I should like to say——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator from New Jersey declines to yield to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is entitled to the floor.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, a few moments ago I believe I asked the same courtesy from the Senator from New York to be allowed to finish a statement which I had commenced to make and he refused me the privilege of finishing it. In my own right I will now complete my statement.

The Senator from New York was making a severe criticism on some observations of mine on yesterday with respect to this paragraph of the bill, and he called attention to the fact, and he seemed to argue as though it were a virtue which ought to be appreciated and recognized, that, inasmuch as the entire cost of hooping a bale of cotton did not exceed 20 cents, nobody had the right to complain. I undertook to illustrate this fallacy by an illustration which I thought was very apt. A day or two ago I was shown a knife purchased in the wilds of California. It was manufactured abroad, it paid a duty, it paid transportation not only across the ocean but across the continent. The purchase price of the knife was 10 cents, and a very respectable-looking knife indeed it was. The retail price of the knife 6,000 miles from the place of manufacture was 10 cents.

Now, the Senator from New York, as a member of the Finance Committee of this body, proposes a tariff duty on that knife of 233 per cent., and yet upon the same hypothesis which he has employed in the discussion of this bill, I presume he would say, "What right have you to find fault with a duty of 233 per cent. on a knife that costs only 10 cents?"

That is the illustration I intended to make. I am glad now to have the opportunity of doing so. In other words, if it costs only 20 cents to hoop a bale of cotton, who has the right to complain? But when you come to multiply that 20 cents by 7,000,000 bales of cotton, all of which have to be baled, you make up quite a large sum.

When the Senator undertakes to make it appear also that this is a sectional matter he forgets to remember that the whole product of the cotton crop as compared with the other benefits that are to flow in this paragraph to the immense hay crop of this country, which, I think, statistics will prove is even more valuable than the cotton crop, the immense amount of products which are packed in barrels, which is also found in this proviso, he will find that this amendment is not quite so sectional as he is anxious to make it appear to be.

I only rose for the purpose of completing my illustration upon the knife. Now, I want to state ——

Mr. BLAIR. Upon the cotton-tie question I am not informed. I should like to ask the Senator what the cotton-tie costs a pound, or about what it costs a pound.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do not know. It is not important. It is an ad valorem duty we are dealing with.

Mr. BLAIR. It may not be important, but if it is important I wish to know how to vote on my side of the Chamber. I wish to inquire the cost of the cotton, the price at which cotton is ordinarily sold by the man who uses the ties upon it.

Mr. McPHERSON. We were informed in the discussion on the floor on yesterday by Senators who live in the cotton country and claim to be conversant with the whole affair that these cotton-ties are largely imported; in fact all the ties used are imported.

Mr. BLAIR. I was only inquiring the price of cotton.

Mr. McPHERSON. And that on ties there is now a duty paid by the owners of the cotton of 35 per cent., and further, that these cotton bales go to Liverpool, where there is a tare for the ties of 24 pounds a bale, for which the man who grew the cotton and paid for the ties gets nothing back. In other words, it is an absolute loss to him.

Mr. President, I simply want to call attention to the fact that the structure of this entire bill has a perfect illustration and exemplification seemingly in the tin-plate industry. Here is an industry which under the indirect bounty offered by this Government to manufacturers of tin-plate during all these years has amounted to almost $6,000,000 tax a year upon the people, and with this indirect bounty the Government has offered to encourage a tin-plate industry, there is not to-day a single dollar of American capital nor a single American laborer employed in the manufacture of the product. All of our fruits, all of our vegetables, all our meats, all our fish, and all other products must needs be packed in these tin cans. The people who consume the product necessarily pay the tax of 1 cent a pound; the Government receives a revenue of $6,000,000 a year, and the Government does not need it.

Now, for one, I think that that tax might reasonably be remitted and left with the people to fructify their industries, for certainly the people need the money, rather than to pay it over to the Government in a tax year after year upon the absolute necessaries of life, and a tax which the Government does not need.

I also thought that perhaps there might be a point where in absolute justice we might make remission in this tax. We find a duty upon the iron used for cotton-ties of 35 per cent. ad valorem, which certainly is more than full compensation for all the labor employed in its manufacture. I have thought that that duty might be allowed to remain as it is if we could not succeed in getting the article upon the free-list, which, to my mind, would be infinitely better; and when I undertook to make that plain to the Senator from New York he refused to listen. Now, I wish to extend proper courtesy to the Senator from New York, and I will yield the floor to him.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am greatly obliged to the Senator from New Jersey. I did not desire the floor for the purpose of asking him a question. There was a remark that I thought would properly follow the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], and therefore what I proposed to say was rather in reply to a suggestion of his than to any question that I desired to ask the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I think this cotton-tax question can be argued upon its own merits aside from any effect of the late Presidential election, because I feel pretty sure that no part of the people of the United States have passed judgment upon the question whether a cotton-tie ought to come in free of duty or not. That is a question which is somewhat peculiar owing to the situation of the market in which we are obliged to sell the cotton crop. I have been somewhat surprised this morning to hear the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] assert that the market in Liverpool was not the controlling market of the cotton crop of the United States. I had never heard that assertion made before in any part of this country, either by any intelligent man or by anybody else. I believe it is a conceded fact that the markets for the excess of products made in the United States, wheat, corn, pork, lard, beef, or what not that we have for disposal are regulated by the European markets. The cotton crop has its clearing-house, if I may call it so, for all nations of the earth in the city of Liverpool, and it is there that the cotton of all the nations is priced.

While there may be fluctuations, owing to speculative efforts in the city of New York or elsewhere in the United States, which sometimes run the price of cotton up for a day or two a point beyond what it is in the Liverpool market, when we come to take the aggregate prices of the Liverpool market and the markets of the United States, not in New York only, but in the manufacturing districts and in all the places of the United States where cotton is sold, we find that the Liverpool market controls absolutely. It certainly controls the wheat and corn market and the provision market or the market in regard to any other great agricultural product where we produce a very large excess above our needs at home.

I must assume, however much I may differ from the Senator from Rhode Island, that the market in Liverpool for cotton does fix the price of it in every hamlet in the United States, and fixes it also in every factory and in every great city of the United States as a permanent thing. Not only does it fix the market, but other arrangements are made in respect of the packing of cotton and the sale of it in the city of Liverpool which are followed implicitly in every mart in the world where any cotton is sold. Now, to illustrate this, we find that hemp bagging has disappeared as a wrapping of cotton, gone entirely out of use. It might be supposed that this was due to the fact that jute bagging or some other form of cotton-baling was cheaper than hemp. That is not the reason, Mr. President. The Liverpool merchants have decreed against hemp bagging because the manufacturers in England have discarded it, the reason being that the shives in the hemp bagging get into the delicate machinery for cotton spinning, break it up, and make it a very inconvenient and destructive material for putting up this important crop. Nothing of that sort is found in the jute bagging, and hence the substitution of jute for hemp to such an extent that I suppose it would now be impossible to market a bale of cotton in the city of Liverpool wrapped in hemp bagging. For a reason not quite so important, but one growing out of convenience more than anything else, hemp rope and jute rope, or any other kind of rope, have been substituted by the iron cotton-tie, that being a safer method of putting up the bale of cotton, protecting it better against fire and against the weather, and being in many respects much more convenient than the cordage with which the bales were theretofore put up.

The price of cotton being regulated in Liverpool, the manner of its packing being regulated there, the manner of marketing cotton being regulated in Liverpool, the rest of the world necessarily follows suit in respect to every one of these particulars in regard to the preparation of cotton for market and in respect of the price of cotton. We find that the Liverpool merchants deduct a tare of 24 pounds per bale upon cotton which averages 450 pounds, according to the selling standard in Liverpool. They do it arbitrarily, but they have the power to do it because they control the market, five-sevenths of the cotton produced in the United States being sent to Liverpool for a market of necessity, because we have no market for this surplus anywhere else.

It is worthy of remark also that the spinners in Germany and in France buy very largely their cotton from Liverpool, so that the control of the manner of sale and of the conditions upon which cotton is to be sold in those countries is as much in the hands of the Liverpool merchants as is the control of the market in the United States. They deduct 24 pounds tare from every bale. Now, I wish to observe in this connection that if the people of the United States had the power to handle their own crops, if they could concentrate the capital that is necessary to handle this crop and withhold it from the market except upon such terms and conditions as they chose to put it out for the consumption of the world, these arbitrary regulations that exist in Liverpool could not possibly affect our condition in regard to this market; but unfortunately we are not in that situation. My mind looks to the future, to a point of time, I hope not in the far distant future, when by concentrated capital and arrangement the people of the South, or the people of the United States I will say, will have the power to control this enormous crop, of such great value to our country, to that extent that they will prescribe the terms and conditions upon which it shall be marketed, and not be compelled to go in a beggarly way to foreign markets, there to take what they choose to put upon us as the rule governing the disposition of the crop.

But here stands the fact that five-sevenths of the cotton crop of the United States must be disposed of in Liverpool, and then the other fact that this gives the Liverpool merchant and spinner the power to demand of us that we shall deduct from every bale of cotton 24 pounds, without respect to the condition in which it arrives at market. A good bale has as much deducted from it as a bad bale. A bale wrapped in jute or in cotton cloth must sustain an equal reduction; that is, 24 pounds of cotton are taken out of the weight of the bale, which, at 10 cents a pound, amounts to $2.40 off the value of every bale of cotton. It is needless for us to inquire why this is done. All that we know about it is that this $2.40 worth of cotton upon the estimate that I have made is absolutely lost from the bale. Who accounts for it? Nobody. Who gets the profit of it? If there is any profit in it, or saving in it at all, it is gained by the merchant, or by the spinner—ultimately, I suppose, by the spinner in Europe. How does that affect the planter, the man who grows the cotton? It affects him in this way, that his bale of cotton which weighs 524 pounds or 424 pounds is sold as a bale weighing only 500 pounds or 400 pounds.

Therefore the price of the entire bale of cotton is regulated by this tax. Who ever raises a bale of cotton weighing 524 pounds understands perfectly well that if it is worth 10 cents a pound he must lose 24 pounds of cotton or $2.40 of its value. This tare, therefore, being deducted on account of the weight of the bagging and ties is the same loss to the farmer as if this covering were good cotton.

It is found that the loss from stain or from the cotton being in any way damaged on the surface forms ordinarily a very small part of the estimate of tare of 24 pounds per bale. I think, Mr. President, that that is a misfortune to the cotton-grower against which we have no power to guard by legislation, because we are prohibited by the Constitution from putting an export tax upon cotton. We are bound to have free trade, under the Constitution, in cotton. We are bound to send it abroad to foreign countries without levying any duty upon it in our marts which we could compel foreigners to pay, as the Brazilians compel us to pay a duty that goes into their treasury upon every pound of coffee exported from that country to the United States.

We are obliged by the Constitution to have literal free trade in our cotton productions, as we are also in respect of wheat and corn and pork and other products that are grown more largely in the Northern and Western States. More than that, this free-trade feature in regard to the cotton sale and exportation compels it to seek markets at places where people are alleged to be paupers, where they are alleged to be so poor, so broken down or weighed down with adversities——

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alabama suspend until the Chair makes an announcement? There is a special order for this hour to-day, the title of which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

Mr. ALLISON. That order was made subject to the tariff bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly; but the Chair wished to reserve any rights the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] might claim for it.

Mr. FRYE. I trust I shall be pardoned for a moment. I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa who has the pending bill in charge whether or not he insists upon going on with it to its completion?

Mr. ALLISON. I feel obliged to insist upon it.

Mr. FRYE. And he will not yield for the consideration of this funding bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not.

Mr. FRYE. Then will the Senator from Alabama pardon me a moment?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. I do not understand that it is necessary to make an assignment of this bill to any particular time. I understand that it comes up really every day at 2 o'clock as an assignment from day to day under the rule. Does the Chair so understand?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is uncertain whether that be the case or not.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator will allow me to suggest that it remains a special order. Of course the unfinished business takes precedence of it until the unfinished business is disposed of, but when the unfinished business is disposed of this bill will be the first special order in point of time. If this is the first special order made it will be before the Senate no matter on what day that state of facts may exist.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the Senator from Tennessee, if there are other special orders, however, having precedence of it, does it not affect the relation of those special orders to this?

Mr. HARRIS. Not at all, for they take precedence in the order in which they were made special rather than in the order of days upon which they were to be considered as special orders. That is, the first special order made in point of time would be the first order of business.

Mr. FRYE. Then the Senator from Tennessee does not understand that any advantage is gained by having this bill assigned to a day forward?

Mr. HARRIS. I think not.

Mr. FRYE. That was my impression.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It holds its place after the unfinished business is concluded.

Mr. FRYE. If the Chair so holds, I make no further request.

WASHINGTON AQUEDUCT TUNNEL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I crave leave at this time to offer a concurrent resolution, and I ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be received and read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the existence and powers of the joint select committee in respect to the Washington Aqueduct tunnel and the water supply of Washington, created by the concurrent resolution of the two Houses passed October 8, 1888, be continued during the present session of Congress to such time after January 1, 1889, as shall be necessary, in the judgment of said committee, for the complete execution of its duties.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont to explain to the Senate whether it is the purpose of the resolution to give to members of the present House whose term of office will expire after the 4th of March an authority analogous to that of committees of the body, and if so, on what foundation the authority rests?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly not, Mr. President. It is not the purpose and it is not the scope of the resolution. My friend did not hear it correctly. It provides simply that the existence and powers of this committee shall continue during the present session of this Congress until such time after the 1st day of January, when its powers now are to expire, as shall be necessary to complete its work.

Mr. HOAR. Let the resolution be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. HOAR. My attention was not called to the resolution until the reading had partly progressed, and I did not observe the limitation which seems to be there. I desire, however, to say, as I have said something about it heretofore, that I doubt very much the expediency or the wisdom of having such a service as this imposed upon a joint committee of the two Houses. I think each House had better deal with a subject by itself, as a general rule, and that is the general practice; but as this committee has begun its duties, of course it should be allowed to complete them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree entirely with the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the general propriety of each House conducting its own investigations in its own way and under its own authority. I was not in the city when this committee was finally appointed, and found myself a member of it much against my own wishes, and endeavored to get excused but without success. However, finding myself a member of it I thought it a duty to execute the will of the Senate and the House of Representatives to the best of my ability.

The committee since the adjournment of Congress has been from time to time strenuously and deliberately engaged in pursuing this investigation. There are nearly 4 miles of tunnel, and it requires a long period of time, with the utmost that can be done, to ascertain the present condition of its lining, etc., which work is being executed under our direction with the utmost possible dispatch consistent with the certainty which we think Congress desired us to come to about it.

It is quite impossible for our engineers to complete the examination of the work that has been done before the 1st day of January, and it will take some time afterwards. The committee, therefore, desiring to execute what the two Houses have imposed upon them to do, in the best manner they were capable of, thought it fit to suggest that we must have more time to accomplish it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have found out what I did not know before I came here—I have been away until to-day—that the resolution for the consideration of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain in open session and the resolution to amend the rule in regard to the consideration of the extradition treaty, which, as is well known to Senators, are one and the same thing, have been reported without recommendation. I give notice that I shall move every morning in the morning hour to take up the resolutions for consideration, but I shall endeavor not to interfere with the business after the morning hour. I think there was an agreement or an understanding that the Senate would consider the matter somewhere about the first Monday of December, and I should like to get it under consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that as I remember it is a matter which belongs to the executive session of the Senate and not the legislative session.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But the resolution to consider the treaty in open session is on the open Calendar.

Mr. MORGAN. I did not know that.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I beg your pardon, sir; it is. I know that it was always put into executive session before it was considered, but the motion was made in open session. If my suggestion interferes with the remarks of the Senator from Alabama I shall wait until to-morrow.

Mr. MORGAN. I would prefer to proceed with my remarks now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Very well.

THE REVENUE LAWS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9051) to reduce taxation and simplify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas.

Mr. MORGAN. The people to whom we sell this cotton, Mr. President, are alleged to be paupers, so poor and so weighed down with governmental and other difficulties and misfortunes that they are willing even to labor for their daily bread at rates of wages which our people here can not afford to take and which we are not willing to impose upon our people in our tariff legislation. You send our cotton crop out under this free-trade arrangement amongst paupers and beggars and lazzaroni to find a market among a people unable to buy to any great extent and certainly unable to buy it at any fair price, and yet those very people have the pricing of the whole crop; not only that which is carried abroad, but every pound that is manufactured in the United States.

The spinners and weavers in the Northern States, or elsewhere in this country, receive the advantage of a depressed price put upon that crop, by necessity, through the inability of the poorer people of other parts of the world across the ocean, including all upon the continents of Europe, Africa, and Asia, to pay a fair price for it, hence the depression in the prices of this staple in our vaunted home market. They do not seem to object to that at all. On the contrary, they are willing not only to buy cotton, flour, and provisions from the people of the United States at the prices of the foreign market, but go to one of them to sell a bale of cotton for the purpose of being spun into cloth or thread and they will at once quote upon you the Liverpool market, and when you investigate what the Liverpool market means you find that it means the measure of the capacity of the poorest class of people in the world to buy that which we produce, and at their own prices—regulated by their poverty. That is the situation as to every agricultural production, and that can not be altered, unfortunately, unless we determine not to produce a surplus. We can not change it. The Constitution is in the way of any change; and it will never be changed, as I remarked a while ago, until the people of the South reach that degree of prosperity or that degree of unity and harmony in their financial combinations that they will control the sale of the cotton crop of the United States.

It occurs to me, Mr. President, that it is a heartless thing, yes, a very cruel and a very heartless thing, for gentlemen who profit continually by the low prices of cotton in foreign marts thus caused and thus enforced against us, to want to lay heavier burdens upon the cotton-planter than he now bears. I do not come into this Senate as a beggar for the cotton-planter. I do not put up a plea for the few thousands or hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars we have to spend and throw away under this system of law, but what I claim is justice, and I claim at least humanity in the action of those men who are profiting continually by a state of affairs which we can not help and which is put upon us by the power of foreign communities. These loud declaimers for a home market for the farmer know that the home market in which they purchase all their necessary food and clothing has its list of prices fixed on the other side of the ocean by people who, they assure us, are paupers and are not able to pay a fair price for anything we can send to their markets.

Mr. ALDRICH. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. ALDRICH. In case of an increase of duty upon cotton-ties, does the Senator from Alabama think the cotton-planter would feel the increase?

Mr. MORGAN. I have not any more doubt about it than I have that I am bound to pay for a meal's victuals when I go to a hotel and inscribe my name on the register.

Mr. ALDRICH. And that burden will finally rest upon him?

Mr. MORGAN. I say that, in the beginning and in the end, it will rest upon him, and nobody can take it off him by any fair logic. Certainly the experience of the country shows this. If there is any logical process by which men can deceive themselves into a belief of that kind, as implied in the Senator's question, it is utterly futile and not worthy of the consideration of a mind that professes to be governed by common sense.

I think, sir, that under these peculiar conditions it is the duty of the Senate of the United States in framing a tariff bill to try to lift this burden off this people, and not, as is done by the bill of the Finance Committee of the Senate, raise the duty 100 per cent. The House bill proposes to make this article duty free. The amendment which is offered here proposes to make it duty free. The Senate Finance Committee bill takes the duty as it was before and adds 100 per cent. to that duty. There is no reason for it. There can be none unless there is still some remaining disposition on the part of our friends in the Northern States to retaliate upon our pocket-books for some disagreements that have existed between us heretofore, or that may now exist politically. I would recommend Senators to retaliate on something else besides the pocket-books of the people of the South, which are very thin, very meager, and especially that they will not extend their retaliation to the pocket-books of the negroes.

Now, what is this cotton crop about which we are talking? This year it rates at about 7,000,000 bales, which is rather a short crop. It may run two or three hundred thousand bales beyond that. What was it in 1860? Scarcely 3,000,000 bales. What has caused this increase in the amount of production of cotton? The negroes have been turned loose; that system of labor which was supposed to have been thoroughly organized and to have gotten out of that race of people the last bit of physical exertion they were capable of has been dissolved. The women of that race no longer work in the fields, except where they prefer to do it. The children are not engaged in agriculture or anything else, for the Bedouin donkey-drivers in the streets of Alexandria are a more promising set of people to-day than the young negroes who are being raised in the South, and that is not our fault. We made more of them than that when they were in slavery; not that we want the care of that institution restored to us or thrust back upon us, but these are the facts. Who, then, has put on this 4,000,000 additional bales of cotton to our annual production? The white men and white women and white children of the South.

Go through my State, or any other Southern State, and you will find not merely in the fall of the year when the crop is to be gathered, but you will find all through the period of cultivation, the man at the head of his household, with his wife by his side, and his grown daughters, and his little daughters, and his boys following along, he keeping the foremost row with his plow or his hoe, as it may be, and they are cultivating the ground to produce these 4,000,000 bales in excess of what the negroes and planters could raise in 1860. That is the situation, and to these people who are charged here frequently with idleness and unthrift are we and all mankind indebted for the vast increase of this invaluable staple.

I have sympathy for those people, and I profess to be willing to lift the burden off them whenever I have an opportunity, without injustice to the country; and inasmuch as I have not the ability, and I know no man on this floor has the ability, to frame a statute or the part of a statute that will give to any of those people what you call "protection," my duty is to see that we give them relief. You can not protect the man in the cotton-field; no law that you can devise will enable that man to share in the bounty of the tariff enactments of this country, which are falsely called "protection." You can not gather money by taxation from the people of the United States and distribute it by law into the hands of these people through any tariff legislation that you can possibly enact. Then what are you going to do for them? Why, sir, if protection is a doctrine of the Constitution of the United States, it means protection for the consumer as well as protection for the manufacturer, for I have yet to learn that there is any man or any class of men in the United States who are debarred from an equal participation in the privileges of the Constitution of the country. If the use of the tax laws to gather money out of the hands of the tax-payers and distribute it into the hands of other people is a constitutional use of power connected with taxation, then I claim that it shall be exercised in such a way as that the consumer, the farmer, the cotton-grower shall have his adequate part in that constitutional protection.

If the laborer in this country is entitled to have the tax laws so arranged as to increase his earnings, no laborer is better entitled to this help than the cotton-grower. You can not give it to him by statute. You can not frame a law so as to put his money back into his hands. You can not possibly discriminate in your taxation in his favor by levying a higher tax than revenue demands upon any commodity imported into the United States. That is impossible. Then what is the next thing? What is it my duty to contend for as their representative? That you shall lift the burdens, lift every burden that you can, and let these people have a chance to live, to prosper by that labor which requires the time of the whole year to plant and mature and gather and market the crop.

Upon that principle, Mr. President, if there were no other fact in this case, I should have a thoroughly just and honest and constitutional ground for appealing to Senators to take off the duty upon cotton-ties and cotton-bagging and to allow them to come in free to this country.

It is a sin against justice and against humanity that we should force the growers of cotton to sell their crops, all they can grow, indeed, at prices fixed in the cheap markets of Europe, and then tax them to put money into the pockets of the men who purchase in the home markets their produce at pauper prices, and spin and weave their cotton for sale.

What work is it that these people are doing for the United States of America? Suppose you strike out the amount of money that has been produced annually by the cotton-growers of the United States since 1866 and you can imagine then what would have been the condition of the public debt of this country and of its finances. Sir, this country would have gone to ruin; chaos would have taken possession if its financial condition. You can not strike out the annual production of the cotton-grower without bringing wreck and ruin upon the whole of this land. It is a cash crop, a crop that is marketed for gold in any market of this earth, it makes no odds what may be the difference between gold and other species of circulating medium. It is a crop which, when it is baled up carefully, will keep for five or ten years without any deterioration; not like flour or wheat that the weevil will eat up, or bacon that will grow rancid, or lard that will spoil, or beef that will deteriorate. It is the most reliable commercial crop that was ever grown in any country. It is a crop without which no man in this world can decently or comfortably exist who has got any idea of civilization, even the most faint.

The Hottentot as he hunts the elephant and the rhinoceros and the ostrich through the plains of Africa, must have his cotton turban on his head and his cotton clout about his loins. The wildest Indian in the world, even the Esquimaux up in their cold and frozen zone, is not able to do without it, and if I could pass a decree upon this Senate today that no Senator here during the residue of his natural life should wear an article of cotton clothing, I do not know how I could inflict upon him a more severe discomfort. There is no class of humanity, there is no condition of humanity, there is no zone or latitude or longitude to which the cotton production does not find its way as one of the chiefest of the comforts of mankind, and also the very first civilizer of the human family, as well as the decorator of mankind in the very highest and most beautiful reaches of civilization. It is a commodity of universal use, and we who contribute it in the United States below a certain isothermal line which it will not cross in its growth, are not rendering to the people of the United States anything but profit and strength in all their relations. The contribution from the agricultural fields of the South in this one product alone is equal to the labors of any other class of men that can be named in this world in its beneficial effects upon the Government and upon the social industries and institutions of the people of the United States.

There is still another reason, an American reason, why the spirit of the legislation presented in the majority report of the Finance Committee should be totally reversed. I call it an American reason. Why do I do that? If you remember, during the four years of blockade that occurred while the civil war here was in progress, cotton went up from about 7 or 8 cents in the pound to 50 or 60. During that period the Government of Great Britain and the Governments of Germany and of France all put to work their enormous money power in their vast possessions, colonial and otherwise, in the tropics and in the torrid zone, wherever they had a place that a cotton-plant would grow, they put forth every effort of skill and the power of money and every facility of transportation for the purpose of supplying that necessary staple which was withdrawn by the blockade of the Southern coasts. And yet we find, in spite of all their assiduous efforts, that cotton rose and rose in the markets of the world until it went from 7 cents to 50 cents or even 60 cents a pound in gold in foreign countries.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. A dollar.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no doubt it went to a dollar, but I am trying to state everything within the line.

What does that mean? It means that cotton, after all, is an American product, and when I plead for its exemption from this duty I am far more concerned in fastening upon the legislation of this body a principle favorable to the production and manufacture of cotton than I am concerned for the amount of money that we should get rid of under this tax upon cotton-ties or upon bagging. I claim it peculiarly as an American production. Why so? Because, from the facts of physical geography that we did not create and can not undo and that will last while the conformation of the earth is just what it is now, the Southern States of the American Union as far north as the crest of the Appalachian range, and no further north, will have the monopoly of the growth of the cotton plant in that quality that it is most useful in the manufactures which are needed by mankind.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And in the North we have the monopoly of wheat, I suppose.

Mr. MORGAN. You have it now. I am not drawing distinctions between the North and the South. I am trying to convince the honorable Senator from Vermont that I am an American.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, I admit that.

Mr. MORGAN. And that I appreciate this because it is an American production, and that I value it as an American production, and I think that an American Senator ought to be able to get over his sectional views sufficiently to look at it in this broad light.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is exactly what I think, and when American Senators from Alabama and Vermont agree that they will promote the industries of both States and productions alike and of all the other States, and get over the fallacy that the doctrinaires have taught that prices fall if you take off customs duties as a consequence, then we shall get on much better together.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not propose to follow the Senator from Vermont in his black-letter definitions about tariffs and tariff fallacies. They have been with him a long time, and I do not think he will ever get over them. I am sure he will not. I was discussing a different branch of this question entirely, to which his suggestion has not the slightest relevancy at all. I was insisting that by reason of the physical geography of this continent we have the monopoly in the Southern States of the cotton growth—not all the Southern States, but those that reach to the crest of the Appalachian range—and that this fact made it an American production and will continue to make it and hold it as an American production, in monopoly, as long as time shall last unless the configuration of the continent is changed.

These are American facts because God made them such, and we can not justly ignore them.

Now, you may take the oldest red-hill in South Carolina, or Georgia, and fertilize it with any description of fertilization that you please, which is valuable, and you can make more cotton to the acre upon it than you could when it was virgin soil. There are men in the State of Georgia who have taken those old red-hills and by fertilization have made three bales to the acre and gathered them and weighed them and carried them to market and sold them, and yet the richest acre of land in the bottoms of the Mississippi River or the Arkansas River will not make exceeding a bale and a half under the highest cultivation that you can bestow upon it.

Cotton, therefore, in the Southern States is a plant that depends upon the climate, and the climate is caused by the physical geography of the country with its attendant meteorological arrangements, and it is not because of a peculiarity in the soil, nor is it because of the degree of latitude in which the cotton is found, that it is grown successfully. You may search for cotton-fields, going south along the Atlantic coast, and the first one that you will find is in the vicinity of Petersburgh, in Virginia. If you will strike a line due west from that cotton-field, when you get to the Mississippi River or beyond the Mississippi River, you would have to go perhaps 100 miles south of that line before you would strike another cotton-field, showing that it is not the latitude but something else that controls in this matter.

You go on down the foot-hills of the Appalachian range, upon that bench of land that lies between that range and the South Atlantic Ocean, and you will find it a continuous cotton country until you come to Chattanooga, in Tennessee. There you will find a very slight divergence to the north through some of the valleys of the State of Tennessee. You will cross with the cotton line about the northwestern point of the Tennessee boundary into Missouri, and there you will swing down to the Ozark Mountains; and you will follow the crest of the Ozark Mountains far down into Arkansas until you get to Fort Smith. After you have reached Fort Smith you will ascend the Arkansas River into the Cherokee Nation but a few miles until the cotton belt disappears.

It does not appear in Kansas at all, which is a country of great fertility. Then you go on a line from that point to the Cherokee Nation, about to Piedras Negras, on the Rio Grande, and there you find the northern limit and the western limit of this isothermal line which bounds the cotton-growing region of that country. East and south of this line cotton will mature; north and west of it it will not mature into a good commercial staple.

Now, what is the reason for this? It is obvious, Mr. President, that the shelter of these high ranges of mountains makes the seasons south of them and east of them longer than they are to the west and north of them. It requires a longer season to grow cotton than it does any other plant that is indigenous in the United States.

We have the longer season produced by this and other natural causes. Here come the trade-winds that pass across the Gulf of Mexico, across the South Atlantic, across the Gulf Stream, that give off an enormous amount of moisture with an average temperature of the surface of 83° by the thermometer. They take up the warm moisture from these oceans and seas and waft it to the lands, and at the crest of the Appalachian range they meet the colder currents of air coming to the south, and there the moisture is precipitated that is necessary to produce and nurture the cotton plant.

Here we have a long season. We have heat and moisture in combination, warm rains early in the season that give us this wonderful power of producing cotton in the United States, which is not equaled upon any other of the continents or islands of this earth.

All the great nations have searched the globe in vain to find a cotton region that can in any profitable degree rival this peculiar nursery of the cotton plant, so important to us as a source of national wealth.

Cotton is therefore peculiarly an American production, and in that one fact there is as much of future power and prosperity in this country as you can gather from any other fact on which the future is to depend in respect of our progress. This is not a crop to be ignored or lightly laid aside, nor should those who grow it be maltreated or treated with jealousy or suspicion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask my friend, the Senator from Alabama, if the precise and first practical question now and here is not whether putting cotton-ties on the free-list will benefit the producer or baler of cotton in respect of reducing the price of those ties?

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I think it will, Mr. President. Perhaps the Senator from Vermont and I differ about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am on the question whether that is not the precise point that is up for consideration.

Mr. MORGAN. It is not the point of my remarks at this moment. I do not know what is in the Senator's mind. I am discussing this question in my own way. I should be very glad to accommodate the Senator by narrowing my remarks and confining them to his own particular proposition, perhaps; but I prefer to take a more liberal view of it.

I prefer, Mr. President, before coming to the minute suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, that I should confine my remarks to the question whether the planters would get the cotton-tie cheaper under free trade, free of duty, than they would under the tariff, to make some further statements about the general utility, power, and influence of the cotton production. I think if the Senate could have a proper estimate of the value of this crop as an American crop, and of the embarrassments that it is enthralled with in consequence of our constitutional provision and the laws of trade which we are unable as yet to master, there are several things in connection with the cotton industry upon which they would be disposed to relax the severity of their burdens considerably.

I think, for instance, they would be disposed to take off a large part of the tariff duties upon cotton-spinning machinery in order that we might locate our manufactories near to the fields and commence there the spinning and weaving of cotton in its rudimental forms, and particularly that we might be enabled thereby to manufacture the bagging for our cotton, which now costs us $7,000,000 a year, estimating it at a dollar a bale. For this we are dependent entirely on foreign countries, because it is made almost exclusively of jute, not grown here, and a very large portion of which at least is spun and woven in foreign countries.

Mr. RANSOM. No, it is woven here.

Mr. MORGAN. But it is under a trust.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the article the Senator is now alluding to?

Mr. MORGAN. Jute.

Mr. ALDRICH. What is the article which he says is spun from jute?

Mr. MORGAN. Cotton-bagging.

Mr. ALDRICH. It is all made entirely in this country; it is not made in Europe at all.

Mr. MORGAN. We know since the trust got hold of it that it has been made here. I understand that.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been no trust at all within three or four months.

Mr. MORGAN. Never mind about the months; it has been here.

Mr. ALDRICH. There has been no trust since June.

Mr. MORGAN. The patient is convalescing, but is not well, and the Senate can, by administering a little tonic here in this legislation, make it entirely well.

Mr. RANSOM. We broke down the trust.

Mr. MORGAN. We broke it down by not buying. That is the way we broke it down. We had to combine against it.

There are various matters of legislation connected with this great American industry of cotton growing that need the attention of this body. That crop and the growers of it need relief; they need help. They can not get it in the form of protection. It is impossible that they can get it in that form. I say that the true policy, one that everybody ought to agree in, is to lift from these people all the unnecessary burdens, to say the least of it, under which they are laboring; and when we find a plethoric Treasury, overflowing with money (and we have no need of revenue for any purpose at all in excess of that we have got now), there can be no good reason, it seems to me, for changing the duties upon cotton-ties so as to make them 100 per cent. greater than they are at present under the act of 1883.

I could proceed in this direction and suggest a number of things, and perhaps before this bill is disposed of these suggestions will be made either by myself or by my colleagues on this side of the Chamber, in which relief can be given to the cotton-growers by modifications of the tariff bill as reported by the majority of the Senate Committee on Finance. For the purpose of justifying in a general way that movement on our part, I took occasion to allude to this as an American crop, as an American monopoly, and as one of the most efficient of all the commercial agencies through which we make exchanges with foreign countries.

It comes nearer being money than any other crop that can be named. Like money, it will keep in spite of weather, heat or cold, in a state of good preservation for years and years. It is always ready when the spinner desires to spin it. So if we have a large excess of cotton in the United States and have the ability to hold it, we could command for it our prices or hold it two and three and four years and make excellent interest upon the investment. That is done very frequently by planters who are forehanded, and that is a method of economy in the use of our resources which, I think, I might very well commend to the intelligence as well as the patriotism of this honorable body. Our people should be enabled to do this by every just measure of legislation that we could devise under the Constitution.

As to its being an American monopoly, there is another fact necessary to be stated in respect of it. I mentioned a while ago the efforts that had been made during our war for the production of cotton by England, by France, by Germany, and I might have included Brazil. Those governments laid themselves out with all the powers that they possessed to grow cotton during the four years' period of our war. Four years is long enough to establish a cotton farm. You have no preparation to make for it, except to bed up your ground and sow your seed and go to cultivating it at the proper season of the year. They had four seasons of experiment there, and what was the result? Great Britain made 500,000 bales of cotton in India, and what next? In making 500,000 bales of cotton she brought on a provision famine in India that was the most excruciating and horrible that history contained any account of. In Egypt the government raised 225,000 bales of cotton, and with the very same effect. Starving laborers in Egypt, whose labor had been diverted from the production of grain crops to cotton, strewed the plains of the Nile with their dead bodies. How was it in Brazil? She made a similar effort and totally failed.

These failures occurred on the part of these great governments when they were deprived of this necessary element of manufacture, of art, of civilization, and of human comfort. Those governments devoted all of their powerful energies to the production of cotton, and in the example which they set through their labors on that occasion they demonstrated beyond question that the United States of America has got the monopoly of the cotton growing of this world; and, quoting as I do from the opinions of men who are more able and experienced than myself, these facts relating to our physical geography and their concurring effect, I believe that I have succeeded in demonstrating before the Senate to-day that this monopoly of the cotton growth in the United States is one upon which we can calculate with absolute certainty. It is, therefore, a feature of our continent, a feature of our Government, a feature of our civilization, in which men from the North ought to feel as much interest as men from the South.

But I protest that there is no industry in this land that is loaded as the cotton industry is with taxation. My estimate is that the people of my State, including a tax of 5 mills levied by the State and not exceeding 2½ mills levied by the county, and including the taxes of the municipalities, pay a tax annually of $11,500,000. A million and a half of people make the average per capita tax in the State of Alabama something like $7.50. That, sir, is an enormous burden upon any people. It certainly is an enormous burden on a people who are confined by the laws of the climate to the production of one leading crop.

It has been suggested, yes urged, on the floor of the Senate, as it has been suggested and urged through the newspapers in the South, and through the writers in periodical magazines, that the people of the South, in order to get rid of this trouble of low prices imposed in foreign markets, ought to shorten the production of cotton. Mr. President, it is an argument against humanity to speak of shortening up that which no man can do without. The same argument would apply with equal force to the shortening of the wheat crop in the Northern States because of its price abroad, and those men have to toil for it in cold and in heat for the low price of 50 or 60 cents a bushel at their granaries. Statesmanship forbids the suggestion that any agricultural people, or, indeed, any manufacturing, or any fishing people, should shorten up their productions, relax their energies, cut down the amount of human food or clothing that they produce, in order to starve the generations of this earth who do not happen to be of our family, or upon our continent, into the payment of higher prices to us for our labor.

The remedy, Mr. President, is not in the direction of shortening up the crop. That is a remedy that the people of the United States will not accept in respect of any of their industries, whether they are manufacturing or agricultural, or even the industry of timber cutting and timber preparation for market and common use. That argument is opposed to the genius of the American people. While you may make it persuasive and logical upon paper, you can not get anybody to adopt it, or to follow it. The most strenuous exertions will be put forward in every department of human industry in the United States and by every industrious man in this country to produce all that he can out of his daily or his yearly work, and it is not the part of good statesmanship to undertake to check or restrain them in their endeavors to multiply or to increase in this respect.

What, then, is the remedy? It is to take from them burdens, to lift off of them the burdens that are unnecessary, so as to make their industry more profitable and more useful to mankind; and inasmuch as I have suggested, and I hope Senators will reflect upon it, that no man on this floor can put into this tariff bill a single feature of protection in favor of the cotton-planter, I think I have the right, in the name of the American people, and of this great American industry, too, to ask that you will lift the burdens off of it whenever you can do so without damage to the revenues and the Treasury of the United States; and when you have a full and an overflowing Treasury it seems to me it is the right time to take off taxes.

The particular tax in question upon cotton-ties has still another peculiarity, and one that to my mind is quite disagreeable. It has been said here that the iron-makers and iron-manufacturers at Birmingham can supply the raw material cheaper than it can be supplied anywhere else in the United States. There is no doubt about that, and I will add that they can supply better raw material of hematite iron than any other part of the United States. They can not supply a pound of steel under any process of manufacture that is now known at the rates of cost which prevail among our more fortunate producers of steel in the States nearer to Lake Champlain and Lake Superior; but in hematite iron they can make it cheaper than you can make it, of the same quality, at the Cleveland district in England. They can make it cheaper than you can make it in any district in the United States, whether it is charcoal iron or whether it is coke iron. These facts are established beyond dispute and are irreversible.

I am very happy and proud for our whole country that Senators burden their speeches with these new but very important facts. God has blessed Alabama with these benefactions in such degree of bounty that we have no need to rob any other people to enable us to use them.

Now we come to the proposition, why is it that we shall not stimulate our iron-men in Alabama so as to enable them to make our hoop-iron to tie our cotton bales in the neighborhood of these cotton plantations? First of all, they do not need the stimulus. When I find two classes of people in my State, one prospering and the other continually going down, one earning money through tariffs or independently of tariffs and the other losing money continually by the drainage of tariffs, it occurs to me that it is my duty as a legislator, first, to try to relieve those who are in distress. I should first try to build up those industries that need my help before I try to make men richer upon whom God has conferred benefactions of such an extraordinary character that they can get rich in spite of North or South or East or West, Pennsylvania or England.

That is the situation of the iron industry in Alabama. We have there limitless fields of the most superior quality of coking coals. They are accessible by the easiest of engineering to the introduction of railways. They lie hugged in the embrace of great river systems. It is but a short distance to the Mississippi, the Tennessee River skirting the northern boundary of the iron-fields and coal-fields, and the Alabama River skirting the eastern boundary; and the Coosa River, now soon to be opened; the Warrior River, opening right through the heart of the great region. The descending grade for railways from every iron and coal field in the whole of Alabama to the South Atlantic and to the Gulf makes the transportation of our productions to the seaboard a bagatelle compared to the cost of bringing iron ores from Lake Superior, and breaking bulk at Cleveland, and hauling them across the Alleghanies to Johnstown.

These are a few, and only a few, of the reasons which sustain the inevitable fact that Alabama has got the superiority in power of iron production, and can produce hematite iron cheaper than it can be produced in any other part of this world. It is the coal-fields that do it, with fringes of iron ore that lie clear around the coal-fields. These coal-fields, like those in Wales, draw to them the ores to be melted, and would bring them much greater distances.

It is the case in Alabama just as it is in Johnstown, Pa. If our ores, instead of being in absolute juxtaposition with the coal itself, so that a twenty-minutes' haul will bring the material together, were as widely separated as Johnstown is from Duluth, at the western border of Lake Superior, you would still find these ores would be dug out of the earth and would find their way by railways and canals and rivers to this remarkable coal-field in the center of Alabama.

The iron-men of Alabama, thus blessed with these natural facilities, can stand in defiance of tariff legislation and grow rich. They do not need it; not many of them ask it. Nature has put them upon ground where tariffs only create competition with them in the Northern States of this country instead of taking out of competition with them the English iron producer, who can not, after all, come to our country with his pig-metal with any success.

Therefore, when we come to think of what may be done in the way of tariff protection to the iron manufacturers at Birmingham in the matter of making hoop-iron for the binding of cotton-bales, I can find ample reason for voting to take off this tribute levied by the law upon the cotton-planter, and which he is bound to throw away under the rules of trade, without doing the slightest harm to the iron industry of my State. Our interests are mutually dependent, and "live and let live" is our just maxim.

There was a time when iron cotton-ties were made in Alabama, and it was a very good article indeed, a better article than I have ever seen made and brought from Pennsylvania or from England. Why is that trade not there now? The Senator from Rhode Island suggested that it was because of a decision of the Secretary of the Treasury upon the act of 1878, I believe. What act was it under?

Mr. ALDRICH. Under the act of 1864.

Mr. MORGAN. That decision so changed the rate of duty in respect of lengths of iron cut for cotton-ties that it was thrown down to 35 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. President, there ought to be sincerity in all things. If you can not make cotton-ties in Alabama for a duty of 35 per cent., why is it that in this tariff measure reported by the Committee on Finance we find a number of duties levied upon iron production in the United States and iron manufacturers in the United States that sink far below 35 per cent.? Why is it that you can not make a cotton-tie with 35 per cent. duty when you can make numbers of the articles in this very bill at lower rate ad valorem than 35 per cent.?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are those articles?

Mr. MORGAN. I shall have to get a paper and read them to the Senator. I did not intend to be very specific about it, but I will call them out to the Senator. There is a table that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is not perfectly convenient to the Senator, I will waive the inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. It would be very inconvenient at this moment. There are a number of articles in the bill of iron manufacture which fall below 35 per cent. ad valorem.

The difference between the tariff of 1864 and the tariff of 1883 upon cotton-ties was a very small difference, perhaps not more than 2 or 3 per cent. The duty under the act of 1864, continued in the act of 1883, was 35 per cent. ad valorem. I think it was one and six-tenths of a cent per pound. Cotton-ties were made between 1864 and 1883 in Alabama, and they were largely made there. There was at one time at a little town called Helena, in Alabama, under the charge of Mr. Pell, a cotton-tie-rolling mill. He started off with bright prospects of success, and distributed his ties about in Mobile, Montgomery, Selma, Rome, Georgia, and at Atlanta and other commercial points in reach of a man with small capital, and he sold them with great facility.

At that time, however, there was a patent on the buckle, and he was compelled either to invent a buckle of his own or resort to this other buckle. The name of it I forget, but it is very common among our people in the South; I ought to remember it. So his partner, who was afterward governor of Alabama, invented a buckle and got a patent for it. He put it on his tie and felt that he was out of the woods; he thought that the buckle monopoly which had found its way into the hands of a Pittsburgh firm could not any longer overpower his little rolling-mill at Helena. At that time every cotton-tie in the United States was made in Pittsburgh and made by one company, except those made by Mr. Pell.

When Mr. Pell's partner came out with his patent, putting his buckle on his own cotton-tie and selling it in the marts that I have mentioned, this Pittsburgh company went to these respective places, and with their superior capital they put their cotton-ties on the market at a rate that Mr. Pell could not afford to sell them for, and they held them there, and literally choked his enterprise to death. It was not exactly a trust, but a corporation that had monopolized, through its industry and enterprise in the use of this patented buckle, the sale of all the cotton-ties in the country. Mr. Pell found that he could not possibly compete with them, and he had to close up his works, very much to the regret of the people of Alabama and of the South generally.

So they got the entire control of the market. Then they concluded, under this tariff of 35 per cent. ad valorem, that they could make their ties cheaper in England than they could make them in the United States. Why was that? It was because they could go to England and buy scrap-iron cheaply—these very ties that the planters have got to pay for and pay a duty upon and throw away. A piece of scrap-iron of this kind worked over and over again gets better every time it is worked; it gets purer and stronger. So this monopoly of the cotton-tie business transferred its work from Pittsburgh to some point in England, and is there now, as I am informed, manufacturing all the cotton-ties that are used in the United States.

The inducement to go there was simply cheap scrap-iron that the planter had paid the duty upon—paid for time and again every succeeding year, and had to throw away. They have the monopoly of the market; they have capital; they have the power over us. They have more money now than any four manufacturers in Birmingham. If you should establish a cotton-tie factory in the city of Birmingham or in that vicinity these men would have nothing to do but to transfer their business back to the same locality and hold it in spite of the men of weaker capital.

This is a mere illustration of the fact that these men, who are largely capitalized in every manufacturing industry, as they are in many of the Northern States, who have long runs of trade, who have their trade established in various parts of the world, extending not merely through the United States but to foreign countries, can come and sit down by the side of a newly-formed company and prevent them from manufacturing; and they do it every day.

The condition of the tariff laws of the United States is such as to invite capital to go into manufacturing as a mere speculation. Take a man who has $500,000 in money; and who has not got it in the Northern States? A man is scarcely respectable there who has not that much money. A man who has $500,000 of money that he desires to invest in any form of manufacture gets up an incorporated company, makes his sons and his sons-in-law vice-presidents and secretaries and treasurers, and pays to each of them a large salary. He provides for the friends of the chief stockholders, if there are more than one in the establishment. They enter upon the business of manufacturing cotton goods. They go to Columbus, Ga., or to Savannah, or to Augusta, or to Birmingham in Alabama, and there they locate their establishment. They have $500,000 of clear capital accumulated, and they are amateur investors; they are investors on speculation. They hire a man who is skilled in spinning and a man who is skilled in weaving and in sizing and in coloring and in all the various branches of cotton-goods manufacture. They put those men as bosses, as managers, in the establishment. They employ skilled workmen, men who have been compelled to acquire their skill from the stress of necessity, who have had to spend their childhood, when they ought to have been at school or in their mothers' laps, from ten years old upward, in acquiring their profession, in learning how to handle machinery, how to spin yarn, how to weave cloth, and how to dye it.

This capitalist aggregates these people in this employment, and when another man who may be himself a spinner or a weaver and who may have $20,000 or $30,000 of money at his command desires to put up a little factory in which he can employ his own family and his neighbors, he finds this mammoth capitalist at his side ready to choke him to death, as this Pittsburgh Cotton-Tie Company choked Pell to death in his little enterprise in Alabama. The common laboring people, no matter what may be their skill, their industry, their virtues, or their necessities, are compelled to bow before the power of capital. It is concentrated, and they have no more chance for their lives than a man would have to breathe in an exhausted receiver.

See how it was in the cotton-seed-oil business in Alabama. A company that had never, perhaps, had a bushel of cotton-seed in ownership in the world, and knew nothing about the growth of cotton or cotton-seed or the manufacture of oil, organized themselves in the city of New York with a capital of $30,000,000, it is said. If they did not have the money they had the credit to make it appear that they had the money and to make it equally available to them. They went around among the cotton-seed-oil factories in the South, and they said to them, "Come into this syndicate, here is stock, stock representing $30,000,000, appraise your establishment, and take stock for it, and come into the general combine;" and they were obliged to do it.

How were they obliged to do it? I will tell you. There was a gentleman of my acquaintance in the city of Montgomery. He had been a Confederate soldier, and like all the rest of us he came out of the war stripped of everything on earth but what the God of nature had given him. He was an industrious, honest, and an honorable gentleman. He was skillful and ingenious. That man went industriously to work and built him up a cotton-seed-oil manufactory. It was a small establishment. His friends loaned him money and perhaps he put $20,000 or $25,000 into it. He went to Genoa and had an understanding with the Genoese merchants that he would sell them cotton-seed-oil at $10 a barrel, 30 gallons each.

He came home and manufactured his cotton-seed oil, and put ten thousand barrels on the train at Montgomery and sent it to Savannah, and there it was put upon a steamer for New York. When the steamer reached New York the cotton-seed trust put ten thousand barrels upon the same ship destined for the same port, and when the man got to Genoa with his oil he was there met with a competitor who had just the same oil that he had and in the same quantity and who offered it upon that market at $9 a barrel instead of $10. All of his profit was in the tenth dollar. He found that it was impossible for him to compete with them. The consequence was that he sold out his oil at a loss of $10,000, and came back home and sold his cotton-seed-oil factory into the hands of the trust.

There are two examples in my own State of the power of capital when it is invested in large masses in manufactures of any kind. In anything that can be handled with machinery and skilled labor they are omnipotent. They meet together, they combine their powers together, and they choke to death any industry that may attempt to rise in their midst. There is not to-day, I dare say, a single establishment in the Northern States where a leading manufactory in wool, or iron, or cotton, or silk, or jute is not capitalized at a sum in excess of $100,000.

The skilled man, it makes no difference what his skill may be, the industrious man, it makes no difference how industrious he may be, is obliged to become a hireling to capital before he can find the opportunity of exerting his skill or his industry. I do not know that we can remedy this condition of affairs. It may have gone too far to remedy it, but if we could diversify the manufacturing industries of this country into a larger number of hands, and if we could free it from the predominance of these awful sums of capital that crush and destroy the vitality of every manufacturing man in the United States, we should be in a much better condition.

Sir, if you take off the tariff, or reduce it, upon cotton-spinning machinery so that the planters in the South with the investment of $20,000 and $25,000 and the work of their own families and their friends of the immediate neighborhood can enter upon the manufacture of cotton goods, you will find that almost every bale of cotton that leaves the South will leave it in the form of yarn instead of the form of lint.

So I plead and I beseech the Senate that, in respect of this great American industry, they will not impose higher burdens upon it than now exist, but that they will turn their faces in a different direction and will reduce the burdens that are now upon it. Here is a bill that raises the tariff upon cotton-ties we have to throw away after we have paid for them, 100 per cent. I will not now discuss the bagging business. That doubtless will engage the attention of many Senators on this side of the Chamber, but I have shown you now why it is that this cotton-tie production has been transferred from this country to Great Britain, and this tax of 100 per cent. upon it is not for the advantage of any man in the United States.

The admission of cotton-ties free of duty is no discrimination against any American manufacturer, because it is confessed on all sides in this Chamber that not one pound of cotton-tie is manufactured in the United States. I will not follow the Senators at this time in their broad statements of what they would do if they had the power in regard to the enactment of tariff laws, or as to the principles upon which they would act in their enactment.

I noticed a very remarkable declaration made yesterday by the honorable Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who I believe is recognized in the Senate as being one of its leading lights on the Republican side, certainly a man of longer Senatorial experience than almost any one here. He announced, with a boldness that I thought was not only characteristic of him but admirable, his belief in the views he has on the subject of the tariff, in which, however, while he disclaims that his party goes quite as far as he does, I think the honorable Senator is quite mistaken, for I believe that the doctrine stated by him is at the foundation of every vote that is given by the majority on this tariff bill in the Senate. I will read what the Senator from Nevada said:

> I think this is a pretty good bill, but it does not come quite up to my theory of a protective tariff. I believe that the tariff upon everything that can be produced in this country with ample competition should be practically prohibitory, and let none but the rich enjoy luxuries from abroad, provided there can be fair competition among producers in this country.

It has been my fate to be cast among the poor men of this country all my life, and yet I have not lost my desire for luxurious living. I would adopt a policy, if I had the power, quite the reverse of that of the Senator from Nevada. I would put it in the reach of every young man and every young woman in this country to wear not merely respectable clothing, but fine clothing, if their tastes demanded it.

I would put the dainties, and the luxuries of life, even, within the reach of these people if I could do it without giving too much encouragement to laziness and to the pets and favorites of fortune. I do not believe in that doctrine which shuts off an American from any possibility, whether in food, or clothing, or education, or official power, that may be put within his reach. I believe that an American citizen is entitled to the benefits of the laws of this country and entitled to encouragement in trying to raise his condition every time that the opportunity is presented.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. I am answering one now the Senator has asked, and I do not know that I can undertake the task of answering any more.

Mr. STEWART. I should be much gratified if the Senator would yield.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator what benefit it would be to the laboring class in this country to have the privilege of buying luxuries abroad if they had no employment here and no money to buy them with, as would be the condition under free trade?

Mr. MORGAN. If we keep on taxing them they will always be in that condition. There is no poor man in this country who can rise out of the rut if you do not take the tax off him to some extent and let him have a chance. The honorable Senator himself, I think, was once a laborer, if I have heard his history correctly stated, and it is one of the most admirable points in his history, the earlier part of his life was spent among the industrial people of this country and he had hard labor to perform. Now behold him in his majesty here, looking like the Sierra Nevadas, on which he lives, in their grandeur, and as prominent in the Senate as the Sierra Nevadas are with their snow-capped tops in the geography of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. It is entirely owing to a protective tariff by which I could get wages enough to start on.

Mr. MORGAN. Behold that Senator now come up to the full enjoyment of the luxuries of life, and behold the magnificent palace with which he has decorated this beautiful city. His fortune has not been perhaps all of it the work of his own hands; he may have profited by tariffs or some other matter; he may have had luck in mining or something of that kind; but I should like to see every American citizen enjoy as fully as the Senator from Nevada does all the luxuries and the splendors of life, and there are millions in this country who are just as well entitled to it as he is or as I am.

I do not believe in this doctrine of taxing a man to make him rich. My opinion of the American character and the American people is that if you will allow them the free and untrammeled enjoyment of the resources of their own genius and the fruits of their own labor they will rise into riches and power and prosperity; and if any are left behind it will be only those who will deserve it.

I believe, Mr. President—and I take occasion here to announce it—in a government that is not rich. I believe in a people who are rich. I believe in keeping the Government of the United States down to its necessary expenditures, and I think that those expenditures ought to be considered with great care in reference to economy. I do not believe that it is right to tax any man to enrich another. I believe that the only legitimate use of the taxing power is to support the Government, economically administered, and not to build up a favored class in this country, or favored classes, at the expense of the toiling millions.

Those are the views that guide me in respect of general legislation upon the tariff subject. I believe that there are no classes in the United States to-day who are so borne down with the oppressions of taxation as the agricultural classes, whether cotton-growers, wheat-growers, or the growers of any other kind of American production. There are 17,000,000 people engaged in this pursuit against about 5,000,000 engaged in manufactures; and yet we find that princely fortunes are made by men who control manufactures. They grow rich in a year. Men spring up into enormous fortunes aggregating $20,000,000 and $30,000,000, who perhaps when they first set foot upon this soil only had a small handkerchief full of clothes and a staff to bear them about upon their shoulders. I do not object to this when it is fairly done; but when I come to count up the number of men that it has taken at a dollar a day to work out these profits in favor of these favored pets of your tariff system, I find that a fortune of $30,000,000 thus accumulated has cost 30,000,000 men a hard day's work.

I believe in that sort of legislation which understands and respects the labor that it costs a poor man to earn a dollar. The men who understand that, the people who understand and feel it, will not be lavish in expenditures and will not attempt to persuade the poor man that they are conferring untold blessings upon him when they are taxing him for the purpose of furnishing him a market, as it is called, or for the purpose of making somebody else rich. Neither will he believe it when he comes to pay for his goods that his family uses, the sugar that they consume, the iron that they must use in their agriculture, the steel implements and all else, even to the school-books with which he educates his children. It is hard to make him believe that if a book costs 75 cents, which, without the tariff, would only cost 50 cents, that that extra quarter of a dollar is paid by somebody that prints it across the water. There is too much nice philosophy in that to bear the test of common sense.

These people, whatever they may have done in the past, are now on the march with a bold and defiant front, and they will continue it until they have compelled the Senate and the House of Representatives and the President of the United States to come down to a just basis of taxation and relieve them from some of the burdens that are loaded upon them so enormously.

I wish in this connection to call attention to a fact, and that is the amount of mortgages that, as is stated, are upon the lands of the people of the Northwest. Before doing that, however, I desire to say that the capitalists in the Northern States, while the carpet-baggers were in force in the South and had the authority over us, were afraid to invest their money upon mortgages in our Southern lands. The result is that there are not many mortgages held in the Northern States upon Southern lands. Nevertheless, they are being mortgaged rapidly and at a terribly usurious rate of interest. Where does the money come from? Who are the mortgagees? The British people. The British capitalists are swarming the South with their money. You can not go to a considerable village in a Southern State to-day but you will find the authorized agents of British capital there loaning money to the people at from 12 to 25 per cent. per annum and taking mortgages for it.

Why are the agriculturists who produce three hundred and odd millions of money a year, and throw it into the exchanges of this country, so crippled and borne down that they are compelled to resort to the same plan that your agriculturists in the North were, to load their estates with mortgages at usurious rates of interest? The Northeastern people, from New York and the East mainly, own the mortgages upon the Northwest, but the British people own the mortgages upon us, and it is getting to be an evil of such dimensions as that the thoughtful men of the South are beginning to inquire whether, after awhile, the British people are not going to dispossess them of their homes, and introduce immigrants from their own country to take possession of these lands.

You find some objections stated occasionally to British immigration into the Southern States, and this is what it means. The people of the South are afraid that their lands are going to be taken from under their feet in virtue of these mortgages by foreclosures, and that the occupants of the land hereafter will be the tenantry of the British landlords. There may come a time even in the South when landlordism will dominate the Southern States and come from England, as landlordism now dominates Ireland and comes from England.

What has been the effect upon your agriculture? It is stated in a speech made in the House of Representatives by Hon. RICHARD P. BLAND, of Missouri, that in Ohio the mortgages amount to $701,000,000, in Indiana to $398,000,000, in Illinois to $920,000,000, in Wisconsin to $250,000,000, in Michigan to $350,000,000, in Minnesota to $175,000,000, in Iowa to $351,000,000, in Kansas to $200,000,000, and in Missouri to $237,000,000. That statement was denied in the House by Mr. BROWNE, from the State of Indiana; and the following is the remark of Mr. BLAND upon this objection being interposed:

Admitting the lowest estimate to be the most correct, it is simply appalling.

This is the estimate of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana: Ohio, $350,000,000; Indiana, $175,000,000; Illinois, $200,000,000; Wisconsin, $100,000,000; Michigan, $125,000,000; Minnesota, $70,000,000; Iowa, $100,000,000; Nebraska, $50,000,000; Kansas, $50,000,000; Missouri, $100,000,000; in all, $1,295,000,000 of mortgage money upon their lands. Mr. BLAND'S statement was $3,422,000,000.

Take it either way; put the figures down just as low as you can get them, and yet the startling fact comes to the attention of the people of the United States that the agricultural industry of this country, for some cause or other, has been compelled to go deeply in debt, to mortgage the very firesides of the farmers, in order to get money to conduct their operations.

What have these farmers been doing? Speculating in tariff profits? No. Where is the bounty that you have conferred upon them in any particular? Not one stiver out of all the thousands of millions of bounty that have been extracted by the tariff from one class of people and paid to another. You have been putting these people under the leech system of extracting the blood from them continually and precipitating them into the hands of these men, who, after the capital has been accumulated, are able to lend the money upon these mortgages to the people out of whom it has been taxed.

That exhibit shows in the Northwest precisely what is taking place in the South now. Those men who are enabled to accumulate enormous masses of capital from the tariff system and through the financial system of the United States and of England, through commerce, as it is called, have the power to lend money to these men at enormous rates of interest, which they are compelled to mortgage their estates to pay; and I dare say that these mortgages are not being cleared up. A friend called my attention to a humorous remark made by the editor of a Chicago paper the other day, in which there were a large number of foreclosures advertised. The remark was: "These homes will all be bought in the home market." Yes, they will be bought in the "home market." The farmer's home at last finds a home market, and his family the wilderness.

This exhibit shows that the agricultural industries of the United States are under foot and are being trampled out by the money power. The only chance we have to give them relief, as I have frequently remarked since I have had the honor of taking the floor, is to lift the burdens. If some Senator will devise a scheme by which the agriculturist is to receive out of taxation his part of the protection that is prated about on that side of the Chamber, then I shall be prepared for a new experience in life. As I see it, there is not a man on this earth who can devise a principle of tariff taxation or put an amendment in this bill which will relieve the agriculturists of this country to the extent of one cent otherwise than by lifting burdens off of them.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am in favor of low taxation instead of high. We have an abundant and overflowing Treasury. We have there a fund which stands in that Treasury as a temptation to constant corruption, as an inducement to constant raids, and the sooner we make up our minds to allow the people who earn this money to keep it in their own pockets the sooner we will do justice to ourselves and our constituency.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is a point of view in which this duty upon cotton-ties in relation to cotton has not yet been alluded to which I think worthy of consideration.

The Constitution of the United States prohibits the levying by Congress of any tax upon exports, and it contains a further provision prohibiting the States from levying a tax upon exports. I think it is a proposition which will be conceded by all persons that a tax or duty that is collected exclusively from exports or in chief part from exports to that extent is within the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution.

This subject is not now brought in connection with the tax bill before the Congress of the United States, but has had in the legislation of the States and of Congress consideration before the Supreme Court of the United States. In the case of Almy vs. The State of California, in the year 1860, Chief-Justice Taney decided that a tax imposed by the State of California upon a bill of lading of gold was within the constitutional inhibition upon that subject, and he used this language:

So in the case before us. If the tax was laid on the gold or silver exported, every one would see that it was repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, which in express terms declares that "no State shall without the consent of Congress lay any imposts or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws."

But a tax or duty on a bill of lading, although differing in form from a duty on the article shipped, is in substance the same thing; for a bill of lading, or some written instrument of the same import, is necessarily always associated with every shipment of articles of commerce from the ports of one country to those of another. The necessities of commerce require it. And it is hardly less necessary to the existence of such commerce than casks to cover tobacco, or bagging to cover cotton, when such articles are exported to a foreign country; for no one would put his property in the hands of a ship-master without taking written evidence of its receipt on board the vessel, and the purposes for which it was placed in his hands. The merchant could not send an agent with every vessel, to inform the consignee of the cargo what articles he had shipped, and prove the contract of the master if he failed to deliver them in safety. A bill of lading, therefore, or some equivalent instrument of writing, is invariably associated with every cargo of merchandise exported to a foreign country, and consequently a duty upon that is, in substance and effect, a duty on the article exported. And if the law of California is constitutional, then every cargo of every description exported from the United States may be made to pay an export duty to the State, provided the tax is imposed in the form of a tax on the bill of lading, and this in direct opposition to the plain and express prohibition in the Constitution of the United States.

I also cite the following authorities bearing on this subject:

The prohibition in both cases has reference to the imposition of duties on goods by reason or because of their exportation or intended exportation, or whilst they are being exported. That would be laying a tax or duty on exports, or on articles exported, within the meaning of the Constitution.—U. S. Reports, 507.

And so we think they continue to be until they have entered upon their final journey for leaving the State and going into another State. It is true it was said in the case of the Daniel Ball, 10 Wall., 557, 565, "whenever a commodity has begun to move as an article of trade from one State to another, commerce in that commodity has commenced." But this movement does not begin until the articles have been shipped or started for transportation from the one State to the other.—U. S. Reports, page 528.

The plaintiff contends that the charge for the stamps required to be placed on packages of manufactured tobacco intended for exportation was and is a duty on exports within the meaning of that clause in the Constitution of the United States which declares that "no tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State." But it is manifest that such was not its character or object. The stamp was intended for no other purpose than to separate and identify the tobacco which the manufacturer desired to export, and thereby, instead of taxing it, to relieve it from the taxation to which other tobacco was subjected. It was a means devised to prevent fraud and secure the faithful carrying out of the declared intent with regard to the tobacco so marked. The payment of 25 cents or of 10 cents for the stamp used was no more a tax on the export than was the fee for clearing the vessel in which it was transported, or for making out and certifying the manifest of the cargo.

* * * * * * *

The point to guard against is the imposition of a duty under the pretext of fixing a fee. In the case under consideration, having due regard to that latitude of discretion which the Legislature is entitled to exercise in the selection of the means for attaining a constitutional object, we can not say that the charge imposed is excessive, or that it amounts to an infringement of the constitutional provision referred to. We can not say that it is a tax or duty instead of what it purports to be, a fee or charge for the employment of that instrumentality which the circumstances of the case render necessary for the protection of the Government.—2 Otto, pages 374, 375, and 376.

The construction of this clause, when the power has been directly exercised by the Congress of the United States, by the Supreme Court, Justice Bradley rendering the opinion, although deciding that in the case of tobacco a stamp affixed by the act of Congress upon the tobacco for export was not within the inhibition of the Constitution, because it was a regulation to distinguish the tobacco while in process of exportation, recognized, however, the proposition that a direct tax, a tax upon something invariably associated with the article exported in the act of exportation, would be within the spirit as well as the letter of the Constitution.

Mr. President, it is entirely clear that the article exported is a different thing from that attachment to it or that subject of taxation associated with it which may be necessary for its exportation, and while, therefore, practically, it may not be within the letter of the Constitution, yet it is equally true that if the policy of the Government as provided in its constitutional and organic law be to relieve exportations to foreign countries from taxation and to prohibit the levying of a duty or a tax upon them, then whatever article is the subject of exportation to a foreign country, and whatever article connected with it and necessary in that exportation, ought to be free from any tax or duty or imposition of any kind.

How can you distinguish if the thing taxed in connection with the export is used for that purpose and that purpose only? Where is the distinction? Although it be made out of iron, and although it may be used for some other purpose, yet in its use in connection with this exportation how can you justly distinguish a tax of export, as was done in the case in California by an attempt to tax the bill of lading by taxing the export, by levying a duty upon the imported article imported for the purpose and with the effect and for the use of the exportation of this article alone?

It seems entirely clear to me that the encouragement of exports is not only a constitutional and an organic policy, but is a wise policy on the part of this Government. It has no connection with this question of protection or the contrary, but is connected exclusively with that proposition.

